"During the progress of the construction of the reservoirs for the enlargement of the London water-supply, a splendid specimen of an ancient ship," says the "Scientific American," "has been discovered in the bed of the old River Lea, the course of which has been diverted in order to permit the excavations. The vessel was found at a depth of seven feet below the surface. It is about 50 feet long and is constructed of oak throughout, with the exception of the keel, which is of elm. The ribs of the boat are secured to the sides by treenails, while the timbers are secured with crude and primitive, though well-made, iron nails. The floor-boards are also fastened together with nails and the calking is done with felt. Many antiquarians, who have examined the relic, think that it constitutes a part of the fleet with which King Alfred the Great fought against the Danes. Another curious dugout boat, estimated to be about 2,500 years old, was also unearthed and is to be deposited in the British Museum.

Unconditional Surrender.

Wanted—A girl for general housework; union or non-union; any old kind; family of three adults and three children with nurse, and occupy small house at Sheridan Park, two blocks from N.W. Elevated; nice, large, airy room, with south-west breeze for girl; no washing or much of anything else to do; our girl quit yesterday because we invited some relatives to help us celebrate the Fourth; next Fourth, if the girl demands it, we will dispose our relatives and renounce our country; wages, five dollars.

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

THE MYSTERY OF BHOTAN.

A Weird Tale From The East.

PHIL and I were going to India, that far-away land of which so much has been written. We had talked the matter over for many a year, and now our hopes were about to be realized, as in a few days we were to set sail for the enchanted realms of the Orient. Phil was a companionable fellow—fearless, yet withal gentle and lovable. His equal could not be found in a week's march.

The object in view in taking this long journey was to personally study the habits of that peculiar and ancient race—the Hindus—and to gather specimens of fauna and flora which we, as scientific men, so much desired to add to our respective fine collections already gathered together from different sections of our own America and Europe.

Our trip across the Atlantic was uneventful. We reached Calcutta in due time without mishap. We first sought out one of those necessities to travelers in a strange land, a guide. A couple of onagers or burros were also secured, and on the third day after our arrival we were ready to proceed inland. We laid our route to the northward, through the Bengali district, whence we would proceed to the mountains of the Himalaya range and spend most of our time in and around Bhotan.

We journeyed leisurely and found much that interested us. We had been fortunate in securing for our guide a native who was thoroughly acquainted with the territory through which we desired to go. He and Phil became fast friends.

We had a very successful trip without incident until we neared the borders of Bhotan, some three hundred miles distant from Calcutta. Here Poonjah confessed that he did not care to go further toward the north; said we could go to the east or to the west, or anywhere else, but not there. We coaxed, cajoled and entreated; but he stood firm. Finally, when pressed for his reasons for refusing to continue the trip into the territory which we had selected, he graphically portrayed to us by speech articulate and pantomimic that it was a land of evil spirits, and that the Bhotanese were sorcerers and in league with the demons of the air. If we insisted on going there we would take our lives in our own hands. Furthermore, he personally had been warned away from there several years ago, and was told that should he ever return anywhere within the borders of Bhotan his life would pay for his temerity; that he was a marked man, and though he should escape the watchful eyes of the people, he would still be in danger, for the spirits would seek him out and slay him.

The vivid portrayal of Poonjah's feelings and fears impressed us both deeply. But before us were the coveted prizes that this land held, and which we had come so far to secure. To retreat now before an imaginary foe was galling to our pride. We sympathized with our benighted guide, and we argued that he belonged to a superstitious race, and that if we could but prevail upon him to proceed with us all would be well, and we could later convince him of the folly of his fears.

As we were then in an interesting district we let the matter drop so far as Poonjah was concerned, but took it under advisement between ourselves for several days.

Our silence upon the subject had about convinced our faithful guide that we would not attempt to go further north, and he had in the meantime regained his usual happy demeanor and gentle composure.

One morning Phil suggested that we once more broach the subject to him. We could not then give up our further trip, and if our arguments with him should not prevail we would dismiss him to return to his own land, while we pushed on alone to the goal of our desires.

"Come here, Poonjah," said I, as he was passing near our tent. "We are about to take up our journey to the northward, with or without you, as you please. We have thoroughly discussed the situation, and while we deeply sympathize with you in your dread of this land, we cannot forego our trip in consequence of it. If you are afraid to continue we will go on alone, and you may receive your wage without us."

I had unwittingly struck the keynote to his pride. He listened to me in silence. When I had finished speaking he straightened up his lithe form, and in measured tones said:

"A Hindu is not a coward. Poonjah knows no fear for himself. He can but die. It is for you that he has feared and has dared to rebel. But as you are determined to go, Poonjah is but your slave and will go with you. May Buddha save you from all harm."

With a gracious salaam he quitted our presence.

This matter being settled, we set about preparing to take up our line of march, our destination being Tassgong, the principal village of Bhotan, where we hoped to be hospitably received by the natives.

At break of day the following morning we were astir. Poonjah had our burros ready, and not a line of fear or hesitation was visible upon his mobile countenance. In fact, he appeared more voluble and cheerful than usual, and he and Phil became more attached than ever.

Two days later we were upon the lofty table-land separating British India from Bhotan, and by another day we hoped to be in the latter country—the reputed land of evil spirits.

I must confess to a feeling akin to superstitious dread as the night closed around us, and for the first time my thoughts reverted seriously to the many rumors which I had heard and tales that I had read respecting the people with which we were to sojourn during the next few weeks.

"A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind." I could now more fully feel for Poonjah. He had been reared and educated in a land of darkness, superstition and occult mysteries. My training had been altogether in a different atmosphere, where superstition had no habitat, and wherein it would have been an evidence of ignorance and cowardice to have betrayed a semblance of dread of the supernatural. Yet here I found myself upon this borderland actually imbibing the fears of our benighted guide.

I mentioned not a word to either Phil or Poonjah that would betray to them my sensations; neither did I discover in either of the twain aught that would lead me to believe that they were at all worried over the prospect.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

That night I slept the sleep of the just, and it was broad daylight when I awoke. Poonjah and Phil had been astir long before me, and breakfast was already prepared.

I had become much attached to our Hindu guide; but between him and Phil a friendship had sprung up that was more than ordinary. The two were almost inseparable.

As I emerged from the tent I noticed them in animated conversation, which ended in a warm embrace as they saw me approaching. Phil afterward told me that his friend still had misgivings about the safety of the party, and they had mutually pledged eternal fealty come what would, but did not want to worry me about it.

We were on a peaceful errand and hoped it would have a peaceful ending, and if we should find the natives to be warlike or resentful at our approach we would try to win them over by kindness and a liberal distribution of small treasures among the chiefs.

Two days more and we had reached Tassgong. We were not molested on our way thither, but were eyed with much curiosity by all. We repaired first to the chief of the village and through our guide told him what we desired. We gave him several pieces of silver and gold, and we were taken into His Majesty's good graces at once. He tendered us the use of one of his bungalows, which was dry and comfortable, and, thanking him for his courtesy and generosity, we were shown to the place.

It was one of the typical bungalows of that section, only larger, and contained three rooms, with flooring and matting. It was elevated like others, as a protection against creeping and crawling things abounding in that country. It furthermore possessed doors, which could not be said of all structures used as habitations in Tassgong.

The chief gave orders among his people that we be not molested, and tendered us the freedom of the place.

We were all very weary and sought rest at an early hour that night. A large bed, well supplied with skins of wild beasts abounding in that region, lured us quickly to sleep. Phil and I occupied this bed, and Poonjah a smaller one in an adjoining room or alcove.

It seemed to me as though I had just closed my eyes in slumber when I awoke with a start, and instinctively felt the presence of another person in our room. The room was dark—very dark. I was spellbound. I could neither move nor speak. There was something or somebody moving stealthily along in front of our bed. A clamminess came over me that chilled me to the heart. I essayed to move or speak, but my limbs remained rigid and my tongue clove to the roof of my mouth. It was a sensation impossible for me to describe. An uncanny chilliness pervaded the room. The thing moved with a rustling sound that was bloodcurdling. I waited for a denouement which I felt must soon come. Whatever or whoever it was, it quickly withdrew, and I breathed freer. It had made the circuit of the room two or three times as though in search of something. When it finally departed it apparently vanished through the floor, for no door was open to allow of exit that way.

For a few moments I remained in a horrified state, but soon felt the return of my faculties and was about to waken my companion and tell him of my experience, when I felt him move, and, rising upon his elbow, he almost yelled:

"Professor, did you hear that?"

"Hear what?" I ejaculated, sleepily, as though just aroused from slumber and annoyed at being disturbed.

"There has been someone in this room, and now he has gone!"

"Nonsense!" I rejoined. "You are afraid of spirits and have had a bad dream. Lie down and go to sleep again."

But he would not have it so, and insisted that he had been fully awake. He then went on to relate in detail just what he had heard, and it agreed exactly with my experiences. We arose at once and lighted a taper, and began an exploration of the place. Not hearing a word from where Poonjah lay, we went there first. He was awake—his face distorted with agony. When at length our presence had somewhat reassured him, he repeated to us the same unearthly tale.

We searched the three rooms of the bungalow. There was no hole large enough for even a cat to crawl through. The doors were securely fastened as we had left them on retiring. Referring to our watches, we found that it was just past midnight.

Outside all was deathly still except for the distant laugh of a hyena or the howl of a jackal.

There was no more sleep for any of us the balance of the night, and we heartily welcomed the first glimmer of dawn.

We said nothing to anyone in the village about our experiences. We even dreaded to speak of them among ourselves.

We spent several days following with great profit and pleasure to ourselves. The venerable chief and his tribesmen were exceedingly friendly, and aided us greatly. Our fears had been by this time allayed, and we had attributed our unpleasant experience of the first night to overwrought imagination and the fatigue of a long tramp the day previous.

However, we never relaxed vigilance, and loaded pistols were kept under our pillows while we slept, we more than half believing that our nocturnal visitor might come again and prove himself to be real flesh and blood, in which case we would be able to successfully cope with the fellow.

But our troubles were not destined to end so happily as we had hoped. One night I was again awakened as suddenly as on the previous occasion, and there was no mistake about what I heard. There was that same dreadful, indescribable presence in the room. Strive as I might to move, I could not. It was as though I had been chained to the spot by the links of Prometheus. Phil was perfectly quiet, and silence reigned except for the beating of my heart and the swish, swish of garments as though trailed along. The [illegible] out in great [illegible] the bed. I [illegible] chill and terrible breath upon my cheek, and how I survived the ordeal and retained sanity I know not. When the Thing at last left us, it, as before, apparently disappeared through the floor.

Phil had heard it and was ready to assist again in the search. The hour was midnight. Poonjah, his eyes nearly bulging from their sockets, welcomed our presence and accompanied us in our search. But it was vain. No clue had been left behind, and we were more mystified than ever.

We could not bring ourselves to desert the bungalow while working in that district, and we were not yet through there. Besides, we could offer to the chief no reason for rejecting his hospitality while still remaining in his country. But we determined to leave just as soon as we could decently do so.

We remained there for two more weeks without further adventure worth speaking of, and had packed up our belongings, prepared to start on our southward journey the next morning.

Phil and Poonjah were in ecstasies. We had had a most successful trip, and we were returning freighted with precious treasures—some of them priceless. The chief was to give us safe conduct to the border, and we had much to be thankful for.

It was late that night when we retired, and we were not long awake after reaching our beds. It is a sleepy, drowsy climate, and we were never troubled with insomnia while there.

The bed which was occupied by Phil and me was placed against the inside partition and elevated some two feet from the floor. I usually slept on the front side of the bed, and did so in this instance.

My mind is perfectly clear as to my exact position. I went to sleep lying upon my right side, facing the room. When I awoke, shortly after, I was still in the same position. All my senses were alert. I felt that same horrible and gruesome presence again! It was near our bed and advancing toward us. On, on, nearer and nearer, slowly, like a cat upon its prey!

An unutterable sensation crept through my veins. I felt that something terrible was impending. What it could be I had not the slightest conception.

I would have given all my precious treasures could I at that moment have spoken or even moved. But my voice and limbs refused their offices, and I lay there as helpless as a child.

The strain was terrible. Had there been a visible enemy with whom to do battle it would have been different. But here in a strange land, said to be infested with evil spirits, and in the midst of a night whose darkness could be fairly felt, I was face to face with some intangible Thing that was advancing upon me unseen!

Suddenly it drew back slightly, and then, with a lunge forward, it appeared to strike a mighty blow at my sleeping companion.

With this movement came release for me, for I was no longer bound.

"Buddha! Phil! Buddha!" and he was then silent.

Phil rose up in the bed, screaming:

"My God, it has struck me!" and with a peculiar gurgle, as though being strangled, he fell back upon his pillow and uttered not another sound.

Quick as a flash I now rose up in the bed, only to come in contact with a form that appeared like a man's. I grappled with it, all fear having fled. I felt the strength of a Samson in my sinews. It was as real to me then as though I could see the intruder. Only one thought pervaded my mind—to capture this thing or die in the attempt.

My arms closed around it as firmly as would the coils of a python, and with a power born of desperation I brought them closer and closer, tighter and tighter. I could feel it in my grasp struggling to free itself, but it might as well have fought against the embrace of an octopus! I was getting the better of my unknown antagonist. My arms came together relentlessly, and before I could utter a word they cleaved the object in twain and came together, when I found in my arms—nothing!

I jumped from the bed more dead than alive. I cried aloud to Phil in my terror, and then to Poonjah. But no response came from either.

I struck a light as quickly as my nervelous condition would allow and looked around me. One glance at the spot where Phil lay told a tragic story. His features were distorted and livid, and it did not require a second look to convince me that he was dead.

I reached over and tenderly touched the tortured face, but there was no response. The vital spark had fled.

With a cry of despair I rushed to where our guide had slept, half-fearing that in some way he might have been responsible for this terrible and mysterious tragedy. But I had wronged the poor fellow. He, too, was beyond the power of man, and lay on his cot in his last, long sleep.

I looked at my watch, and it was just past midnight. I examined the bungalow carefully, but found all secure.

I now opened one of the doors. Outside the air seemed oppressive. My brain reeled, and I fell to the ground in merciful unconsciousness.

There are two lonely graves upon the hillside near Tassgong. A slab stands at the head of each. One was marked by me in English simply "Phil," the other, "Poonjah." But after my departure (which fact I learned from the missionary who had given them Christian burial) a cabalistic inscription was placed on each by some person unknown, which translated signifies, "The spirits are avenged!"

The Old Man's Occupation.

The old man of the following story lived, presumably, in England, since we copy his words from an English journal, but we are not quite sure that his counterpart might not be found on this side of the water.

"It's a queer world when you come to look it over," said the old man. "You know I eddicated Jim for a lawyer."

"Yes."

"An' Bill for a preacher."

"Exactly."

"An' Tom for one of them literary fellers."

"Yes."

"An' Dick for a doctor."

"Yes."

"Well, now, what do you reckon I'm a-doin' of?"

"Can't say."

"Well, sir, you might not believe it, but I'm a-supportin' of Jim an' Bill an' Tom an' Dick, an' it keeps me a-goin' from daylight to dark."

Some Hints For the Bride to Be.

NOW that the season of summer weddings is over, brides all over the country have leisure in which to contemplate. Among their many contemplations are those which pertain to the acknowledgment of wedding gifts. To acknowledge the receipt of one hundred and fifty presents, to thank the donor of each in a way that carries proof of life-long gratitude with it, and to find one hundred and fifty different styles of expressing the same sentiment can not be classed with the easy tasks of earth. Unless she was party to an elopement, no bride ever lived in modern times who did not experience during the last quarter of her honeymoon the difficulties of polite correspondence. Those who were married last June have passed through the trying ordeal, but by those of next June, or next October, a few suggestions of timely character will doubtless be appreciated.

Although at the outset it appears difficult, the job of acknowledging wedding gifts is really one of the simplest known. It does not require even ingenuity or originality, all that is indispensable being a box of note-paper, a pen and a bottle of ink. When the young bride sits down to contemplate her array of presents, her first perplexing thought is what she shall say to the donor of each. Nothing easier! Uncle Peter, for instance, has sent a heavily upholstered chair with a spring rocker. What could be more fitting than this as a reply to Uncle Peter?

My Darling Uncle:—

I can not thank you half enough for your beautiful chair. It was awfully like you, so soft and easy. Every time we sit in it—Charley and I—we think of you. You must come around soon and sit in it yourself.

Your loving niece, Clara.

P.S.—Charley and I had a perfectly lovely trip. It didn't rain a day while we were away.

That, dear girls, is the idea in crude shape. Your feminine tact can doubtless improve the quality of expression. The principle, however, will soon become apparent to you. No matter what the gift is, always effusively invite the giver to come around and try it. "Dear Kate, drop in any time and have a sip from your darling tea-cups." "Dear Aunt Carrie, be sure and stop whenever you are out this way and let us pour you a drink from your charming decanter." "Dear Cousin Tom, your cuckoo clock is a dream; don't forget to set your watch by it whenever you're in our neighborhood." And so forth. No trouble. Sips from tea-cups and vinegar cruets; seats in chairs and divans; catnaps on lounges at all hours and food from forks. If a rich uncle gives you a house tell him to come down and live in it whenever he feels like it. Follow this plan and rest easily. Your temper will keep sweet and no one outside will be offended.

Carrying the idea a step further, it will remain for some enterprising bride-to-be to send out supplementary notes with all her wedding invitations. Well known is it that the gift feature of a modern ceremony is far from being perfect. Duplicates continue to come in, despite the most judicious hints thrown out beforehand by the bride-to-be and her near relatives. Finally, when seven water-bottles and six ice-cream sets arrive in one day, the limit is reached and the pretty-soon-bride realizes it. Still, what can she do? It is too late to remedy the matter, so the duplicates hold the fort.

With what ease, however, could such annoyances be averted by the adoption of the Surprise Party system; the method which incloses with each invitation a request to please furnish cake or to please bring lemonade. Applied to a wedding, this method would work like a charm. Duplicates among the presents would be impossible, and a bride would find her new home well-nigh furnished with gifts, if proper discrimination was observed and enough cards sent out. Uncle Paul, who cornered the market once, should be asked to please furnish a set of bronzes. He can afford them, and the note relieves him of the necessity of thinking. Consideration, of course, should always be observed, and the value of the present asked for should be measured by the pocket-book of the relative to whom the invitation is sent.

If next June's crop of brides, whether they belong to the blushing class or not, will adopt these well-meant suggestions, they will stave off many an attack of Americanitis.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Events Under This Head Transpiring in and around Peterborough.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to furnish the paper with items of a personal and social nature either by 'phone or in writing.—Ed. Times.]

—Mrs. J. B. Ormond, of Ottawa, who has been the guest of Mrs. J. R. Stratton for the last few weeks, returned home yesterday.

—The many friends of Mr. T. M. D. Croly, who underwent an operation for cancer of the stomach in New York will be pleased to learn that he is doing well, and hopes to be home in a short time.

—Mr. H. G. Luke, of the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Navigation Co., and the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Co., is in town, and gave The Times a call. Mr. Luke is looking after the summer excursion business for his companies.

A New Terrace

Mr. John Carlisle, with his usual enterprise, has purchased from the Bradburn estate a lot of land on the corner of Stewart and Macdonald streets, and is preparing to erect a block of eight houses. The building will be two storeys in height, and are intended for mechanics.

Got Lame Back?

No need of that now. That sort of pain can be knocked out in short order, for Polson's Nerviline, which is five times stronger than any other, penetrates at once through the tissues, reaches the source of suffering, drives it out and thus gives relief almost instantly. Not magic, but strength that gives Polson's Nerviline this power, you will think it magic, however, if you try it, pain goes so quickly. Sold by dealers everywhere, in large 25 cent bottles.

Death at St. Joseph's

Mr. John Fitzpatrick, of Asphodel father of Rev. Father Fitzpatrick, of Ennismore, passed away at St. Joseph's hospital yesterday afternoon, about three o'clock.

STRUCK BY A SNOW PLOW

A Grand Trunk Passenger Injured at Blackwater Station

Lindsay Post. Mr. Geo. Murphy, Bethany, who has been visiting friends at Blackwater, was in town to-day passing through to his home in Peterborough. While at Blackwater Mr. Murphy was the victim of an accident. While crossing the G. T. R. track at the station there last Thursday to shake hands with Conductor Pinket, an old friend, he was knocked down by a snow plow. Fortunately he was thrown off the track and he thus escaped being run over. When picked up it was discovered that his head was badly cut and shoulder bruised. He was taken to Sunderland, where medical aid was summoned. Mr. Murphy is feeling very sore, but expects to be all right in a few weeks.

Machinists May Strike

Chicago, Ill., March 12—At a mass meeting to be held in Association Hall to-night it is expected that definite arrangements will be made for a general strike of machinists when the present working agreement expires, May 20, unless better terms are granted by the employers. The demands of the men call for a nine hour day with a minimum wage scale of 32 cents an hour in all machine shops, and an eight-hour day with a minimum wage scale of 45 cents an hour for all machinists employed outside the shops.

NO FAKES AT THIS FAIR

South Ontario and West Durham (Will Cut Out Special Attractions

The South Ontario and West Durham Fair Board, which met in Whitby yesterday, took a radical move by deciding to do away with all special attractions. Educational features will henceforth, be emphasized, and as an instance also will be awarded in prizes to the various school sections for collections of cut flowers, grasses, etc. The meeting also decided to ask the Agriculture Department for expert judges live stock, grains, fruits, and so on, and also to give informal lectures on their reasons for making the awards.

Mr. G. C. Creelman, Superintendent of Farmers' Institutes, said that this was the first fair board which has followed the recommendations of the department, but he believes that there is a pronounced movement in this direction throughout the Province.

WIFE'S INGENUITY

Saves Her Husband

The author of the "Degeneration of Dorothy," Mr. Franklin Kinsella, 220 W. 25th street, New York City, was the victim of a little ty-play—but he can best tell the story himself. "I must confess that I have been the victim of an innocent deception which turned out all for the best, however.

I had been resting under the belief, for some years, that coffee served as a lubricant to my cerebral convolutions, in other words, 'made the wheels go round,' and I had an idea that I could not work without it as a stimulant.

I soon paid the penalty in nervousness, loss of flesh, insomnia and restlessness, none of which troubles would yield to any or all medicines. I finally got in rather a bad way, and my wife took a hand in the affair all unknown to me. She purchased a package of Postum Coffee and gave me one half Postum and one half coffee. In a little time she had me down to clear Postum, and I was none the wiser.

I noticed that I was getting better, my nerves were steadier, and I began to gain flesh and sleep nights. My work was performed far better than in my old condition.

Commenting upon my greatly improved health one morning I was told the truth. 'Tis to laugh,' so I submitted gracefully and joined the Postum ranks.

Experience teaches that boiling is one-half the game. When the directions are carried out the result will be as fine a cup of rich, fragrant coffee as ever delighted the senses without mixing the marrow."

THEIR GOLDEN WEDDING

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Staples, of Cavan Honored by Their Children and Friends

On the evening of March 6th a very pleasing event took place at "Elm Grove, the commodious home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Staples, of Cavan township, the occasion being the celebration of their golden wedding. Their children and grandchildren and other friends to the number of forty or more assembled to convey congratulations to them on the attainment of the jubilee of their married life, and a most enjoyable evening was spent by all present. At the close of a sumptuous supper Mr. Henry Staples, Councillor of Cavan township, and eldest surviving son of the honored couple on behalf of their sons and daughters read the following address and presented Mr. and Mrs. Staples with a purse of gold:

Dear and Honored Parents, — We have met to-night to celebrate an event interesting to us and we trust also to you, the fiftieth anniversary of your wedding day. As members of your family we desire to offer our congratulations to you and our sincere gratitude to God that His Providence has spared you through a long and prosperous life to see this day. You have reached a spot in life's journey attained by few, the golden milestone of a Christian journey. Especially we wish to thank you for the example you have set before us of upright living, and that through the dangers and temptations of childhood you have guided us with loving hands, and we have enjoyed the blessings of a Christian home. If we have been kept from evil courses we owe it in large measure under God's blessing to the Christian training and example of those early days. In your relation to the church and society you have nobly and cheerfully borne your part. Your home has been one of hospitality and in these things also you have set us an example which we well may follow. We thank you for your patience and forbearance and for all the sacrifices you have made for us in the years that are past and we pray that your lives may be long spared to us as a light and joy. Please accept this small token of our love and esteem and may we meet as an unbroken family in the "Home beyond the tide."

Though visibly affected Mr. Staples made a most felicitous reply, after which congratulatory speeches were made by Rev. Jos. Kilgour, of Peterborough, Rev. H. V. Mounteer, pastor of the family, and Mr. W. H. Lowes, who was best man at the wedding fifty years ago. A pleasing feature of the occasion was the administration of the ordinance of Christian baptism to three infant granddaughters of the honored couple, the eldest of whom was but 7 months of age. Mr. and Mrs. Staples, who have been life long Methodists, are in the enjoyment of the best of health and being surrounded with every comfort they bid fair to realize the wish of their hosts of friends, that they may be spared for many years to enjoy the blessings which a kind Providence has given them and to serve the church and the community.

The entire family was represented with the exception of Miss Florence R. Purser and Miss Elsie Staples.

SCHOOL GIRLS KNOW ITS WORTH

Paine's Celery Compound

Gives Them Energy, Snap and Full of Life

IT ENABLES THEM TO ATTAIN THE BLESSINGS AND VIGOR OF TRUE WOMANHOOD

Women and girls in every station of life who have used Paine's Celery Compound know that it is a blessing that sick and rundown females cannot afford to be without.

Modjeska, the peerless queen of artistes voices the sentiments of thousands of women and girls who have tested the strength-making and life-giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound when she says, "I have found Paine's Celery Compound the best of all remedies for the nervous exhaustion consequent upon the arduous work of my profession." Overworked women in the home, and weak, languid school girls have found in Paine's Celery Compound the health and vigor it so strongly guarantees.

Miss Nellie Gallagher, of Marbleton, Que., says, "Having used your excellent Paine's Celery Compound during the last term of school, I wish to proclaim to all the great benefits I derived from it. At the beginning of the term I was weak and languid, and having to be closely confined in school at my studies, I was not able to make satisfactory progress. Mamma got me to use Paine's Celery Compound, from which I greatly benefitted, and have not had a recurrence of troubles I formerly had. Mamma has great confidence in Paine's Celery Compound for she has used it herself and given it to my brothers and sisters. I highly recommend it to all young ladies at this special time in life when they suffer from loss of energy and strength."

AN IDEAL TRIP

To Toronto by C.P.R. and to St. Catharines and the Falls by Boat

Mr. H. G. Luke, representative of the Niagara, St Catharines and Toronto Railway and its connecting steamboat line from Toronto, is in town offering low rates to lodges and societies for excursions via C.P.R. to Toronto and the boats and electric line which he represents to St. Catharines and Niagara Falls. This Company carry nearly all the excursions between Toronto and Niagara Falls, and are prepared to handle any number of people, with their elegantly equipped boats and magnificent electric cars, which have no equal in Canada. It is to be hoped that the band or some other organization will take advantage of it, as it would no doubt prove a popular trip with the citizens.

The steamers leave Toronto four times daily, commencing at Port Dalhousie with the Railway, which runs through St. Catharines and the fruit district of the Niagara peninsula, with its unsurpassed scenery.

Mr. Luke also represents the famous sanatorium and hotel of St. Catharines, known as the "Welland". Many new features are being added to this establishment in the shape of roof, sun, parlor and promenade, large music hall, ladies and gentlemen's billiard rooms and gymnasiums. A trained staff of employees in charge of a physician and manager, look after the guests and prescribe the routine necessary for the rejuvenation of the body, in the shape of baths, massage, diet, rest and exercise. This institution is attracting much attention among the medical men of Canada.

A Treat in Store

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—As a workingman, I am pleased to learn that J. Hampden Burnham, Esq. has consented to deliver a lecture on the "Workingmen of the Town of Peterborough," at an early date. I understand the gentleman had been induced to give his lecture at the solicitation of the Rector of St. John's church, whose interest in the welfare of the members of the local labor union is so disinterested and pronounced.

A subject of this kind in the hands of so advanced and liberal a thinker as Mr. Burnham—and who is so well acquainted with the wage-earners life and struggles—ought to be a treat to all of us.

The lecture should prove a great help to the working class on account of the large sympathies which Mr. Burnham is known to possess for them.

I know for a fact that Mr. Burnham did all he could to elect Mr. Ball and Mr. Belcher as Water Commissioners.

Might I ask the Review and Examiner to print this letter and oblige.

A WAGE EARNER.

FRENCH ARE AMAZED AT THE AWFUL DISASTER

Times Correspondent Says Methuen Disaster Would Have Caused a crisis in France

A TENTH CONTINGENT FROM NEW ZEALAND.

Premier Seddon Suggests Contributions to Keep Up the Australian Strength in South Africa

London, March 12.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that, apart from admiration for the Boers, the uppermost feeling in France regarding the recent disaster is amazement at the attitude of the British. Frenchmen cannot understand how a command should have been left to a man who considers bravery the only quality the soldier requires. If a French general had been captured like Methuen, there would have been an uprising from one end of France to the other and possibly the Government would have been overthrown. In an editorial The Times says it is rather a curious thing that Methuen's reverse has for the first time called forth an expression of German official sympathy for Britain. "This appeal to domestic affections," says The Times, "might be a little bewildering, even overwhelming, did we not remember that Prince Henry has had various opportunities of learning that America, though quite pleased to have Germany's friendship and forget past unpleasantness, has no wish to enrich herself in that way at the expense of friendship for England."

GERMAN RELATIONS IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Paris, March 12.—A despatch from Berlin to the Paris edition of The Herald says the Disconto Gesellschaft Bank is asking the Government for protection against the Brazilian authorities, who are understood to be on the point of confiscating a railway which is already in the hands of a receiver favorable to Brazil. It is claimed that the German investors did not fulfil the stipulations of the concession, and this is sufficient to cause the repeal of the franchise.

The report is confirmed that German investors in the Venezuelan Railway are anxious to sell out. German investors in South America complain that the Government cannot offer sufficient protection to warrant them holding property. The operation of the Monroe Doctrine leaves the United States the only country able to manage properties and command justice in South American courts. It is believed that the representations made by Prince Henry and the courteous manner in which he has been received will result in a liberal policy on the part of the United States towards Germany, and that no objection will be made to Germany protecting her South American interests by the establishment of a naval station in the Caribbean Seas.

PATRIOTIC OFFER OF PREMIER SEDDON.

London, March 12.—A despatch from Wellington, New Zealand, to The Times says that Premier Seddon guaranteed that New Zealand will subscribe her share on the basis of population towards strengthening the Australian force in South Africa. He suggests the establishment of a reserve force, ready to take the field upon requirement. Arrangements will be made for rapid mobilization of the tenth New Zealand regiment if its services are needed.

IRELAND MUST FIGHT SAYS SULLIVAN

A PLEA FOR AN ARMED REBELLION

A Resolution Passed Calling on Irishmen Everywhere to Fight England

Philadelphia, March 12.—At a public meeting in this city, held under the auspices of the Clan-Na-Gael, ex-Senator Sullivan, of New York, delivered the leading address. The ex-Senator arrived from New York late in the evening, accompanied by Attorney M. F. Callahan and John Devoy. He was escorted to the academy by the Seventh Regiment Irish Volunteers. Jas. F. McKeown presided and made an address, which was an announcement of the opinions of the Clan-Na-Gael members in Philadelphia in present conditions in Ireland.

"The time has gone by," he said, "when Ireland can hope to get anything from England, except by fighting for it. We may as well let the world know this and act up to our belief."

"The example of the Boers is an inspiration to us. England is in South Africa."

"All she gets out of it up to the present is a few censored and unsatisfactory telegrams," replied the New Yorker. "England used to look on America with scorn," he said, "but she is now playing the sycophant. There are some so-called Americans who would help her in the hour of retribution, but if the dead of '76 could rise from their graves they would pronounce such Americans traitors."

The resolutions proposed by Attorney John Gibbs and unanimously adopted were in part as follows:

Resolved,—That we pledge to the people of Ireland our hearty support in their struggle for freedom; we accept the rejection of Gladstone's Home Rule Bill by the House of Lords and the recent emphatic declarations of Lords Salisbury and Rosebery, speaking, as they undoubtedly do, for the great majority of the English people, as England's final answer to Ireland's peaceful demands and as proof that all attempts at obtaining through peaceful means even a partial and inadequate form of local self-government are waste of effort, and that Ireland's only hope lies in preparing steadily and resolutely to use the opportunity which [illegible] to [illegible] in the next [illegible] England's difficulties abroad to establish an Irish Republic by armed force, as the thirteen colonies established the United States, and as we hope to see established the United States of South Africa.

The Executive Committee in charge consisted of James F. McKeown, William Cronin, William J. Tobin, William Carey, Dr. [illegible] McCahey, M. J. O'Brien, John O'Farrell, Frank McKernan, Harry Carney, William J. [illegible] and [illegible].

NUMBER OF BOER PLOTS DISCOVERED

Brocksma's Messenger was Imprisoned—Exposed His Master

HOUSE SUCCESSFULLY RAIDED

London, March 12.—The Daily Chronicle contains a letter from Edgar Wallace, Johannesburg, telling of the discovery of certain Boer plotters. He says,—

"One of the most interesting stories I have heard is the story of how Brocksma was detected. Brocksma was known to have been bitterly anti-English, but he was not suspected of treachery. Some time before Brocksma's arrest, the kaffir boy of one of the men implicated, a well-known doctor of Johannesburg, applied to the pass officer for a permit to get outside the lines saying that his master wanted him to go on an errand. The pass officer, knowing the doctor, gave the boy the necessary permit, and then later, wondering whether the doctor really did want the boy to go or whether the boy had merely lied to get the pass, he resolved to call on the doctor and ascertain for himself. He called, and found the doctor at home. No, he had not told the boy to get the pass; in fact, he knew nothing about it. The pass officer asked to see the boy, and was taken into the kitchen. Questioned, the boy first denied that it was he who called, and then denied that he had said the permit was for his master's errand. Cautioned, he became first impertinent and then violent, and was promptly knocked down by the pass officer, after he had attempted to throw a pot of boiling rice at the officer's head. Assistance was procured, and the boy was arrested. At the police court the doctor tried to get the boy acquitted, but he was sent to prison for a month. The boy must have been some sort of an agent of Brocksma's on whose service he was probably bound when he procured the pass. This the doctor knew—he has since been deported—and it was this that made him so anxious to obtain the boy's release. You must not sell a kaffir or desert him in distress if he knows anything to your discredit; and while in jail the boy informed on Brocksma and his master, with the result that Brocksma's house was raided and his seditious pamphlets and correspondence found."

Creamery Men Meet.

Sioux Falls, March 13.—A district convention of creamerymen and buttermakers will be in session here today with L. N. Hunter of this city presiding. The purpose of the meeting is to exchange ideas with a view to improving the general conditions of the industry. Nearly 100 prominent creamerymen are in attendance and the meeting promises to have good results.

Poor Girl, Pity Her

Growing! Yes, into weakness; but not strength. Studies, plenty of them. Tired, of course she is, and weak, too. Does not eat enough, and digests far less than enough. This condition is so frequent, but how seldom noticed, even by fond parents. Give her Ferrozone, then watch her appetite improve, her cheeks and lips grow ruddy, her step elastic, her spirits buoyant. All this simply the result of eating and digesting enough, making blood, and thereby strengthening the nerve and brain power. Ferrozone gives a woman's [illegible] daughter [illegible]. Get it to-day.

ATTEMPTED ESCAPE

Remarkable Attempt of Boer Prisoner to Escape From St. Helena

St. Helena, March 12.—A Boer officer, a prisoner on parole at Deadwood camp, St. Helena, made an extraordinary attempt recently to escape from captivity on board one of the Union Castle liners. He had himself inclosed in an innocent looking case addressed to a captain of the Fourth Gloucester regiment, and this was put on board the steamer.

That the ex-commandant allowed himself no elbowroom is evident from the fact that the case measured 4 feet 3 inches by 2 feet 4 inches. It was of three-quarter-inch deal.

After three days at sea the man was discovered, and was unpacked in a very thin and shaken condition, declaring that his experience had been worse than a sojourn in the nether regions. He turned out to be Commandant Smomberg, and on being brought before Colonel Evans said that he had intended if he had reached England undiscovered to get out of the case at night and make his escape to Holland.

WILL FIGHT FOR FUR TRADE.

Montreal, Que., March 12.—The Hudson Bay Company, whose sway, over thousands upon thousands of miles of prairie and forest in the Canadian Northwest for years has been undisputed, will meet with competition shortly, which promises to remind it of the days when the Great West Company fought it tooth and nail for supremacy in the fur trade. According to an apparently well-founded report a rival company, backed by English and Canadian capital, is arranging to send vessels down Hudson and James Bays, and establish many trading posts along the east plain and on the west coast, which is the stronghold of the Hudson Bay Company. Such a move would undoubtedly precipitate a life-and-death fight between the rival interests.

The Choir Entertainment.

The choir of the Murray street Baptist church were delightfully entertained on Tuesday night by Mr. and Mrs. T. F. Matthews, at their handsome residence on Park street. Needless to say every effort was made to provide a most enjoyable time for their guests, some of whom were initiated into the mysteries of ping pong for the first time. Music, games and, of course, refreshments, sped the hours all too quickly.

Meet to Further Missions.

Catersville, Ga., March 13.—Many delegates and visitors have arrived for the twelfth annual meeting of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the North Georgia Conference, which will be in session here during the remainder of the week. The gathering will be formally opened this evening with devotional services in charge of the Rev. Samuel P. Jones. There will be addresses of welcome by Col. F. M. Ford and others, to which response will be made for the visitors by Mrs. S. R. Belk. The business of the conference will be taken up to-morrow morning.

Big Winter Wheat Crop.

Omaha, Neb., March 13.—Reliable reports received here indicate that the winter wheat crop for Nebraska this year will be 38,000,000 or 47,000,000 bus. The acreage this winter is estimated at 1,800,000, which is about 25 per cent. greater than last year. An average yield of 20 bushels per acre would give a total crop of 36,000,000. If the season is as favorable from this time on as it was last year the crop will reach 47,000,000 bushels, which closely approximates the total yield of winter and spring wheat last year.

Celebrity Banquet at U. of M.

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 13.—The second annual celebrity banquet and ball given by the stockholders and directors of the University of Michigan Daily News takes place to-night, and it promises to be the most notable event of the college year. The affair will be limited to all notables in the various branches of university activity and the press. The guests will include the presidents of the different senior classes, the members of the student Board of Control, President Potter of the Athletic Board, and the managers, captains and champions of the various athletic teams.

Seventh Cable Chess Match.

New York, March 13.—Arrangements have been completed for the seventh annual chess match by cable for the Sir George Newnes trophy. The contest will be inaugurated to-morrow morning, the Americans playing in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn. In the six contests previously held the Americans are a little ahead. The first was won by this country, the second and third by Great Britain, the fourth and fifth were won by the United States, and the match of last year ended in a draw. Three successive victories are necessary for permanent possession of the trophy.

A LADY WHO HAS WON PRIZES FOR HER WORK WRITES ABOUT

Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns

A lady residing in a progressive Ontario town, and who has been a user of Diamond Dyes for over twenty years, says:

"I learned the art of making mats and rugs years ago. In many cases I was obliged to work up patterns that were but imperfectly traced by hand or stamped by the old fashioned methods. Since you have given to the public your beautiful and valuable Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns, I have no trouble in making up easy or complicated designs, as your patterns are richly colored and give a harmonious combination that no other patterns can afford. I have made up several of your Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns that have taken prizes at Fairs and Exhibitions. Every lady who can make a rug should use your patterns."

Complete range of designs sent free by mail to any lady who sends her address to The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q.

HOCKEY.

The O.H.A. Executive made a grant to the sub-committee to purchase lockets, pins or medals for the members of the three champion teams.

Some days ago a Berlin paper stated that Galt could win the O. H. A. championship, and that Berlin could beat the O. H. A. champions. All of which clearly shows that there is insanity in the Berlin family.

Winnipeg papers are cracking up Mr. Hugh Baird as the best referee in the business, when he is not one whit better than Roy Schooley, notwithstanding the talk from Cornwall and Galt. Baird, no doubt, is a capable referee, but when they go putting him on such a tall and lofty pedestal it is about time to say a few words in defence of a few good referees that we really possess down this way.

The Montreal hockey team will play the Victorias of Winnipeg this morning in the first of a series of matches for the Stanley Cup. The Montreal team arrived in Winnipeg on Tuesday and appear to be in good condition after their long trip.

The Intermediates, winners of the intermediate O.H.A. Championship were delayed in reaching Toronto on Tuesday afternoon and could not be the guests of Hon. J. R. Stratton at a banquet. On Tuesday evening next the boys and a number of their friends will be tendered a banquet in town by Hon J. R. Stratton which promises to be a very brilliant affair.

BASKETBALL.

The West Toronto Y. M. C. A. basket ball team was defeated at Hamilton last night by the local Y. M. C. A., the score being 36 to 20. At half time it was 22 to 14.

The Business College Basket Ball Team hereby accepts the challenge of the Oriole Basket Ball team of the D.F. Ackerman Mfg. Co., to a friendly game to be played in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium on Saturday evening. A. Laing, manager.

The above mentioned game will take place at nine o'clock Saturday evening at the conclusion of the League Match between the Electricians and the Ironclads of Wm. Hamilton Mfg. Co. Captains of the playing teams are asked to choose their umpires early in the week.

LACROSSE.

A meeting will be held in the T.A.A. rooms to-night to consider the organization of a Lacrosse team. A cordial invitation is extended to all interested in Canadas' National game, to be present.

A meeting will be held in the Y.M.C.A. to-morrow night for the organization of a Lacrosse Club in Peterborough.

Toronto Telegram,—London, Ont., is applying, or will apply for admission to the C. L. A. At this same time it would be just as well if the association made it clearly understood that London must behave, and that they would have to give up their rough and rowdyish ways as it were. London has had such an illsmelling, unsavory name in any sport in which they have entered that it is small wonder when their name is brought up it is viewed with suspicion. However 'tis to be hoped that they will forget the past and try to behave themselves when they get into respectable company.

THE RING.

Tom Sharkey and Gus Ruhlin are to fight before the National Club in London during coronation week. The have agreed to meet any heavyweight pitted against them.

Palm Beach, Fla., March 13.—The annual golf tournament for the Palm Beach Cup, the Royal Poinciana Cup and the Breakers Cup will begin today and will continue through the remainder of the week. Judging from the number and prominence of the players and the auspicious conditions surrounding the opening, the tournament will prove a fitting climax to the most brilliant season of competitive golf in the history of this famous winter resort.

Items of Interest

Birmingham, Ala., March 13.—On the first of next month the Republic Iron and Steel Company, according to arrangements now completed, will blow its new 225-ton blast furnace at Thomas, near this city, and simultaneously will light fires in 400 new coke ovens arranged in four batteries. This is the largest single coke plant in the United States. The company is preparing also for the erection of large new steel mills in Birmingham. Owing to the rush of orders the company is importing men from the north to run the mills in double shifts.

Y.M.C.A. CONFERENCE.

Indianola, Ia., March 12.—The annual conference of the Young Men's Christian Association for Southern Iowa began here to-day and will continue through the remainder of the week. Addresses and papers covering all phases of association work will be presented to the convention. Elaborate entertainment has been provided for the visitors, of whom there are more than a hundred.

BIG INDEPENDENT STEEL PLANT

McKeesport, Pa., March 12.—Announcement is made that within three weeks the mammoth new steel and wire plant of the Pittsburg Steel Company at Monessen would begin operations in the nail wire mill and galvanizing departments. The plant is an independent concern and will employ nearly 1,800 men when in full operation. The site of the new industry embraces 14 acres of land. In addition to the buildings of the plant the company will erect dwelling houses to rent to its workmen. The houses will have from four to eight rooms each, and will be of frame, with everything modern and improved in the interior finish and equipment.

HUNTSVILLE GAS PLANT SALE.

Huntsville, Ala., March 12.—This is the date set by the chancery court for the sale of the Huntsville gas plant. The property is very valuable as an investment, and lively bidding is expected.

Pain in the Joints

may be muscular or rheumatic. The joints are hard to get at, and it requires a powerful, penetrating remedy to reach the affected parts. Polson's Nerviline exactly meets the requirements, for it is both powerful and penetrating. The pain is expelled as if by magic, for one drop of Nerviline equals in strength five drops of other remedies. You won't often call for the doctor if Nerviline is in the home. Price 25 cents.

KRUGER STILL CONFIDENT

Declares Boers will be Delivered Out of the British Lion's Den

"Utrecht, March 12.—There will be more good news yet from Delarey. This victory of his reminds me of General Botha's allusion a year ago to the miracle of faith which saved Daniel out of the lion's den. My confidence in the ultimate triumph of the Boer cause could not be greater than it is now and, indeed, it never has been shaken. I hope England will show she sees the folly of attempting to subdue the Boer race by recognizing it now, and by restoring independence to the Transvaal Republic. By doing this she will spare herself as well as the Boers further bloodshed and expense, and will retain the Republics as friendly neighbors."

GREAT REJOICING AT THE HAGUE OVER THE BOER

Success in South Africa--It is Stated That the Boers Made an Enormous Haul of Provisions

THE REVERSE STIFFENS THE BRITISH PUBLIC

Determination That General Kitchener Shall be Strengthened—Lady Methuen Receives the News Sails for South Africa

London, March 12.—The Tweebosch calamity lies like a shadow on the country, and the nation yet looks vainly for comfort. This is not to say that there are any signs of despair. On the contrary, the press and public generally are stiffened in their determination that Kitchener shall be strengthened, and to see the war through at all costs. But the uncertainty and mystery surrounding certain features of the affair, which there is no fresh information to remove, cause a fear that the disaster will prove even worse than has hitherto been apparent. The laconic "dangerously wounded," appearing against Gen. Methuen's name in the casualty list, increases the anxiety.

Lady Methuen, who left for Cape Town March 8th, arrived at Madeira Tuesday on her way home from South Africa. She received the news of the wounding and capture of her husband in a Government despatch. She disembarked, and will return to South Africa by the first steamer.

There is a certain, but not over-eager, readiness to accept Baron von Richthofen's declaration in the Prussian Diet in a generous spirit. It will require, says the Times, a good many such expressions to remove the resentment Germany awakened among a people very slow to harbor it. The paper speculates upon what it calls this remarkable change of tone. It says the clue may perhaps be found in the observation that if Germany shares the susceptibilities of her cousins on this side of the water, she may be able to approach her cousins on the other side of the water, and so perhaps become of some service to her other cousins, the Dutch, and their friends, the Boers.

The Times adds that Prince Henry had various opportunities for learning that America, though pleased to have Germany's friendship, does not wish to enrich herself in that way at the expense of her friendship with Great Britain. Since the English and American cousins stand together, Germany probably considers it time to be cousin of both, but the English people will not forget that it is to America they owe this rather touching re-approchement. The circumstance will form a new link between the British and their cousins across the Atlantic, while both they and the British will accept with due cordiality the sage conclusion of the German Government that it is well to be on good terms with the two great English-speaking world powers.

There is a great deal of irritation here over the outburst of triumphant ridicule over General Methuen's disaster in a section of the Continental press. Such a tone, is however, nowise universal, and there are prominent organs in Berlin, Vienna and Paris which, considering the sympathies of their readers, comment upon the affair with remarkable restraint. The soreness of Englishmen over the fact that Gen. Delarey's men wore khaki is not salved by those who find satisfaction in precedents. Among other data on the subject is "Stonewall" Jackson's threat to shoot any of his own men found dressing themselves in captured clothes even to cover their partial nakedness. An interviewer tried to draw a condemnation from Mr. Charles Dilke, who replied tersely that khaki is a vague term.

Continental critics who admit that the wearing of English uniforms by the Boers is contrary to the laws of war excuse it on the ground that probably otherwise the Boers would be naked.

THE CASUALTY LIST.

London, March 12.—The War Office to-night issued a list of casualties among the officers in the fight of Lord Methuen's force with the Boers under Gen. Delarey: Lieutenants Venning, Nesham and Hartley, and Col. Wilson were killed. General Methuen and Col. Townsend were dangerously wounded. Captain Outram, Lieut. Dennis Logan of the Imperial Yeomanry, and Lieutenants Mitford and Fitzpatrick were severely wounded, and Lieut. Squires of the Imperial Yeomanry, slightly wounded. Thirty-eight men were killed and 72 wounded.

The War Office issues a correction as to the point from which Lord Methuen was marching. In yesterday's despatches it was stated that he was marching from Wynberg. It should have been Vryburg.

It is pointed out in connection with the capture of General Lord Methuen that he is senior officer next to Lord Kitchener now in South Africa. Indeed in army service he is his chief's senior.

The following message from its war correspondent, Mr. Edgar Wallace, which appeared in the Daily Mail of February 24, contained a forecast of the resumption of aggressive action by the Boers in the South-Western Transvaal:

General Delarey is reported to have made a partial recovery from his attack of dysentry, and is believed to be concentrating in the vicinity of Klerksdorp.

Since Feb. 24 Delarey's two successes have occurred.

The Hague, March 12.—There is great rejoicing here over the Boer victory. The streets are filled with people who are enthusiastic over the news. Crowds surround the newspaper bulletins. Commenting on the success of the British [illegible] the Rotterdamsche Courant says: "We shout hurrah with the Irish for Delarey and his Boers." It is stated that the Boers made an enormous haul of provisions.

London, March 12.—At a meeting of the Aeronautical Society Dr. Barton described a dirigible balloon that he is constructing for the War Office. Its general appearance is similar to that of Santos-Dumont's airship, but the motors are placed fore and aft, and it has six propellers. It is also proposed to preserve the centre of gravity by a system of water circulation, but the most novel feature is an arrangement of aeroplanes, by which the machine can be elevated or depressed. There are three sets of these ranged in rows of four, like slats of a venetian blind, and recalling Lilienthal's skimming machine.

Sir Hiram Maxim presided at the meeting, and led in the discussion, in which he advocated his own theories of human flight. He said the problem could be solved by the use of machines heavier than air. He opposed the balloon idea, and condemned Dr. Barton's model as containing more machinery than it could carry. Sir Hiram incidentally denied the report that he had offered a $20,000 prize to be competed for at the St. Louis Exposition. He said, however, that he was prepared to offer a large prize for an airship which would prove really practicable. Such a machine was not in existence, and could not be produced in time for the St. Louis Exposition. He did not think much would result from the contest there.

EXONERATES METHUEN.

London, March 12.—The official information on General Methuen's disaster is still incomplete. The total known British casualties amount to 274. There are still 326 men unaccounted for.

A high official connected with the transport in previous campaigns said that the stampede of animals was unavoidable if he read the despatches aright, and that nobody who had ever attempted to manage mules or ox-trains on the veldt would criticise Gen. Methuen. Each system was bad, and there was a difference of opinion in the army, as to which was worse, but where both were adopted, the column was naturally divided. The trouble began when the raw troops flinched and threw the column into disorder. The current military view is that the burghers, being unhampered by supply trains and having the mastery of the art of rough riding and the management of cattle, are the best guerillas the world has ever known, and that no European army could avoid an occasional defeat and mishap.

The effect of Gen. Methuen's defeat is admitted to be serious, since it will light up Boer enthusiasm, but military men assert with confidence that hostilities have been restricted to three districts, that DeWet's power is broken, and Botha's forces kept well under restraint, and that the western Transvaal, where blockhouse lines have not been established, is the only section where serious work remains.

There seems only too much reason to believe that the news of Gen. Methuen's defeat was known to certain favored persons at least two hours before the public got it. Leading jobbers in the Kaffir market will be requested by the Stock Exchange Committee to show their books as regards their earlier dealings on Monday.

Grand Dukes Anniversary.

Berlin, March 13.—At Darmstadt today the Grand Duke Ernest Louis will receive many congratulations on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of his accession to the throne of Hesse. While the Grand Duke is blamed almost entirely for his matrimonial troubles, he enjoys nevertheless a wide measure of popularity among his subjects. Among the royal families of Germany, England, Denmark and Russia, with all of whom the Grand Duke and Duchess of Hesse are intimately connected by ties of blood, their domestic infelicity has been much deplored. Their efforts towards reconciliation, however, were futile, and it is admitted generally that a definite separation has taken place. The Grand Duchess, who is a daughter of the late Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and granddaughter of Queen Victoria, is now in the south of France and has announced her intention to divide her time in future between the Riviera and Coburg. Under the agreement of their separation the two children, one son and one daughter, are to be allowed to spend a certain portion of each year with the Grand Duke. In accordance with this agreement the children are now at Darmstadt where they have been looked after by their aunt, Princess Irene, who chose to spend her time with them during the absence of her husband, Prince Henry of Prussia, in the United States.

Malt Breakfast Food

All dietetic and medical experience clearly proves that the morning meal should consist of food that is easily digested and readily absorbed by the system.

Malt Breakfast Food, rich in nutriment and favoring digestion stands far above all other breakfast cereals as a health food. Its preeminent qualities are the result of the action of the Malt on the starch and gluten of the wheat, rendering these soluble and changing them into forms to be quickly absorbed by the stomach, then passing into the blood to enrich it and build up the nerves, the tissues of the body and the brain.

As the success and pleasure of each day depend largely on the food used at breakfast, you should avoid starchy grain foods. Malt Breakfast Food alone can supply the fuel for a hard day's work in home, office or workshop. Your grocer sells Malt Breakfast Food and recommends it.

INTERURBAN RAILWAYS AND CITY TRADE

The effect upon the business of the village and city connected with interurban railways is to the advantage of both rather than to their disadvantage. People of the busy bustling city will gladly live in the suburb, the smaller city, or even the village, in order that they may have the advantages of country life, if the members of the family who must attend to business in the city, can have cheap and rapid transportation to and from their homes.

The wealthy man who can live in the choicest part of the city with a park at his door, and who is the possessor of a conservatory filled with choice flowers, does not need the suburban home, but the average business man and the army of employees, will be more capable of having this contact with nature. The fact that they are capable of enjoying the blue sky, the green grass, and the songs of birds, they become, in consequence, more alert, more thorough, in business.

People of large cities are tired of the hurry, noise and dust, and want their homes in a more quiet place, a purer atmosphere. We will do well when we as a nation are as fond of homes as our brothers across the sea, those of England particularly, who believe in home in the full meaning of the word and who abominate our apartment houses, hotel life, and all our substitutes for a genuine home. So as we come to make our homes in these smaller cities and villages, or suburbs, so will we come to transact our business in the great centers—the cities.

People with easy transit will not long transact business in the average village store, where there exists such a chaos of affairs, where the purchaser buys his jewelry from a stock displayed at one small show case and window of the same building to which they go for their mail, or in the general store where the proprietor or clerk leaves the cutting of a dress of striking colors for the country maiden in order to measure vinegar, molasses or kerosene, as the case may be, for the freckled-faced barefoot boy, or, perhaps to cut a plug of tobacco for the loafer, who will probably with a smile ask that it be "put on the slate."

It is urged that the village will lose its trade; it has already lost its desirable trade, and with the mail delivered at the door of the farmhouse, and with cheap and quick travel to the city, it will continue to do so. But the man who owns the country store will not starve in consequence. He must keep a first class stock in the line he best understands, and make a specialty of that, and the people of the village or smaller city will be loyal to his endeavors. The village or suburban town will be better off without the village store, except for necessary trade.

If the children can go into the city to attend the library, the gymnasium, lecture or other places of profit as easily and almost as quickly as he once could go down to the store, the habit of going to such places will soon be cultivated; they will soon be reading better books; they will hear and see the people of note, and will profit by this manner of living. The people will have their homes amid nature's surroundings, and go to the city to do business of all kinds, to see and hear the newest and best in the way of entertainment, to attend the church, and to have the best in music and art, which these centers will provide.

We will cite the cheap and rapid transit between Chicago and Joliet, Illinois, an instance with which we are familiar. Here are several railroad lines and an interurban electric line. The competition is strong, and the fare consequently cheap. Joliet, while quite a city, is much to be preferred for residence purposes to Chicago, and as a result a number of Chicago business men live in Joliet. A great many people go into Chicago to buy, to the injury of Joliet, it may be said. But it is not so telling a stranger might infer. The stores of Joliet are much better than formerly. Better stocks of goods are kept, and better service is given, all of which tends to build up trade at home. They have better churches, a beautiful opera house, better talent in the way of entertainment. Besides the loss of the trade that goes into Chicago is at least partly made up from the customers of the small towns who come to Joliet to attend all sorts of attractions. There were those who thought that this would be a death blow to Joliet, but it has made it a new city. And what, it may be asked, has become of the small merchants of these little towns? Some merchants have built up their business by placing an up-to-date stock of goods before their customers. Others have gone to Joliet and gone into business in a better way, and still others have left their fly-specked dirty stores and gone into other work, and often to their profit and advantage. And these small pretty towns, such as Lockport, where the great gates of the drainage canal are located have come into such close relationship to Joliet that many of the people who lived in the northern part of the city—in the prison district, or in the region of the great steel mills which pour out their smoke day and night, are finding homes and fresh air in the shady little village of Lockport, or along the four miles of electric road between the village and the city. All this is because transit is rapid and cheap. What has been true of Joliet may be equally true of other localities. It will prove to be of great advantage to the large and small city and of the village also, to have cheap and rapid transit connections.

Where Doctors disagree!—Physicians no longer consider it catering to "quackery" in recommending in practice so meritorious a remedy for Indigestion Dyspepsia and Nervousness as South American Nervine. They realise that it is a step in advance in medical science and a sure and permanent cure for diseases of the stomach. It will cure you.—6

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 266,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 208,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by E. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

The capital invested in electrical enterprises in the United States is estimated by "American Trade" at four billion dollars. We have the same authority for the assertion that these industries employ more than half a million persons. Almost half of the aggregate capital is represented by the electric railways, which, it would be safe to assume, employ a majority of the half-million persons. There were dismal predictions current ten or fifteen years ago of things that would befall certain classes of labor when electric cars came in; but the abolishment of the horse-car has probably thrown no one out of work—except the horse.

The Playgoer's Dinners.

A correspondent who signs himself "Serious Playgoer" writes to the "Illustrated London News": "Is it not possible to induce the public to moderate its eating and drinking before going to the play? If you have eaten a very large meal, how can you be in the mood for real drama? Nowadays the playwright has to provide, not drama, but an aid to digestion, a kind of dramatic equivalent to the cigarette and liqueur. He may count himself happy if rows of gentlemen in white waistcoats are gently stimulated by a theatrical anecdote, set to music if possible, and enlivened by charming costumes. If his characters have any troubles, these must be comic embarrassments, not the sordid cares that crease even a white waistcoat in actual life. I see the necessity for this entertainment so long as the playgoer has no scruple about his dining. Max Beerbohm, who treats this subject with admirable philosophy, proposes that the theater shall open in the early morning. Let us take our drama, he says, after breakfast, when the mind has a dewy freshness. Let commerce and its toils be put off until the evening. This, I fear, is a poetic ideal, like asking the moon to shine in the morning and the sun to oblige about nine p.m. It is upon the playgoer's dinner that reformers must focus their energies."

A Defect of Reformers.

The newspaper despatch from Topeka, Kansas, about Mrs. Charles M. Sheldon's hired girl has been very popular, and acres of comment have appeared about it. The story is that the hired girl, who was new, had read in one of Mr. Sheldon's the-world-made-over stories that it was a good plan for the servants of a household to take their meals with the rest of the family, so she expressed to Mrs. Sheldon her willingness to follow that course, but Mrs. Sheldon dissented, and the girl left. This is thought to be a joke on Mr. Sheldon, but, remarks New York "Life," really it makes him appear in a good light as a reformer who respects the rights of others, and does not try to compel even his immediate family to share his social experiments. That is the way it is in the family of Tolstoi. He lives the ideal life, and goes barefoot, and cobbles shoes for recreation, but his wife and most of his children respect conventional customs, and live a life modified, but not stunted by his ideals.

A great and common defect about ordinary reformers is that they are not content to let their light so shine, but insist that every one whom they can control shall emulate their good works. Says the Women's Christian Temperance Union to the army, "We think it's wicked to drink beer, and you shan't have any." Says Mrs. Carrie Nation to Apollo Belvidere, "It is an outrage that you have no trousers on. Let me smash you!" Mr. Sheldon's way is better. He goes in for precept, and, maybe, example, but not for constraint. If the Women's Christian Temperance Union followed his example it might still distribute tracts to the army, but it would not legislate away the canteen, and Mrs. Nation, acting Sheldonwise, would be content to say to Apollo Belvidere, "Wear trousers, like me."

Good Hearts and Bad Manners.

An exchange tells about a judge more noted for his bad manners than his knowledge of law. He continually insults lawyers, litigants and witnesses—especially women—in the most outrageous way, and spares no one except certain members of the bar whose political influence he fears. Recently a young lawyer, having more backbone than discretion, perhaps, was bullied by His Honor beyond the limit of endurance, and began to talk back. With the aid of a cool head and a polite but sarcastic tongue the young practitioner soon had the bencher apoplectic and nigh to frenzy and yet lacking ground for holding the lawyer guilty of contempt.

When the case had been decided against the young man an older member of the bar said:

"You did not take the judge in the right way. He is cranky, but you should have humored him. At heart he is a pretty good man."

"His heart may be good," said the young man, "but his manners are bad; and I'm tired of humoring people whose hearts are so good that they feel privileged to be bullies and curmudgeons."

"Castles of Sand."

I.

Castles of Youth and Hope, and Joy,
Castles of Love without alloy,
Built in the heart of a woman; there
They were fashioned with tender care.

Built to withstand the blows of Fate,
Built to rebuff the hand of Hate,
With towers of silver, and turrets of gold,
And all the Love that the walls could hold.

'Twas a woman's hand that built them there,
And a woman's thought that made them fair;

But Youth is gone, and Faith is betray'd,
And Love has come, and laughed, and flown,

For a heart grew cold, and slain was Trust,
And the silver and gold all crumbled to dust;
Are only some mounds of shifting sand.

Castles of sand on a sunny shore
Of golden grains like a hoarded store,
Mounds of shining, glistening sand

Make Way For the Ladies.

In Michigan there is an Indian school where the children of the more or less noble redman are instructed in Anglo-Saxon graces and civilization. One of the teachers says:

It is very interesting to study these children, especially as we have them from four different tribes.

The boys have a sense of humor. In my flag-drill last Friday the partners were a boy and a girl, and where the lines intersect to form a cross I taught the boys to let their partners go first; and much trouble I had to do it.

After the exercises Isaac Crane came up to me, and in his solemn way said:

"How so, Isaac?"

"It is the custom for the man to go first, carrying his dignity, and for the woman to follow, carrying everything else."

Expensive Revenge.

Mankind is so constituted that it is sometimes not able to forget readily any slights or rebuffs endured, and the disposition to seek revenge is frequently uppermost in the thoughts. In Sheffield, England, it is said, there is a manufacturer who became furious with the local post-office people because of certain regulations they insisted he should follow in the matter of registered mail. After calming down, the manufacturer concluded he would have to toe the mark if he wanted his mail forwarded, but his revenge he would have, too. So every day for a month or more he sent each of his two hundred employees to the post-office to buy a single penny stamp. The employees were decorated with red tape, and seemed to enjoy hugely the making of their daily purchase.

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's [illegible]

Reach it and rough it and you'll soon get rid of that weak chest and that hacking cough." That is what the doctor said to a young married man with a wife and child to care for and a modest salary to support them on. He couldn't go West. Love and duty tied him to his desk in the city.

People don't have to travel to cure coughs or strengthen weak lungs. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures obstinate, deep-seated coughs, bronchitis, bleeding of the lungs, weakness, emaciation and other forms of disease which if neglected or unskillfully treated terminate fatally in consumption.

"I will write you what Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has done for me," says George M. Fetcher, Esq., of Dorton, Pike County, Ky. "Thirteen years ago I was wounded by a ball passing through my lung. I have had a bad cough almost ever since, with shortness of breath, and it was very easy to take cold; the slightest change of weather would cause the cough to be so bad I would have to sit up in bed all night. Could not eat or sleep at times; was all run down; could not work at all. A few months ago I began using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Have not used more than two bottles, and now can eat, sleep, and work, and I feel like a new man. I cannot find words to sufficiently recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, or tell the good it has done me."

Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser in paper covers is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only. The book has 1008 pages. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Coats of mail are now being manufactured from papier-mache that cannot be distinguished from real antique armor. According to the wishes of the customer, the armor can be turned out bright steel, silver and gold inlay, hammered brass, rusty iron or malachite. As described by the New York "Evening Post," the new goods are calculated to deceive the best critics, and to give all the satisfaction of the genuine coat of mail. They are warranted not to break easily or to cut any unfortunate guest upon whom they may happen to fall. All descriptions of armor can be had. The new invention has aroused the anger of the dealers in antique armor, who declare that it is intended to ruin their trade.

A well-known English firm of tobacconists are giving away in their packets of cigarettes a small map of the Klondike district. It is colored red, and the words "British Territory" are printed upon it in large letters. On the back is found the following little history of the gold fields: "There is no doubt that the Klondike district is the richest gold field yet discovered. It comprises some 192,000 square miles, mostly in British territory, and although mining has been going on steadily for the past ten years, it was only in August, 1896, that the extraordinary richness of the diggings was discovered." We have been accustomed to portraits of fat women and popular heroes for so long that the novelty is as pleasant as it is instructive.

Where He Failed.

The young man drew himself up to his full height.

"I have," he cried, "an unsullied character, an ardent heart, a versatile mind and strenuous biceps."

The young girl yawned and seemed interested. He was quick to push his advantage.

"I am the possessor of a town and country house, a yacht, a stable of thoroughbreds and a box at the opera."

She hesitated, and a slight flush betrayed that she was listening.

"I have got," he continued with a certain fierceness, "thirty servants, forty pairs of trousers, fifty ancestors, three automobiles, six prize bull pups and an army commission."

The young man shuddered.

He felt that he had lost. He had played nervily and high, but she was above his limit.—"Waverley Magazine."

Mrs. Fitz-Caudle—Ah, me! There was a time when you always called me "Daisy;" now it's "Mrs. Fitz-Caudle," as if I were the merest stranger to you. Fitz-Caudle—Found out my mistake, my dear. Daisies shut up at night. You don't.—"Pick-Me-Up."

"He may mean well," said the young doctor, "but I don't exactly like the tone of his letter."

"What's the matter?" inquired the old practitioner.

"Jones, the undertaker, writes and says that if I send my patients to him he will guarantee to give them satisfaction."—Judge.

"Miss Alice," said the nervy young man, "I think I will marry you."

"Indeed? Two very remarkable statements, sir!"

"Two? How two?"

"One that you will marry me; the other that you think."—Baltimore News.

"A good man has gone," wrote the editor of The Hickory Ridge Missourian, in winding up his obituary of Col. Wepjaw. "He was honored and respected by all, and a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors followed to the tomb all that was mortal of our distinguished citizen, except a leg he had the misfortune to lose while fighting bravely at Chickamauga thirty-eight years ago."—Chicago Tribune.

Anecdotal.

A Yorkshire miller, noted for his closeness in financial matters, was once in a boat trying his best to get across the stream which drove his mill. The stream was flooded, and he was taken past the point at which he wanted to land, while further on misfortune again overtook him, to the extent that the boat was upset. His wife, realizing the danger he was in, ran frantically along the side of the stream, crying for help in a pitiful voice, when, to her sheer amazement, she was suddenly brought to a standstill by her husband yelling out: "If I'm drowned, Molly, dunnot forget that flour's gone up two shillin' a sack!"

In the year 1871, when the Government of Monsieur Thiers was at Versailles, and before the National Assembly had decided whether the new constitution of France was to be monarchical or republican, the late Comte de Paris visited the palace at Versailles. Just as he was about to enter, M. Jules Simon met and recognized him. Bowing low, Monsieur Simon said with much gravity: "If we are a republic, count, you are in my house, and I shall be delighted to do the honors; but if we are a monarchy, then I am in your house, and cannot play the host." The Comte de Paris laughed and took Monsieur Simon's arm. "Ah, monsieur," he said, gaily, "let us go in together!"

A Philadelphian tells the story of a waiter at a restaurant in the Quaker City, who has lately announced that he has begun to study French. "Do you find it necessary here?" asked the customer. "Not here, sir," said the waiter, "but I've been offered a steady job in Paris at one of the hotels if I can learn French." "But Paris is full of French waiters," said the gentleman. "I'm afraid you're being deceived." "Oh no, sir!" said the man, with much earnestness and absolute simplicity. "It's a perfectly straight thing. The proprietor of the hotel says the waiters he has can't understand French as we Philadelphians speak it, and that's what he wants me for, you see."

"Who," asks "The Candid Friend," "does not recollect Lord Hardwicke, the Glossy Peer, immaculately tailored, riding an almost priceless horse in the Row of a morning, or walking down Piccadilly, his hat at an angle which defied the laws of gravity? Spontaneously witty, with that talent for repartee which is as rare as it is delightful, Lord Hardwicke was the best of good company, and one of the unforgettable social leaders of London in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. No one will have forgotten his famous answer to a well-known tailor who had been asked to stay in the house of a noble patron, and complained to Lord Hardwicke that the 'company was mixed:' 'Good Lord, man, you didn't expect to find 'em all tailors?'"

The late Joseph Cook was celebrated for his positiveness, which those who did not admire him termed "cocksureness." The Boston "Pilot" relates several stories in illustration of this. It says that when he went over to Scotland to demonstrate by practical experiment the dangerous effects of alcohol on the human brain, he beat up the white of an egg with spirits until the mass coagulated, but it did not convince his audience as he had expected. On the contrary, it only evoked from Professor Blackie the quiet remark: "That seems to prove that whiskey must be good for softening of the brain." But the cruelest sarcasm said of him was when Bill Nye demurely wrote: "I understand that my friend the Rev. Joseph Cook has completed a thoughtful essay entitled 'A Bird's-Eye View of the Kingdom of Heaven?'"

In the early Indiana days, when both judges and attorneys literally "rode the circuit," a newly elected judge, noted for his lack of personal beauty, was plodding along on horseback between two county-seats one fine summer day. Suddenly he was confronted by a hunter, who unslung his squirrel-rifle from his shoulder, and ordered the horseman to dismount. Somewhat startled by this peremptory command, the jurist began to remonstrate. He was quickly cut short, however, by the remark: "It's no use talking. I long ago swore that if I ever met a homelier man than I am, I'd shoot him on sight." The judge, sizing up the situation, promptly got off his horse. Folding his arms, he faced his assailant, and said: "If I am any homelier than you are, for heaven's sake do shoot, and be quick about it." Needless to say, his wit saved him.

Her Revenge.

This amusing story is told by the president of a New Bedford bank, and is repeated in a Boston paper. One day not long ago he and other officers and directors were engaged in a business meeting, held in the directors' room of the bank, and as they believed themselves secure from intrusion, were much surprised to see a poor little waif enter the room, something which a man of business affairs would not dare to do under such conditions. The little girl, shabbily clothed and pinched looking, had all unconsciously entered on forbidden ground, but this she didn't realize, and at once went to the men seated about the big table, offering them small cakes of soap for sale. The very first director whom she approached shook his head, impatient at the interruption of business, and said sharply, "I never use it." The tiny peddler, unabashed, went from man to man, all the others, out of pity for her wan little figure, buying of her. As she started to leave the room, after thanking each purchaser, the girl hesitated a moment in front of the director who never used soap, according to his own declaration, and, looking him over from head to foot, said, disdainfully, "Well, yer look it!" and then she swept out like a duchess.

A Fable For Fathers-in-Law.

MINISTER WU TING-FANG, the ambassador of China to the United States, was one of a number of speakers at the Presentation Day exercises of the Gallaudet College for the Deaf, recently.

Mr. Wu frankly confessed to some degree of embarrassment, this being his first experience in addressing an audience composed largely of deaf persons. He further intimated that the presence of the president of the college by his side, interpreting his remarks, sentence by sentence, to the mutes, was not calculated to lessen his discomposure.

Mr. Wu declared that deafness, though a handicap, is not so serious an affliction as is commonly supposed, and further, that the mysterious law of compensation steps in and bestows other talents and blessings.

Continuing, the minister said: "To most of us a little deafness at times would be a distinct advantage. I can, perhaps, more clearly illustrate this point by relating a Chinese story.

"About twelve hundred years ago a revolution raged in China, and the reigning king retained his throne chiefly through the sagacity and valor of one of his generals. The king deeply felt his obligation to the general, and in token of his gratitude consented that his daughter should wed the general's son.

"The wedding was duly solemnized, and the happy young couple commenced housekeeping in their own home. For a time everything was harmonious; then the course of true love became disturbed, as it sometimes does even at this advanced date in America. The young wife became haughty and referred to her ancestry; she was the king's daughter, while her husband was only the son of a general. The young man, nettled at this, reminded his wife that but for the aid of his father she would be the outcast daughter of a deposed king and that he was therefore as good as she.

"The young wife hurried to the king and poured the sad tale of her woes into his ear, not forgetting to emphasize her husband's allusion to him.

"The youth went to his father and told what he had said about the king.

"The general was instantly overwhelmed with the gravest apprehensions, fearing the vengeance of the king when he should learn of the treasonable utterances of the young man, and he made great haste to call upon his sovereign to forestall punishment.

"The king listened to all the general had to say, and then, in a fatherly way and with a twinkle in his eye, remarked:

"'That's all right, general. We fathers and mothers of young married folk must be deaf and dumb a good deal of the time.'"

The Up-to-date Chirography.

Gladys Helene Montague, her transparent gold ochre hair glittering in the sunlight, sat at her mahogany desk writing her answer to Reginald Fitzmaurice's proposal. Gladys's chirography was of the fashionable young ladies' seminary style, with three characters to perform the duty of twenty-six.

"My Dearest Girl: Your answer has made me the happiest man in the world. How did I dare to hope that you would stoop to bless such as I? I pray God that I may be worthy of you, my darling. I long to press you to my heart. Ever thine, Reginald."

"My Dear Miss Montague: On Wednesday I sail for Europe. If at any time you should change your mind, a word from you will bring me to your side. My address will be Brown, White & Co., London. Faithfully yours, Reginald Fitzmaurice."

"Dear Gladys: After a sleepless night spent in the vain endeavor to decipher your note, I have written these two answers. Will you kindly return immediately the one which does not fit the occasion? I cannot stand this strain much longer. Your anxious Reginald."—Detroit "Free Press."

Just a Glimpse.

Dorothy—The one with the black silk skirt, and rose petticoat, plaid blouse, purple colarette with silver clasp, tan coat, black hat with purple tips, carrying a silver-mounted card-case?

Papa—Yes.

Put on the Hot Weather.

"Shure, I am just drippin' wid sweat;
Me shirt an' me collar is wet,
I've a 'kerchief that cum from the store,
An' I've mopped at me face till it's sore.
Now I'm after thinkin'
In weight I'll be shrinkin'
If of this heat we have more.

"Shure, I was a grumblin' fool,
Not contint wid the weather when cool.
Faith, I've got the pay,
For it's hotter to-day,
Than I iver seen it afore.
Now Pat's going to grumble no more."

Farming Told on Him.

It was not a Canadian farmer of whom an English paper tells a story, although the incident might possibly be matched in this country. The agriculturist in question had been to a rent dinner to enjoy himself among men of his own walk in life, while his hard-working wife stayed at home and saw to it that the farm suffered no loss in his absence.

"I'm aboot tired out," was the man's greeting upon his return. "Is t' cows in t' barn?"

"Yes, long since," replied his spouse, barely stopping a moment from her duties to glance at him as she spoke.

"Is t' hosses unharnessed and fed?" he enquired.

"Yes."

"Fowls locked up?"

"Yes."

"Wood chopped for mornin'?"

"Yes."

"Them ducks plucked and dressed for market?"

"Yes."

"Yes."

"Oh, then," concluded the good man with a sigh of relief, "let me have my supper and turn in. Farmin' is beginnin' to tell on me."

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

Literary Pretense.

If all of us who in these latter days have acquired some repute of knowledge of literature were to be tried before a jury of real experts, it is to be feared, writes Guy Carleton Lee, that the vast majority of us would win this sentence: "Guilty of having gained a reputation under false pretenses." Let us be candid with ourselves, since the confidence need go no further. Have we really made ourselves familiar with English masterpieces? It were damning to confess ignorance of Chaucer, for example; let all who have read the "Canterbury Tales," to take but a portion of his works, mentally hold up their hands. The resulting show might not carry an election in the smallest election precinct.

Perhaps we have taken an unfair test. Chaucer is difficult reading to any but the scholar, and the quaint old words are apt to interfere with any pleasure in the reading. Let us return, then, to writers of a later date, whose language holds no obscurity of form. How many of us have read "The Faery Queen" from beginning to end? Perhaps some few, to whom literature is a profession, not a recreation; but of the rest of us who so glibly discuss Edmund Spenser and his influence upon poetry, and who talk learnedly of the Spenserian stanza, the vast majority are utter strangers to the works of the poet they praise.

The early dramatists, again. Most of us are vaguely aware that Marlowe wrote plays called "The Jew of Malta" and "Tamburlaine," and a dramatic poem entitled "Doctor Faustus;" but our knowledge of him stops there. Massinger, because of the occasional presentation on the stage of "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," is more familiar to us; but our acquaintance with him is strictly limited to that one work. Beaumont and Fletcher are by name "familiar in the mouth as household words," but some of us would be sorely puzzled to quote a line written by these old collaborators. Ben Jonson we know by his epitaph; but by his works we know him not. Shakespeare—ah! there we are safe; all of us have read him. Have we so? Along comes some villainous prier-into-secret-places and questions us of our knowledge of the "Sonnets;" and straightway we wish that we were dead or that Shakespeare had never been born to write twaddle that is called literature.

Dryden, again. He is sometimes talked of nowadays; is he ever read? And the dramatists of the Restoration—Wycherly, Congreve, Farquhar, Vanbrugh? And—for time [illegible] for the moment—Sidney and Harvey and Rochester and Herrick—oh, yes, we all know the quotation from the latter concerning the little feet which stole in and out; but, singular as it may appear, these lines were not the sole production of Herrick.

Pass on. Is Pope ever read nowadays? Who of us can ever give a list of his principal poems? It would be a good wager that ninety-nine out of a hundred among us, being asked to do this, would promptly exclaim: "The Essay on Man," and then continue: "Er—and—'The Rape of the Lock,' you know—and—h'm—oh, well, and all the rest."

Cowper—didn't he write something about a sofa? Southey? Oh, yes, he wrote "How the Water Comes Down at Lodore," and—and other things. Richardson? Addison? Steele? We seem to know these names—we are before our jury of experts now—but we cannot recall their writings for the moment. Swift? Oh, he wrote "Gulliver's Travels;" we read that when we were young; yes, we have entirely forgotten it, and recall no political satire in it. We know that Fielding and Smollett were very coarse writers; we do not remember any other characteristics. Ever read them? No, but we have read of them.

But, the attorney for the defence may urge, these are not names of giants; knowledge of their works is not indispensable. Waiving this point, the prosecuting attorney sternly demands if we have never claimed acquaintance with these men, if we have never referred to them with an air of easy nonchalance calculated—and intended—to impress our auditory with the fact that we were profoundly versed in their works. How many of us [illegible] can honestly answer "No"?

"Now," says the prosecuting attorney, "I have but one more question to ask you. You have often uttered Byron as out of date and [illegible]; have you ever read 'Childe Harold's Pilgrimage,' or that magnificent dramatic poem, 'Cain'?" And we answer desperately: "No; Byron is no poet; he is not literature; it would be waste of valuable time to read his stuff."

And then the attorney for the defence, in despair at our admissions, yet still fighting his case, asks us to name the works with which we are familiar, that we may show that our reputation is deserved. Sure of our ground, we go trippingly on with a list of the "Trilbies," the "Ladies of Quality," the "Richard Carvels," the—but here our attorney hastily bids us leave the stand, and submits the case without argument.

Is the picture overdrawn? We fear not.

A Volatile Community.

"What kind of a town have you here?" enquired a recently-arrived tourist from New England.

"Lively!" enthusiastically replied the landlord of the Atlantic and Pacific Hotel, at Boomopolis, Oklahoma. "Lively, stranger! Thar's a lynchin' most every night, and balls, shootin's, tar-and-featherin's, and other rallikaboos, about as often as you can turn out to 'em; a couple was married in a balloon last week, two prominent preachers shot each other considerably at the Sabbath school picnic day before yesterday, and thar was a cyclone less than a month ago; new buildin's are bein' erected right along, we've got an enthusiastic county-seat fight on hand all the time, thar's a show in the Op'ry House once in a while, the O. K. barber shop put in a bathtub lately, the post-office was burglarized a spell ago—the front of the buildin' was flung half-way across the street, the safe blown wrong side out, and the children have been busy ever since pickin' postage stamps off'n the gum weeds whar the wind distributed 'em. You can git any kind of a [illegible] and all any kind of [illegible] in [illegible] minute, by just lettin' your wants be known. They call this yere town the [illegible], and don't you forget it."

A Queer Conventionality.

THE royal English family is exceedingly domestic and affectionate; but there had developed among its members and the people connected with the court a strange surface dread of meeting the Queen, which was perfectly incomprehensible to outsiders. It was quite real on the part of her children, and was probably a remnant of their rather stern bringing up. The efforts they made to vanish into thin air when the Queen came upon them unawares were most ludicrous. From them the entourage caught the same spirit, which led to many amusing incidents. Says a writer in the "Century Magazine:" We were coming home from Whippingham Church, designed and built by Prince Albert, and where Princess Beatrice had been married the year before, when we suddenly came upon a royal group walking leisurely ahead toward Osborne Cottage. Naturally we slackened our pace, when, to our dismay, we saw looming up in the opposite direction certain white ponies and outriders. Caught between two fires, we paused a moment, took in the situation, and decided quickly that we had just time to scramble in safely before the Queen's carriage could draw up at the door. Seeing that the advance party had already turned into the vine-covered porch, we gave wings to our heels and bolted in, too, and there suddenly came upon the whole company saying good-bye to one another, nearly knocking them over in our mad haste. Prince —— and H.R.H. the —— of ——, seeing our breathless condition, and at the same time hearing horses' hoofs approaching, quickly guessed what the frightful danger was and left their conversation unfinished, having in common with us only one idea, that of getting out of the Queen's sight at once." Poor people or perfect strangers the Queen never minded seeing at all. It was only those whom she knew about that she did not care to encounter, as it would put her in the awkward position of being discourteous and passing them by, or else force her to stop and talk with them, when she felt disinclined to do so. Hence, out of deference to the Queen's supposed feelings, arose the etiquette prescribing that one must never be seen on her path. This grew into a stereotyped rule.

Wisdom From the Orient.

TAKING Chinese proverbs as they are found in the literature of that nation, they contain many gems of wisdom that cannot be claimed by any Western people.

A peculiar proverb exposing the works of Chinese idolatry runs as follows: "A maker of graven images does not worship the gods: he knows what they are made of." Speaking thus in regard to his graven-image gods, the Chinaman disposes of his real divinities in a manner equally quaint. The saying is attributed to Confucius: "Respect the gods, but keep them at a distance." Many of the proverbs of Cathay are remarkable for their insight. For instance, the following is by no means shallow: "The man of first-rate excellence is virtuous independent of instruction; he of the middling class becomes so after instruction. The lowest order of man is vicious in spite of instruction." Here, too, is a truth which carries far in a work-a-day world: "A single conversation across the table with a wise man is better than ten years' mere study of books." Again, the following is an example of much that might almost have been made to Socrates' order: "When the work of merit is done and reputation is coming, to get out of the way is the high road to Heaven." And, setting aside the wisdom of the wise, we find the last commentary of the pessimistic Chinaman on things in general in the following concise form: "For every soul that Heaven creates Earth provides a grave."

"L'Ouvrage."

The god of heart's desire, ignored, doth wait,
Whilst sated Wealth within the palace gate

Whilst he (to whom this god's an unloved guest),
For Wealth's soft, silken pillows of unrest.

"Splendid and terrible, the wage I deal;
To some, a curse; for others, balm to heal;
To-day, I hide; to-morrow, I reveal."
—Richard Sarace.

A Novel Enterprise.

"Harper's Bazar" states that a young woman in a Western city is adding very appreciably to an otherwise moderate income by making sandwiches. As usual with these nondescript businesses, the occupation came by chance. It fell to her lot once or twice to furnish sandwiches as her contribution to one or two fairs and festivals, and their excellence aroused comment. Then friends coaxed her into sandwich service now and then, till at last she took advantage of her evident specialty and became a professional at it. Many of her combinations are original, one of the moment being chopped pineapple mixed with a delicate cream cheese, the variety that is made from whipped cream. She does all the work herself, even to the designing of attractive little cards decorated with a seasonable flower upon which she prints in dainty script her assortment with prices. The success of her work undoubtedly lies in the limitation which she puts upon it—she will take no more orders than she can fill herself, and each sandwich which leaves her hand is as perfect as if it were the only one. She finds a demand for her products throughout the year, picnic sandwiches being one of her most frequent orders.

Mrs. Pretty—Isn't it strange? Mrs. Beauti has not put on mourning for her husband. Mr. Pretty—I understand that her late husband particularly requested that she should not. Mrs. Pretty—The brute! I s'pose he knew how lovely she would look in it.—"Pick-Me-Up."

The Actor's Summer.

THIS is the time of year, writes Alan Dale, the well-known New York dramatic critic, when I, fretfully and enviously, read the reports of the actor's summer. These reports are always gorgeously and artistically arranged. They are calculated to make any poor breadwinner repine. At the close of his "season," after having led a gilded butterfly life, with the plaudits of enthusiastic millions ringing in his ears, tired out with all this rapturous approval, and with just strength enough to gather in the colossal mound of shekels that have been showered at him—the actor goes to his "summer home" to live for three dreamy, wistful, sweetly inactive months, until the hungry public calls him back again.

They are all most anxious for us to know how they summer. If there were a commandment saying, "Thou shalt not covet thy actor's summer," I should break it hopelessly. I always regret my fate when these beautiful, rosy reports come in. Why should the actors alone possess the magician's wand that transforms a three-room flat in Harlem to a "mansion overlooking the Hudson," or a six-dollar-a-week boarding-house in Asbury Park to a "summer home by the Atlantic?" Why should the fairy gift of metamorphosing a Bloomsbury furnished room into a palatial hotel be exclusively confined to the actor?

Some of the profession are much better actors during their summer than they are during their thirty weeks of labor. How often has my riotous soul tossed in a frenzy of covetous discontent as I have watched the stalwart leading man on Broadway, hale, bronzed and picturesquely attired in tennis clothes, who has just rushed in for a day to see his banker! The magic wand and a little brown grease paint have, perhaps, done it all. He has walked down from East One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street, where his wife and seven children are spending the summer and the winter. But I don't know it, at the time, and in the actor's column headed "In Summer Places" I have read that he was wooing inertia and recuperating after an ardent season.

They all act these press agent parts so efficiently. They summer only because it is absolutely necessary for their health. They are always on the verge of nervous prostration, owing to the strain of "one-night stands." If they have been in New York all season, it is owing to the strain of New York. Managers are after them to play all summer. No company on earth has ever been known to close for any other reason than weariness. The actors summer because they can't work any longer. It is because the actors summer that the public goes to the seaside and the mountains. If the actors did not get so awfully tired the season would go right on revolving, without beginning or end, like a circle. It is in desperation because the actors won't let us go to the theaters any more that we say, "The season is over. Let us go out of town until Romeo and Juliet have recuperated."

How different it is in other walks of life! We snatch a scanty two weeks from the interminable fifty-two—and we are never missed. Nobody cares a hang whether we come back or whether we do not. Our goose is never a swan. Lucky actor! Thrice fortunate summerer! He never discovers—as, alas! we do—that the beautiful retreat, with fruit and shade trees, is a hideous barn with the shade furnished by hanging out clothes; that the adorable farmhouse with fresh milk and unequalled eggs is a fraud, and that the only glimpse of the fresh milk and unequalled eggs is caught as they are sent to the city; that the exquisite summer hotel is ugly with the cackling, tiresome gossipers of adjacent towns. Lucky actor! Thrice fortunate summerer! I envy you.

The First Firecracker.

There lived in China, years ago,
An odd old mandarin,
Whose temper was so peppery
They called him Sin-ah-sin.

He wandered through the crowded streets
In search of daily bread,
And wore a garment long and straight,
Which once was brightest red.

But worn in all the dust and rain,
In dampness and in dew,
It stiffened slowly with the grime,
And turned a dingy hue;

And like a cylinder became,
So long, and straight, and round,
It wrapped Ah-sin from head to heels,
And in it he seemed bound.

And out upon the collar high
His yellow queue hung down,
Till nothing of that mandarin
Was seen, but just his crown.

This robe so heavy did become,
That he could scarcely walk,
And o'er the top of it he tried
In vain, alas! to talk.

The boys they chaffed, and taunted him,
And missiles at him cast,
And called him shabby Sin-ah-sin,
As he went dragging past.

Though Ah-sin's blood did often boil
At cruel jest and jeer,
For while he wore that rigid coat
The lads had ne'er a fear.

Till so, one pleasant July day,
The gamins round Ah-sin
Said, "Let us have a little fun
With this old mandarin."

And stepping up applied a torch
To Ah-sin's precious queue,
When flashing forth a brilliant light,
They heard a noise, and whew!—

Go up in flame and smoke,
While o'er their heads, in tiny bits,
Flew pieces of his cloak.

With pent-up wrath he did explode,
That poor old mandarin,
And far from coats, and cares, and boys,
Went grimy Sin-ah-sin.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

APSLEY

—March came in like a lamb, therefore we may expect some rough weather later on. Having no weather bureau here we have to depend on local prophets, B—s and C—r, and a few old-time proverbs and signs, and one of the latter at least is reliable. On February 25th a large hen party drove through the village going south, which to some was a prediction of another cold wave, but towards evening they again drove through going north. Hens went high that we would have a big storm of rain with high winds and it came, almost a deluge.

—We have been informed, on reliable authority, that James Hindley, Esq., will be appointed superintendent of the water works at Jack's lake this summer. Jimmy will attend to his duties, no doubt.

—Spike Fred is home from the camp and has purchased a bicycle balloon and tells Tommy he is very ferocious, so look out.

—What do you think of a man who left home the other morning to purchase a gallon of coal oil, and when he got to the store found he had forgotten his oil can? Well, we can only attribute it to the cares of state.

—Our village would like to purchase a dog killer (a second hand one would do) as there is an idiot around here—perhaps more than one—who has gone into the dog poisoning business wholesale. Several valuable dogs have been poisoned lately. There is a very strong suspicion as to who the party is, and if it is proven it will be made interesting for him.

—Good butter is in demand. John Snow says he don't want any more bad butter, neither does his dog — it tastes bad.

—The O.M.L.C. held regular meetings during the past week. Anvil Jim told the other night that he had a hard time driving over the pitch holes this side of Lakefield. It was snowing hard when he started and after climbing through seven or eight had once struck level ground and was just going to make time when he heard a voice behind him. On looking back he discovered he had driven over a team and load of hay which was buried in one of the smaller pitchholes. Jim was at once presented with a card entitling him to be admitted to any other L. C. in the province. The President was also presented with a beautiful pearl handled knife on his return from Niagara. Trapper Ben was admitted on certificate and holds a very nice bronze medal. Factory Bob was initiated and promises to be a worthy addition to the club.

—Little Tommy gave a social ball and supper Friday evening, 7th inst. It was very successful, and the dance was kept up until near morning. Andy makes a good manager.

—Garry has become a resident of the village. Perhaps he is going into the livery business.

—A meeting was held the other day to appoint trustees and a building committee for the new Methodist church, the erection of which will now be pushed forward as rapidly as possible.

GOOD WORK

Proper Food Makes Marvelous Changes

Providence is sometimes credited with directing the footsteps by so simple a way as the reading of a food advertisement.

A lady out in Shelbina, Mo., says, "About two years ago I was compelled to retire from my school teaching because I was completely broken down with nervous prostration.

I suffered agony in my back. My hands and feet would swell up nights. I was in a dreadfully nervous condition, irritable, with a dull heavy headache continually, had no appetite and could not digest anything if I tried. I was unable to remember what I read and was, of course, unfit for my work.

Some said I had consumption, others said dropsy. One day as if by providence, I read the testimonial of a lady whose symptoms were much the same as mine, and she told me of how Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food had cured her, so I concluded to try it.

I left off the old fashioned breakfast and began with Grape-Nuts, a little fruit and a cup of Postum Food Coffee. That was 8 months ago, and I have steadily improved in both body and mind. Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food has done more for me than all the medicine I have ever taken, and I am now well again and able to return once more to my school duties and able to do anything necessary in my work.

My mind is clearer and my body stronger than ever before. Please do not publish my name." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

A SPOOK AT RICE LAKE

A Ball of Fire Creates Consternation in Hiawatha

Mr. Robert Davis, postmaster and stage driver of Hiawatha was in town yesterday and states that the residents of the village are in a very excited state over the supernatural appearance of a spook, in the shape of a glowing ball of fire which has appeared near the house of Alfred Crowe on four occasions quite recently.

One of Mr. Crowe's children is very ill and friends are obliged to sit up with the child all night. The watchers state that on four different nights a huge ball of fire has appeared and hovered around the house. The first time it appeared it rested for some time on the roof of the pump house and then slowly disappeared. The watchers became alarmed and the next night, when the thing appeared, it rested on the gate post, and Mr. Crowe went out to see what it was, the mysterious thing disappeared going in the direction of the cemetery. On its third appearance it frequented it usual haunts, and so alarmed the people in the house that they awakened Mr. Crowe who after hurriedly dressing, went out of the house, taking his gun with him. He fired a shot from the gun, but took no effect. The ball remained for a short time, then went away in the direction of the cemetery. On Saturday evening it appeared again but kept further away from the house. A number of the villagers have watched for the ball every night since, but it has not made an appearance. Among those who saw the eerie visitor are the Indian Chief and his wife.

It is rather hard to believe the story but it must be remembered that some years ago, a similar incident occurred near Brighton and the statement was verified by several responsible persons.

CHURCH NOTES

Special services will be held in the Mark street Church, Ashburnham, to-night and Friday night, beginning at half-past seven. These meetings are increasing in interest and attendance. Everyone is invited to attend.

A number of new maps have been purchased recently for use in the Sabbath school, which will prove very helpful.

The usual thank-offering will be taken up at the services on Easter Sunday.

Here Is The Proof

Mr. R. G. Irwin, Shelburne, N. S. Registrar of Probate and Registrar of Deeds is Cured of Rheumatism

Paine's Celery Compound

THE GREAT SPRING MEDICINE DOES THE GOOD WORK

To postpone at such a vital time as this the banishment of rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney disease, liver complaint, blood diseases and dyspepsia, is a serious mistake. The sick and suffering cannot with safety afford to lose a day before taking advantage of the curing virtues of Paine's Celery Compound.

Now is the best time to get well. Paine's Celery Compound taken to-day proves a life-giving food for the starved nerves and tissues. It drives uric acid and poisons from the system and clears out rheumatism and neuralgia so completely that they never return. Muscles and joints that have been stiffened and contracted for years become limber; wheeled chairs and crutches are put aside, and suffering is a thing of the past.

Mr. Irwin writes as follows for the benefit of all rheumatic sufferers: "Having been largely benefitted by the use of Paine's Celery Compound I gladly add my testimony as to its value. During six months I was disabled or crippled with rheumatism in my right leg, hip, and shoulder. Getting up and down stairs was a very painful and tardy exercise and for months I could do little better than drag my right leg. Paine's Celery Compound was recommended. I used six bottles and am clear of the pain. I firmly believe that the above medicine cured me of rheumatism.

DEATH OF MRS. ROSS

Passed Away Suddenly at Her Home This Morning

Toronto, March 13.—Mrs. Geo. W. Ross, wife of the Premier, died this morning at 4.30 o'clock.

Death came very unexpectedly. Mrs. Ross was apparently in her usual health until within twenty-four hours of the end. The cause of death was acute uraemia. Yesterday afternoon she became ill, and Dr. R. A. Stevenson, the family physician, was called in, and he subsequently summoned Drs. W. P. Cavan and Burritt in consultation.

Mrs. Ross drove to church on Sunday with the Premier, and on Monday morning went down town. This was the last she was out of the house, but there was no anxiety concerning her condition until Tuesday afternoon.

PHYSICIAN'S STATEMENT.

The following statement was issued by Dr. Stevenson: "Mrs. Ross, wife of the Premier, the Hon. Geo. W. Ross, died suddenly at 4.30 o'clock this morning. The cause of death was acute uraemia. She appeared to be in good health until within 24 hours of her decease. Dr. Stevenson, the family physician, was in attendance on Tuesday afternoon, and subsequently Dr. W. P. Cavan and Dr. Burritt were called."

In Seventy-two-Hours

The C. P. R. are arranging a magnificent fast train which will cover the immense stretch of land between Montreal and the Pacific shores in three days. For such a run the average time, including stops, is a fraction over forty miles an hour. To make this through time, however, a speed of sixty-five miles an hour will have to be maintained over certain sections of the line. Experiments made last summer showed that the plan was feasible. A tri-weekly service is proposed to leave either end of the line on Sundays, Thursdays and Saturdays. These trains will be run in addition to the daily service now given under the old schedule. The trains will consist of eight coaches, made up of a combined express and mail car, baggage car, two day coaches, diner, one tourist, and two first class Pullman sleepers. The engines will be of a very heavy type, of about 125 tons weight. A through sleeper will be run from Toronto to connect with the fast trains.

THE REBELLION SPREADING

Canton Viceroy Despatches Troops to Kwang-si.

Rebels Believed to be Former Soldiers of Marshal Su, Who Were Disbanded on His Promotion.

Hong Kong, March 12—The rebellion in Kwang Si province is spreading rapidly. Signs of unrest are already apparent at Kwe-Lin and Nan-King, the newly opened river treaty ports.

The Canton viceroy has despatched troops to the scene of the disturbances, and has stationed over 1,000 men at Kwe-Lin and Nan-King for use in case of eventualities.

The rebels are believed to be former soldiers of Marshal Su, who were disbanded on his promotion. Their propaganda, which has spread far and wide, includes the overthrow of the Manchu dynasty, the founding of a Chinese dynasty and helping the oppressed and needy Chinese.

Pekin, March 12—The government has ordered Marshal Su to resume command of the rebellious soldiers in Kwang Si province. It is doubtful if he will be able to control them, as it is necessary to pay them for overdue wages.

The French legation here has received a telegram saying that the rebels have killed a French officer.

Tumbled from Prison Gallery

Toronto, March 13.—John Bourke, a prisoner confined in the Central Prison, was killed at that institution yesterday morning by a fall from the second gallery, in which his skull was fractured. The man lived only a short time.

The prisoner did not leave his cell when the other prisoners were taken out at 7.30 o'clock yesterday morning, and when he was discovered by a cleaner, the occurrence was reported. Being aroused by a guard and ordered to go to the tailor-shop, Bourke left his cell and walked along the gallery to the end, where he staggered and fell sideways over the railing, twenty feet, to the floor below, alighting on his head. He was picked up in an unconscious condition, and was attended by the prison surgeon, Dr. Sloane. His skull was found to be fractured, the injury causing his death at 9.30 o'clock or about two hours later.

At the inquest last night, evidence was taken from two prisoners, the warden and Dr. Sloane, after which the jury found that death had been entirely accidental, and that no blame was to be attached to anybody.

Bourke, who was 67 years of age, was sentenced to the Central Prison for six months in North Bay on November 6th last for vagrancy. For some little time past he had been in rather poor health, during his confinement.

GREAT BRITAIN FEARS MORE DEFEATS AND FURTHER CALAMITIES EXPECTED

Body of 1,300 Troops, Under Command of Colonel Greenfell, May Be Annihilated or Captured by the Boers

General Methuen May Die from Wounds Received During the Battle, if He Should Recover He will be Unfit for Service—Methuen Has been Released

London, March 14.—Despite the despatches received to-day giving further details of the capture of General Methuen and the routing of his army the public feels that the British losses greatly exceed those given in the official account.

There is much anxiety over the fate of Colonel Greenfell and his 1,300 mounted troops, whom Methuen was to meet at Pooimentjesfontein.

The Daily Mail points out that this second force may be in danger of capture if not already taken by the Boers, who fooled Methuen by dressing in British uniforms and might easily play the same trick on Colonel Greenfell.

The news from South Africa to-day does not offer a single drop of comfort. A late dispatch to-night says that General Methuen is dangerously wounded and that even if he recovers he will never be able to enter active service again.

KITCHENER TO LEAD BATTLES.

It is learned at the War Office that Lord Kitchener will be relieved of much administrative work in South Africa in order to enable him to take the field in person and head a large mounted force in an endeavor to capture De Wet.

Well-informed military men say that Lord Kitchener will need 50,000 additional troops before he will be able to control South Africa or offer any sort of safety either to soldiers or civilians. They say the task is practically insuperable, for great areas demand attention in the eastern Transvaal, the western Transvaal, the Orange Free State and Cape Colony.

The War Secretary, Mr. Brodrick when asked in the House of Commons to-day what steps had been taken in view of the success of the Boers against General Methuen to send Lord Kitchener reinforcements, said 5,000 yeomanry should be immediately embarked with large drafts of cavalry and infantry. Lord Kitchener would be given all the assistance he asked for.

WILL PUSH THE WAR.

Even in the most conservative circles there is little disposition to minimize the incident, but everywhere is heard the determination to maintain the tradition that blows serve to strengthen and stiffen the British resolution. Lord Rosebery struck the popular note to-day in a speech before the Glasgow students. He admitted that it was heartbreaking after all the expenditure of life, time and money, but, he added:

"It will not dishearten us. We have got to see this thing through. We must take the blows which fortune deals us with equanimity, showing ourselves worthy of better fortunes."

Lord Rosebery expressed hope that more prosperous times were in store and that in the future "it would be our proud memory that when our country passed through the storm we did not for a moment flinch and were not for an instant dismayed."

SEE HOPE FOR BOERS.

Paris, March 14.—The disaster to General Methuen's column has caused a deep impression in Paris. The newspapers express the opinion that it will have a great moral effect in encouraging the Boers to more obstinate resistance. At the same time the papers do not speak so harshly of General Methuen, owing to his generous conduct in the Villebois-Mareuil affair.

The Temps says:

"Will England end by realizing that it is impossible to exterminate the Boers and that the only issue is negotiations for a treaty of peace acceptable to both sides?"

The Journal Des Debates, alluding to the demonstration of the Irish members in the house of commons yesterday, says: "The double and grave problem which England has to face could not rise up before her in a more menacing and mortifying manner than at the present moment."

London, March 14.—The War Secretary, Mr. Brodrick, announced in the House of Commons to-day that he understood that General Methuen, who was captured, severely wounded, by General Delarey, March 10, had been released, and was expected to arrive at Klerksdorp, South Western Transvaal, to-day. The general's condition was favorable.

Mr. Brodrick added that the exchange of General Methuen for Commandant Kritzinger had not been contemplated. The trial of the commandant had been postponed because considerable of the evidence to be presented had not been completed.

A FIGHT WITH DE WET IS DAILY EXPECTED

Finns Raise Protest Against Russian Edict — General Opposition to the Order Enforcing Compulsory Military Service

London, March 14.—A brief telegram, dated Heilbron, March 12, reports that General De Wet and ex-President Steyn crossed the main railway two nights previously, five miles north of Wolvehoek, going west.

It is assumed here that this means that General De Wet is trying to join General Delarey. Wolvehoek is about twenty miles south of the Vaal River, and a force going westward from that place would go straight to Klerksdorp and General Delarey's country. A march of about 120 miles would bring the force to the scene of General Methuen's disaster, but before Gen De Wet can join the victorious commandoes in the Western Transvaal he must cross the Vaal River and force another line of blockhouses.

A telegram sent from Pretoria Tuesday reports that the British columns are in touch with De Wet and Steyn and consequently renewed fighting may be expected.

BRAVE AND MODEST

Berlin, March 14. — General Methuen, who was British military attache at Berlin from 1877 to 1881, made many friends while here. Among the stories related of him is that upon one occasion, when he was going to the palace to visit Emperor William in 1881, he jumped into the Spree and saved the life of a drowning child.

The time required to change his clothes made him late at his audience with the Emperor. For this he apologized, but did not give the reason for the delay. A few days later, at a reception in the palace the Emperor drew the British attache aside and pinned the Rescue Medal on the lapel of his coat.

BOER PRISONERS ESCAPE

Paris, March 13.— Five Boer prisoners, who escaped from Fortress Peniche, Portugal, have arrived here. They will return to South Africa, to take part in the war after they have paid a visit to Mr. Kruger in Holland.

BOER LEADERS KILLED.

Cape Town, March 14. — During a skirmish near Pearston, Cape Colony, March 12, between some British troops and Commandant Myburgh's force of Boers, Commandant Ovendaal and Field Cornet Vander Vall were killed.

TENTH CORPS FROM NEW ZEALAND.

London, March 14. — A despatch to the Times from Wellington, N. Z., says: —Premier Seddon guarantees that New Zealand will subscribe her share, on the population basis, toward strengthening the Australian forces in South Africa. Arrangements will be made for rapid mobilization of the 10th New Zealand contingent for service in South Africa, if it is needed.

BOER ATTACK FEARED

New Orleans, La., March 13.—The officers of the British mule transports here are alarmed at the attitude of the Boer agents and sympathizers. The captain of the British transport Montreal, which is loading with mules at Chalmette, waited upon Sheriff Nunez, of St. Bernard, yesterday and stated that he had reason to believe that his vessel would be subject to an attack similar to that on the Mechanician, against which a dynamite torpedo was floated, and asked for protection. Deputy sheriffs were detailed to protect the Montreal against Boer attacks.

London, March 14.—A despatch to The Times from Helsingfors says the Finnish clergy in many parishes refuse to read out in the pulpit the Russian military service edict. In the capital as a consequence of the attitude of the clergy, the task was committed to a feeble-minded clergyman, who was twice prevented by vigorous protests from reading the edict. Many communes have been fined for refusing to elect members of the conscription boards which have to carry out the edict. The entire medical board of Finland has resigned rather than appoint officers in connection with the levy. Several press censors have been prosecuted for trespassing in private houses in search of unauthorized prints.

CRISIS ARISES IN ALBANIA.

London, March 13.—The Times reprints a letter published in Vienna, which says the Albanian question has taken on an acute and dangerous character, owing to the economic crisis. It is impossible for people to find work as the country has no industries, while agriculture and cattle breeding have declined because of the hostility of the Government to enterprise, while estates do not yield one-tenth of what they once did. Owing to the general discontent with Turkish rule the national party is gaining recruits.

AMERICANS AND THE CORONATION.

Paris, March 13.—The London correspondent of the Paris edition of The New York Herald says: "I have been talking with one of the smartest American ladies in London, and gather from her that it is quite a mistake to assume that London will be over-run by the better class of Americans during the coronation season. They justly argue that London will not be enjoyable this year from their point of view."

London, March 13 —A correspondent of the Daily News, wiring from Copenhagen, says authentic reports have reached there from St. Petersburg saying that the revolutionary movement is spreading in all directions and assuming serious proportions.

The unrest has reached many parts of Siberia. The governor of Tomsk has issued an order prohibiting meetings of citizens in the towns and villages throughout the province.

Troubles are reported at many places in Siberia, including Novonikolaievsk, Biisk, Mariinsk, and Barnaoul.

LACROSSE.

Everything looks favorable for a rousing meeting of lacrosse enthusiasts in the Y.M.C.A. to-night. Peterborough has already landed two championships—rugby and hockey—and now for a third. There is certainly enough good material for to get a good strong team in the field, and no doubt when the lacrosse season opens, Peterborough will have a team that will give a good account of themselves, and of which the town will be proud.

A very large and enthusiastic meeting was held in the T. A. S. rooms last night for the purpose of considering the formation of a lacrosse team under the auspices of the Athletic Association.

The following officers were elected:
President—John O'Brien.
Vice-President—W. J. Devlin.
Secretary—Geo. Giroux.
Treasurer—Geo. O'Brien.

The team will be composed altogether of members of the society, and will be known as the T.A.S. Lacrosse Club. The secretary was instructed to write to the secretaries of teams in other towns with the view of arranging a series of matches to be played for a trophy. Also to see if a league can be formed in this district.

The colors of the club will be red, with a black border. After further discussion, a committee consisting of Messrs. Begley, Giroux, Sharp and Murty were appointed to attend the lacrosse meeting at the Y.M.C.A. to-night.

The meeting adjourned until Thursday evening next, March 20th.

London will likely make application at the annual convention of the C.L.A. to play in the senior series.

HOCKEY.

The Montreal hockey team was defeated by the Victorias, of Winnipeg, last night, in the first game of the Stanley Cup series, by a score of 1—0. The ice was in good condition, and the game was very close and exciting.

Stratford is indignant because the O. H. A. enforced the rules and threw out its protest. Its threat to leave the O. H. A. and join another organization will not affect the stock market.—Toronto Globe.

Galt blames the referee for its defeat by Peterborough. It is the old story of a beaten team that wants to win at all hazards. It is mighty hard to bear defeat in some hockey towns.—Mail and Empire.

There is a lack of harmony among the members of the ladies' hockey team. This has caused a feeling of coldness between some of the players which is quite as chilly as the pure crystal on which the games are played. The difficulty is caused by the division of the finances which fell to the ladies after the recent game with the Sorosians of Belleville. Five of the young ladies, knowing the pressing need of the hospital for a Nurses' Home, wanted to give the lump sum to that institution, while three of the fair hockeyists wanted to give the money to Queen's Athletic Association. There is one thing certain, that about $15 of the amount will go to the hospital. Whether the Athletic Committee refuses to take the balance of the money or not, remains to be seen.—Kingston News.

Stratford's Kick.

Stratford, March 12.—For a long time past the Ontario Hockey Association has had it in for Stratford every time it had half a chance. Stratford got it in the neck last night. The climax was reached when the junior hockey team's protest against the last goal in the U.C.C. match played last week, and the ruling of the referee in the case of the tie, was turned down, and the championship awarded to U.C.C.

Indignation is so strong here that the chances are that Stratford teams will never again give the O.H.A. an opportunity to jump onto them. The players and the management are so disgusted that they declare that Stratford next season will form part of a western league which will be entirely independent of that association. This idea is not new by any means. For years past the management has been approached by western teams to form a league, and have refused, and remained loyal to the O.H.A.

After the treatment on Tuesday night, and after sending the junior team to play a sudden-death game with Penetang at Barrie, a hundred and fifty miles from home, while Penetang only had about thirty miles to go, which happened only recently, not to mention other instances in which Stratford has been sat upon, the boys think it is high time they quit the O. H. A.

THE RING.

American Boxers in England.

New York, March 12.—B. H. Lee and W. A. Gavin, who are arranging a boxing and athletic carnival for the National Sporting Club, of London, to be held next June in London, after a confab yesterday with Billy Madden, Sam Fitzpatrick and Dr. Ordway, at the Gilsey House, clinched the matches arranged on Monday for Gus Ruhlin and Tom Sharkey by finding opponents for them. Ruhlin is to be paired against Kid McCoy, and Sharkey is to tackle Peter Maher. At first there was some objection to having McCoy meet anyone in the carnival owing to the unsavory talk which his mill with Jim Corbett created after they battled at Madison Square Garden nearly two years ago. But this objection was overruled, as McCoy is the only man outside of Jeffries or Fitzsimmons available for the "Akron Giant" to face just now. The Englishmen went to Philadelphia yesterday to see Peter Maher and get his signature to the articles of agreement. Sharkey has already signed, and Maher will no doubt do the same. Madden says that Ruhlin is willing to fight McCoy, and the foreigners declared that they received the "Kid's" sanction to such a match before they sailed to this country.

A rival for Tommy Ryan has also been found. Philadelphia Jack O'Brien is to be his opponent. The limit of all the "goes" will be twenty rounds each town to be of three minutes' duration. Pat Daley, the Fourth Ward lad who went to England several years ago, will put on the mitts with Eros. Joe Walcott will probably face either Tommy West or Charlie McKeever, as there is no in his class on the other side. Harry Harris is another American pugilist named to figure in the carnival. Ben Jordan is his prospective adversary. Benny Yaegar, the "Tipton Slasher," may also appear in one of the bouts.

Fitz Not Anxious.

Robert Fitzsimmons is apparently not excessively eager for a bout with James J. Jeffries. The freckled gentleman from Bath Beach raises trivial objections to the holding of the contest the latter part of April. According to the Californians, the racing season will end there April 27, and it will be necessary to hold the bout April 26 or 27 in order to secure the attendance of the turfites. Fitzsimmons says the bout was set for May 15, and he will not fight a day sooner. When the question of changing the date was brought to his attention, Fitzsimmons said:

"Not for me. I am going to be in condition for this fight, and I am not going to cut one week off of what I think is the proper training to suit anybody. I am going to win and then I am going to retire and die the champion."

"But you would get more money at the fight if it is held in 'Frisco before the racing crowds leave there," suggested someone. To which Fitz replied:

"If it is a question of money, or a chance to win the fight I will throw away the money before I will throw away my chances. Don't overlook that. If you think I am going into this fight just for the money there is in it, you're mistaken. There is a difference of 20 per cent between the winner's and the loser's end, and we will also fight 'winner take all' of the pictures, to say nothing of such a little thing as the championship title.

"You can rest assured, and all my good friends can be easy in their minds that I will not miss a single trick, but will go into the ring with Jeffries in the best condition I can get into."

From now to April 27 would give Fitzsimmons fully seven weeks of training, and he has been working for nearly a month as it is.

Fitzsimmons' assertion that there is 20 per cent difference in the purse to the boxers, is unfounded. The purse to be divided, 60 and 40 per cent., the loser receiving but 10 per cent. less than the winner, nearly an equal division.

From Fitzsimmons' attitude, the impression has spread that he is not over-anxious to again meet the boilermaker.

WRESTLING.

New York, March 12.—George Bothner and Tom Jenkins seem to be wanted at the carnival to be held in England. Jenkins will be pitted against Jack Carkeek and Bothner will compete with either Joe Carroll or Tim Reilly.

Hamilton, March 12.—Last night Dan McLeod, the local wrestler, threw Charles Reinecke, the Pittsburg wrestler, five times in 55 minutes, 21 seconds. To win the match he was to throw him that number of times in an hour. Four of the falls were gained with half Nelsons and crotch. The other was a whole Nelson leg hold, and was quite spectacular. There were two preliminary matches. Dutch Sarr threw Bert Cooley, a pupil of Jenkins, twice. The first go was between boys, Mat. Drouteduski and Young Moriarity. The Italian won in two straight falls. Thomas Coxlon was referee, and Nelson Pitton master of ceremonies.

GOLF.

Ocala, Fla., March 14.—A number of the most expert amateur golfers in this section of the country are taking part in the two days' tournament which began here to-day. The programme provides for scratch and handicap contests, for both women and men. Handsome cups will be awarded the winners.

SEVENTH CABLE CHESS MATCH.

New York, March 14 — Chess players the world over have been looking forward with intense interest to the international championship match between the United States and Great Britain, which opens to-day. It is the seventh contest of the kind between the two countries. The prize is a magnificent challenge cup offered by Sir George Newnes. The match is on eight boards. The quarters of the London club and those of the Brooklyn chess club will be connected by cable this morning. The rooms of the club no doubt will be thronged with enthusiastic chess players. The battleground of the American team is the Academy of Music in Brooklyn. At 9.30 o'clock New York time, the players of each team will take tables and await the word to move. This will be given precisely at 10 o'clock. The London play will be carried on in the large club room of the British Chess Club in the Cannon Street Hotel. The cable and telegraph wires making direct connections between the two rooms aggregate 3,483 miles, but, notwithstanding this great distance, the players are brought as close together as though they were sitting face to face. There will be an intermission of one hour at 2 o'clock, and play will then be resumed and continued until 7 p.m. If the match is unfinished to-night, the play will be continued to-morrow. The American team this year is an unusually strong one, including such famous experts as Showalter, Howell, Barry, Voigt and Hymes. In the six contests already held the Americans are a little ahead. The first was won by the United States, the second and third by Great Britain, the fourth and fifth were again won by the United States and the match of last year ended in a draw. Three successive victories are necessary for permanent possession of the Newnes trophy.

DAIRYMENS' CONVENTION

Held in the Town Council Chamber Yesterday Afternoon

A meeting of the dairymen and cheesemakers was held yesterday afternoon in the Town Council Chamber. The attendance was very good and representative.

Mr. D. Derbyshire, President of the Eastern Ontario Dairymens' Association occupied the chair. In a few words he explained the objects of the meeting and then called on Mr. L. A. Zufelt, instructor at the Kingston Dairy School who delivered a very able address on "The Care Handling and Manufacture of Milk. He entered fully into the subject and told of the best way of taking the milk from the cows. The milk must be kept perfectly clean and free from all foreign substances. It must not be allowed to stand in pails or cans in a room or building where there are any bad smells or gasses, as the milk would rapidly absorb these and make it bad. Also great care must be taken in what is fed to the cows. No turnips or rape should be fed as they will leave a strong taint on the milk, which is always noticable in the manufacture of cheese and butter. Dealing with the manufacture of cheese, Mr. Zufelt said that there were a great many changes the Association proposed to have made in the cheesefactories in the country. At the present time there were very few factories that had a proper curing room and as this was a very important part of the factory it would be necessary to have the curing rooms altogether renovated. He considered the best result could be obtained from building a curing room on a side hill and making the floor and walls of cement. The temperature must be kept at about 60 degrees. This building if properly ventilated would always remain clean and sweet. The boxes for shipping the cheese in, are at present of a very poor and cheap quality and were often broken open before they arrive in England. The cheese wrappers are of a poor quality and take a great deal from the appearance of the cheese. At the conclusion of Mr. Zufelt's address, Mr. Derbyshire stated that he was sure the address would be greatly appreciated by those present. In a few well-chosen words he introduced Mr. Glendenning who delivered a very able and interesting address on "How to Feed and Handle the Dairy Cow." He pointed out the great difference there was between a good dairy cow and the usual animal found in the country. The dairy cow, was a cow for milk, and not for beef. It is an impossibility to have both qualities in one animal and be a success. After getting a good cow the next thing was the proper way to feed the animal. If a cow is intended for a milk producer, then the animal must be fed on food for the making of milk. If for beef then the foods best suited for the making of flesh. For dairy purposes he recommended a diet of corn allage, clover hay and bran, as these foods were very productive of milk. He would not feed turnips to a milk cow on any consideration. He said a great many farmers were altogether ignorant of the value of clover hay for feed. He said if bran was worth $18 per ton, good clover hay was worth $13.25 per ton. Farmers were always anxious to sell clover hay at almost any price. In many cases they did not receive more than $6 to $7 per ton for it. He considered the farmer was losing money on every load of clover he sold. The trouble with farmers was they tried to feed their cattle the year round as cheap as they possibly could. If they spent a little money on their stock they would make much more from them. At the conclusion of Mr. Glendennings' address Mr. Derbyshire was asked a number of questions about the cheese factories and the staff of inspectors. In reply the audience was informed that as the government had given the association a larger grant than formerly they were in a position to put more factory inspectors in Ontario than in former years and they would see that the factories this year were in better condition than formerly. This was necessary to secure a better quality of cheese, and the quality must be improved if we are to compete on the English market with other countries. Certain rules would be drawn up and factories that did not comply with these rules would be made known throughout the country.

Mr. E. M. Elliott, President of the West Peterborough Farmers Institute addressed the audience and moved that a very hearty vote of thanks be tendered to the speakers for their very interesting and instructive addresses. The motion was carried unanimously and was responded to by the speakers.

The meeting adjourned after singing the National Anthem.

As the dairy season [illegible] expected that another of these lectures will be given then and it should be largely attended.

NEW YORK IRISHMEN CELEBRATE OUR LOSS

Loud Hurrahs Over the Capture of Lord Methuen in South Africa

GRIST OF NEWS FROM BIG CITY

The Departure of the German Prince Gives the New Yorker Time For Other Duties

(Special Telegram to The Times)

New York, March 14 — The capture of General Methuen by the Boers has been hailed with great acclaim by the Irish societies in this city. At a meeting of the Clan-Na-Gael last night cheers were given for the Boers. Several of the leading newspapers are indulging in considerable tail-twisting.

PRINCE HENRY

Now that the chief object of public interest has vanished in the departure of Prince Henry of Prussia to his beloved fatherland, New Yorkers are turning their attention to the various political matters that are rapidly coming to the front as forerunners of the coming autumn campaign.

CITY HALL MARRIAGES.

Undoubtedly the crusade against the City Hall Marriage Bureau which President Cantor is leading, is warranted by the facts, for there have been flagrant abuses there, but if the Bureau is abolished New York's famous lower East Side will miss it. There are solemnized on an average 1,800 marriages a year in the dark basement room called the "bureau," and frequently City Hall loungers are furnished with a picturesque scene. The best patrons of the establishment are Italians, but couples of all nationalities and ranking from the nobility to peasantry have wedded in the bureau.

A NEW THEATRE.

Only a few days more and the famous old Grand street store of Lord & Taylor will be closed and the building converted into a Hebrew theatre. For nearly half a century Grand St. was a centre of the retail trade, but its glory has departed. It has only been a few months since the big Ridley store there was closed and with the going out of existence of the Lord & Taylor establishment another of Gotham's land marks is destroyed.

ST. PATRICK'S DINNER.

The 118th dinner of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick will be given here on Monday evening next. United States District Attorney William Michael Bryne, of Wilmington, Del., will speak and Mayor Low will answer for the city and Bishop Conaty, of the Catholic University, for "The day we celebrate." Governor Odell has promised to attend, but being in mourning for his mother, has cancelled his social acceptances.

A DECIDED SUCCESS.

The new system of offering city bonds as required by the revised charter is a success. Heretofore, bonds could be allotted in bulk to syndicates offering to take "all or none" at a specified price. No all or none bids are permitted, and bonds are now allotted to the highest bidders, regardless of the amounts bid for. In other words, the loan becomes a "popular" one, in that small investors have an equal chance with the large.

FOR THE EMPLOYEES.

New York enjoys the distinction of being the first city in the country in which a street railway company has instituted a pension system. The Metropolitan street railway has established law to this effect and provides for voluntary and involuntary retirement of all employment between the ages of 65 and 70 years who have been in the service continually for twenty-five years. The pension fund will be supplied by the company and the employees themselves will not be asked to contribute. The plan is the scheme of President Vreeland.

Women's Transvaal League Plans a Reception and Benefit

Chicago, March 14 — The Women's Transvaal League of Chicago held a reception and benefit for the helpless women and children of the Boer prisoners in the Bermuda Islands last night at Trinity Reformed Church, Chicago. The chief speaker of the evening was Caroline Bartlett Crane, who spoke on the subject, "Why I am a Pro-Boer."

Rev. Mr. Pfanstiehl of Highland Park, also spoke.

Miss Genevieve Birkhoff sang the Transvaal national hymn and there was an exhibition of curios made by the prisoners which were offered for sale.

Will the Discovery End All Necessity to Work for Food

London, March 13 — Considerable attention throughout Europe is being directed to a book just published in Berlin by Prof. von Halle urging Germany to press, and, if necessary, to force Holland to enter the German Empire, together with the Dutch colonies. The significance of the brochure lies in the fact that this is a recognized means of forming German opinion and foreshadowing national policy.

Prof. von Halle affirms that the cause of Germany's failure to become a great sea power is the position of Holland at the mouth of the Rhine, which mouth she refuses to improve. She draws sustenance from German labor and yet refuses to share German burdens, preferring to occupy a position in which in time of war she might be a positive danger to the stronger State.

He bids the Dutch distrust English assurances of protection, which have always ended hitherto for Holland in taking her colonies, and he promises her, if she will agree with Germany to give her support which will enable her to avoid the fate of Manila and Porto Rico.

The professor concludes by advocating energetic means for the pressure of his policy, such as differential rates for Dutch goods sent by rail through Germany, which would, he observes, greatly interfere with Dutch commerce. This advice is closely in accord with the old Prussian idea that the way to make a defendant love you is to thrash him well.

It is necessary to point out that the independence of Holland is guaranteed not only by Great Britain but by France and Russia. Professor von Halle's book must further antagonize Dutch opinion of Germany, which is already bitter.

BOERS APPEAL TO SECY. HAY.

They Ask to Seek Alleviation of Conditions in Concentration Camps

Washington, March 13 — Dr. Heinrich Miller, the Boer representative in Europe, who came to this country with the Special Commissioners, Wessels and Wolmarans, had an interview with Secretary Hay to-day. Dr. Miller appealed to Mr. Hay to take some action in the name of the United States Government to induce Great Britain to alleviate the conditions in the concentration camps in South Africa, which he described as horrible. The mortality, he asserted, was very heavy, amounting in some camps to 60 per cent. of the persons concentrated.

While Mr. Hay did not give Dr. Miller a definite answer, the views of President Roosevelt on the subject not having been ascertained, it is not likely that the Government will make any representations to Great Britain. The matter is a delicate one in a diplomatic sense, and the British Government might resent any attempted interference with its domestic affairs.

WHAT SHE SAW IN HEAVEN

Miss Dohner Also Says She Had a Peep Sat Satan's Domain

Mishawaka, Ind., March 13 — While in a trance for thirty hours Miss Myrtle Dohner, daughter of a farmer, says she experienced a transition from earth to heaven. In a statement given to Rev. W. G. Tracy, pastor of Zion's church, she says she was first ushered into a heaven where Christ sat upon a throne in magnificent splendor, surrounded by hundreds of angels waving palms. There were also many others, all robed in spotless white, and myriads of children graced the scene. Christ beckoned unto her, and the entire populace of the brilliant realm sang praises to the Lord.

Next she was led into a different world. All was black and in a lake of fire. Satan's subjects were writhing in pain and begging for mercy. Satan smiled in derision at the suffering ones and asked Miss Dohner to follow him, but a guide interposed.

Miss Dohner is one of ten who passed into a trance at a revival meeting in Salem church. While in this state she spoke the names of three persons, declaring they had just become Christians. The three joined the church at that hour, but the girl was four miles from the scene where the conversion was recorded. It might be mentioned that there are good telephone connections.

Tendency of Catarrh is to Spread

Just a slight matter at first, and because slight, neglected; but the seed sown brings forth a dangerous harvest, consumption, which is the harvest of death. Better spend a few moments each day inhaling Catarrhozone, an aromatic antiseptic that relieves at once, clears the nasal passages, and restores lost sense of taste and smell. The immediate effect of Catarrhozone is magical, so prompt and efficient. Cure is certain and permanent if you use Catarrhozone. Price $1, small size 25c., at druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

In view of the application being made to the parliament of Canada for a measure to establish municipal ownership of such public conveniences as telephones, etc., so far, at least, as new lines are concerned, some facts from the experience of the city of Glasgow, where municipal ownership has been the practice for years, may not be uninteresting.

From returns recently published, we find that in Glasgow a year ago a working man's week was sixty hours, or ten hours a day for six days. This year it is fifty-four hours, the working day being reduced to nine hours. This year the wages have been increased one-seventh, or fourteen per cent. These facts relate to the street railway, but similar instances could be cited from other lines of work carried on by the city. The city's street railway department also has a pension system. There are no dismissals in consequence of old age, though men are not kept on duty after their usefulness has gone. After fifteen years' service a man has a right to retire, if he be unable to work, and he gets one-quarter of his weekly pay as long as he lives. After twenty-five years' service the employes are retired on a pension equal to three-quarters of the highest wages they have received. The receipts from the operation of all the public services by the city practically pay the cost of the municipal government, too.

There is much to be said in favor of attaching a proviso to all franchises hereafter given to corporations in this country, whereby the services can at any time be taken over by the municipality in which such service is operated, on given notice, and at an appraised valuation. Provision is made in granting charters to railways whereby the same can be taken over by the Government of the Province or Dominion, according to which power grants the charter. The experience of Glasgow certainly shows how important to a community are the franchises which are so often in this country given away to corporations.

The Registrar-General's report, just issued, states that the total population of Ontario in 1891 by the census was 2,114,321; and in 1901, 2,182,947, showing an increase of 68,621. Taking the figures of the municipal census and completing them by using the census figures for Muskoka and Parry Sound, Nipissing and Algoma, where the municipal returns had not yet been completed, it was found that the population was in 1891, 1,918,465, and in 1900, 2,291,751, showing a difference of 373,286.

There will be no change in the Assessment law at this session of the Legislature, except in regard to the "scrap-iron" feature, upon which Hon. Mr. Gibson has secured the approval of the Municipal Committee for a clause which provides in effect for the assessment of ways, rails, poles, wires, gas and other pipes, mains, conduits, substructures and fixtures, which shall be assessed "at their actual value, as the same would be appraised upon the sale by the company to another company possessing similar power, rights, and franchises." This seems to be plain and unequivocal, though it would hardly be safe to gamble on the interpretation which a Bench of Judges may put upon it.

Labor-Saving but Oath-Producing.

SPEAKING of the introduction in Eastern telephone exchanges of the "line-busy" phonograph attachments, the "Argonaut" remarks that in the effete East these innovations may possibly be tamely received, but they had a short life in San Francisco. When some bright telephone clerk conceived the plan of saving another clerk's wages by putting on a phonograph to say, "Line is busy," it was received with rejoicing by the telephone stockholders in San Francisco. But the telephone subscribers did not like it at all, and did not hesitate to say so. On the first day of the innovation the startled telephone subscribers listened in wonder to the mechanical moaning, squeaking and buzzing of the phonograph droning out: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy—line—is—busy— we —will —call—you." The machine, naturally, was deaf to expostulation or enquiry. To polite dissent and to fiery oaths it returned the same monotonous groan: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy." Goaded by this automatic barking, the most mild-mannered men became temporarily maddened. On that famous first day the telephone scenes in the various clubs were peculiar. From the telephone closets there would come at intervals wild bursts of oaths and sometimes maniac laughter. The attendants would hasten to the telephone temple, and assist forth congested millionaires, purple-faced, pop-eyed, apoplectic. They were speechless—all they could do was to shake their fists at the telephone. When a mining millionaire from Mexico, newly arrived that day, suddenly burst out of the telephone closet clamoring for an axe with which to attack the instrument, the club manager grew apprehensive. When, later in the day, an alcoholic millionaire could not wait for an axe, but demolished the telephone with a heavy, silver-headed cane, the manager concluded to take prudential measures and ask the telephone company to switch off the phonograph. Which was done. This was the end of the telephone-phonograph in the San Francisco clubs, and not long after it was disused throughout the city generally. This experience is respectfully submitted by the "Argonaut" for the consideration of Eastern cities.

Suicide Contagious.

Mayor Morse, of Emporia, Kan., asked the editors of Emporia papers recently to refrain from publishing details of suicides. He said that the publication of such details had caused an epidemic of suicides in that community in the last two years. He had consulted with the Board of Health, and thought that if the papers would not comply with his request he had a right to stop summarily the publication of suicide details under a law providing for the suppression of epidemics.

"If the paper," he said, "on which these local papers are printed had been kept in a place infected with smallpox I could demand that the papers quit using that paper or stop publication. If they spread another contagion, the contagious suggestion of suicide, I believe the liberty of the press is not to be considered before the public welfare, and that the courts would sustain me in using force to prevent the publication of papers containing matter clearly deleterious to the public health.

"However, no such steps need be taken. Mr. White, of the 'Gazette;' Mr. Strong, of the 'Republican,' and Mr. Yearout, of the 'Times,' are in sympathy with me in this movement and will suppress the details of suicides until the epidemic subsides."

Where There is No Degeneracy.

A delightful article by Mr. Frank Beddard, of the London Zoological Gardens, in the "Pall Mall Magazine," makes one suspect that the only spot in civilization where degeneracy has not begun is the "Zoo." Mr. Beddard takes us through the great menagerie which is under his supervision, and shows us many distinguished inmates at dinner. The hippopotamus is an enviable gourmet. He has been thirty-seven years at the "Zoo," and has had only one attack of indigestion. On that grave occasion he was cured with forty (or eighty) drops of croton oil, administered in a bun. Happy beast! No visits to specialists at a guinea a visit! No anxious trials of patent medicines, advertised in the evening papers with portraits of the cures! Down went the bun, and Hippo was himself again! The Australian cassowary consumes everything (except the missionary and his hymn-book), and never knows what indigestion means. Excellent living (Mr. Beddard's statistics of the food are staggering) and leisured ease make astonishing longevity at the "Zoo." There was a Madagascar parrot who flourished in captivity for fifty-four years, and goodness knows how old he was when he retired to Regent's Park. Possibly he became a centenarian. The official records apparently neglect to state his views of life.

Incident at Pekin.

Probably the most amusing incident of the siege of Pekin, says Henry Savage Landor, occurred on July 22, 1900, when the Dowager-Empress sent a hundred melons, some cucumbers and egg-plant as a present to the Chinese soldiers at the barricades. The servants who brought them misunderstood the order, and handed over the whole lot to the foreign soldiers, also at their barricade. The vegetables were hauled in with due haste, as soon as the guards got over their first astonishment at the handsome gift; but no doubt the person most astonished of all was the messenger on his return to the Dowager-Empress. It is not improbable that the misplaced melons cost him his life.

Fossil Pills.—The demand is proof of their worth. Dr. Agnew's Liver Pills are beating out many fossil formulas of a quarter a box. They're better medicine, easier doses, and 10 cents a vial. A thousand ailments may arise from a disordered liver. Keep the liver right and you'll not have Sick Headache, Biliousness, Nausea, Constipation and Sallow Skin.—6c

Anecdotal.

On one occasion, when Robert Fechter, the tragedian, appeared in "Monte Cristo," the curtain rose at twelve-thirty for the last act discovering Fechter in an attitude of contemplation. For some moments he did not make a movement, and not a sound broke the silence, until a small but clear voice in the gallery queried, in tones of anxiety: "I hope we are not keeping you up, sir?"

An English paper tells a good story of a Droitwich barber. He was just finishing lathering a customer and was talking volubly as usual. "Yes, sir," he said, "there's no carelessness allowed by our employer. Every time we cut a customer's face we are fined sixpence, and if we make an ugly gash it costs us a shilling." Then, picking up and brandishing his razor, he added: "But I don't care a rap to-day. I've just won a sovereign."

Parson Twine, the Chesterfieldian sanitary officer and a dog-catcher of Atchison, recently called at a house, says a Kansas City paper, and asked the woman who appeared if she kept a dog. "No, I don't," responded the woman; "look for yourself." "Madam," said Parson Twine, "what sort of an administration would this be if the dog tax collector doubted the word of a lady?" The woman looked at him helplessly for a moment, and then softly said: "I—I—I have one little dog which I will pay on if you say so."

Gen. Sherman was one of the most approachable men who ever commanded a great army. During his famous march to the sea both North and South were completely mystified as to what point he was striking for, and one day an old Georgia planter, who had called at his headquarters and enjoyed his good cheer, asked him plumply if he had any objections to telling where his army was bound. "Not the least," said Sherman. Then leaning over, he whispered in his guest's ear, but so loudly that everybody else in the tent overheard it. "We are going pretty much where we damn please."

The wife of a well-known New York lawyer, who visited London this summer, was operated on for appendicitis in the British metropolis shortly after her arrival there. The first day the patient was able to accompany her husband for a walk she met Ambassador Joseph Choate, an intimate friend, who had shown much solicitude for her recovery. The delighted Mr. Choate greeted the lawyer warmly, but seemed to ignore his wife, who finally said, with a pout: "Why, Mr. Choate, you don't take any notice of me. You haven't spoken a word to me yet. I really believe you have forgotten me." "My dear madam," said Mr. Choate, smiling, "I must confess that I did not recognise you without your appendix."

The methods employed by ex-Governor Throckmorton of Texas to make clear the claims of his clients were perhaps unlike those of any other lawyer, but they often carried conviction with them. At one time he was defending a man who was on trial for murder in Gainesville, Texas. He desired to make it plain to the jury that the man whom his client killed, although in his shirt-sleeves and without a pistol-pocket, might have been well-armed. "Can you see any signs of arms about me?" demanded the general, taking off his coat, and standing before the jurors. They shook their heads. "Watch me!" he said, dramatically, and with that he proceeded to draw a pistol from under each arm, one from each boot-leg, and from the back of his neck a bowie-knife of most sinister aspect.

The following story goes to show that all men have not their price—a theory held by some. It also emphasizes the fact that a rebuke can be more efficiently given quietly than in anger. Once when Gen. Ludlow, then a colonel of engineers, was in charge of some important Government contracts, a contractor came into his office and slipped into his hand a bill of a large denomination, and at the same time spoke of the size of his bid for certain Government works. Col. Ludlow at once made the contractor feel at home by smiling and inviting him to take a chair. Then he handed the contractor a cigar. The visitor by this time was in high feather over the apparent success of his attempt at bribery, but his idea of Ludlow was suddenly changed. "Won't you have a light, too?" asked the colonel, and stepping to the fireplace with the bill he lighted it and politely applied it in a flame to the contractor's cigar, where he held it until it was entirely consumed. It is related that there was a deep silence; then the contractor went away gloomily and never returned

Progressive Turkish Women.

The first Turkish woman, it is said, who has visited Europe with the object of exposing the unhappy condition of her countrywomen is the Princess Hairie Ben-Ayad, who is now in London with her husband, Ali Nouri Bey, lately consul-general of Turkey in Rotterdam. The princess is declared to be well educated and accomplished, and expects to give a course of lectures on social conditions in Turkey, in which she hopes to arouse sentiment against the existing state of affairs. Her husband is well known as a leader of the Turkish Legitimist party, which is working for the release of Murad V. from prison, where his brother, the reigning Sultan, placed him on the plea of insanity. It is said in political circles that the accession of Murad to the throne would introduce a progressive policy into Turkish governmental affairs. The princess, who is deeply interested in these plans, is the daughter of the late Mahmoud Pacha Ben-Ayad of Tunis, a friend of Napoleon III. and prominent during his reign in Paris society.

A Bad Guess.

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there [illegible] "I have went [illegible]."

The Fad

Of the modern women is health by exercise. It's an excellent fad, provided that it is always remembered that exercise cannot cure womanly diseases.

The first step toward establishing the general health is to establish the local womanly health. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures womanly diseases which undermine the general health. It establishes regularity, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness. When these are cured, backache, headache and nervousness are things of the past. The universal testimony of weak and sickly women, cured by "Favorite Prescription," is this: "It has made me feel like a new woman."

"My wife has used three bottles of Dr. Pierce's medicine, and I never saw such results," writes A. B. Haynes, Esq., of Aurora, Lawrence Co., Mo. "It was wonderful in its work. We had used lots of medicine, also had one of the best physicians in Aurora, but my wife got no better; we heard one pitiful groan after another, day and night. A friend handed me a copy of Dr. Pierce's book, the Common Sense Medical Adviser, and after reading the testimonials of Dr. Pierce's successful treatment, and seeing that the cases described were similar to my wife's, I bought for her a bottle of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Before she had taken all of the medicine she was up and helping to do the work. She has taken three bottles and is now about well. Has better health than she has had for years."

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realize our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows, all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really knew the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

I want to know what is a blizzard,
It rhymes well, I know, with a wizard,
Also with a Surrey fowl's gizzard.
But still, what on earth is a blizzard?
It's synchronic, too, with a lizard
And a Spanish chamois called an izard.
May my locks be abundantly scissored
If I know what's meant by a blizzard.
Some say 'tis a storm that can fizz hard,
And people with livers has friz hard.
  If it means that I get
  Both frozen and wet,
Then back to the States go, O blizzard!

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous.' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation!"

The Undeserved Evil Repute of Paris.

AN interesting discussion as to the public morals of Frenchmen and "Americans" has recently been started by Jules Cambon, the French ambassador to the United States, who made a trip home not long ago, and was so much impressed by what he saw in the Paris streets, during the summer season, that he felt constrained to make an earnest protest against what seemed to him bad tendencies. He complained of the marked increase in the absinthe habit, and of the growing quantity of indecent pictures and cartoons to be seen in the public streets. Senator Berenger, another prominent Frenchman, who is at the head of the Society for the Prevention of License in the Streets, promptly admitted the justice of M. Cambon's censure, and said that the police have of late put hardly any restrictions upon the exposure, in the central parts of Paris, of engravings and cards which offend decency. He declared that this evil is always at its worst during the summer months, and that its unusual prevalence at this season is because it "springs up especially to meet the average foreigner's conception of the gay capital." Thousands of foreigners go to Paris every year for a short vacation, he adds naively, "intent on having a good time, and declaring their intention so loudly that the city takes on a particular hue for their benefit." This view has been emphatically sustained by the pastor of a French Protestant church in Paris, who asserts that Anglo-Saxon visitors are the foreigners most to blame in this matter, and Americans the worst offenders of all. He contends that the keepers of kiosks where quantities of "lurid photographs" are sold told him that "Americans" are their best customers, purchasing handfuls of vicious papers and cards, which they distribute widely in their own country.

According to the New York "Evening Post," striking testimony to the truth of all this has just been furnished by a member of the United States Congress. Representative Gillett of the Springfield (Mass.) district, a man of high standing and proved independence, has been traveling for some weeks, with Speaker Henderson of Iowa, in England and on the Continent. In a recent letter he remarked that the shops, the hotels, and, above all, the class of amusements which we call "Frenchy," and which "Americans" flock to Paris to see, seemed to him "artificial and made to order to meet the taste of American visitors." He frankly admitted that "it's no credit to us what they think our taste is," and bluntly declared that he had been "thoroughly disgusted to see not only American men, but ladies, too, trying to be amused by sights which they would think both stupid and low at home." He added that it seemed to him as though "quite a proportion of the Parisians were engaged in exhibiting as their natural life and recreations a pretense of high spirits and risky abandon which was all affected, a constant bore to the participants, and only interesting and endurable to strangers so long as they are deceived into believing it is the custom of the country." There is thus virtual agreement on the part of the French legislator, the United States congressman and the French clergyman that foreign visitors, and particularly "American" tourists, are giving Paris a worse reputation than it deserves—in fact, making the city worse in the summer months of their presence than it is during the rest of the year. The clergyman quoted clears the resident American colony of blame, pronouncing it exemplary, but he thinks it "impossible to deny that visiting Yankees do Paris far more harm than Paris does them."

Discretion Better Than Valor.

A New Yorker, the owner of a magnificent yacht, had for his guests on a recent trip three very clever young men, all of them suitors for the hand of his beautiful daughter. The young woman could not determine which she liked the best, they were equally good looking and equally eligible as to wealth and position.

"I tell you what I'd do, Miss, if I were you," he said. "The next time we are in a safe place you fall overboard. I will stand by to see that no harm comes to you, and then you can see which is the best man of the lot."

The plan was agreed to, and a day or two later the young woman slid off the plank into the water. In a second two of the young men were in after her and she was heroically rescued. As soon as possible the heroine sought the captain.

"What am I to do now?" she asked. "I have two of them still left."

"Well, I would say this," replied the captain. "If you want a good, sensible husband, you take the one that did not jump after you."

The Soda Fountain Clerk.

CONSIDER now the meek and humble soda fountain clerk.

For then he hath vanilla on the bosom of his vest, and streaks of red raspberry make his trousers seem a jest.

His hair is limp and languid, and is parted square and true

Because he hath to linger in the acid and the ice, to fix up funny mixtures for the one that hath the price.

He maketh strange concoctions in the line of fancy drinks, and all the while he watcheth for persuasive sorts of winks.

He diggeth in the ice cream and he rusheth with the glass, while his deadly hated rival buys the soda for the lass.

Yea, verily, the soda clerk, he hath a sorry time, for he must know the way to get nine cents out of each dime.

And he must be a hustler, that there will not be a loss of ice or gas or water, or he'll tremble at the boss.

But ah, alas, my son, sometimes he feeleth very bad, and then is when the ladies come with garments rich and glad.

The ladies fill the rockers and the doorways and the stools, and insist upon a liquid that both elevates and cools.

And then she voweth that she hath already changed her mind, and wanteth just a phosphate with a piece of lemon rind.

And yet, again the other maids declare they do not know just what they wish—and on and on their mild objections flow.

The weary soda fountain clerk suggesteth this and that, from plain old lemon phosphate to a dose of anti-fat.

Now, when he draweth all the drinks, his troubles are not done—

Nay, verily, my trusting child, they are but half begun;

For each and every maiden there doth straightway rise and say:

"Now, girls, I'll think it's awful if you do not let me pay!"

And all protest, and all object, and all their plans defend,

Now, finally, the soda clerk suggesteth that each maid shall pay for what she drank—and then beginneth the tirade.

For all the ladies vow in wrath—yea, yea, they almost sob—that they will his employer see, and take from him his job.

And then they take their parasols, and sternly go away, and not a cent of all that bill do they take steps to pay.

The gentle soda fountain clerk, he falleth in a daze, and leaneth on the vichy tube, and wicked things he says.

Is this not true, just as we have composed it, with much work?

It surely is—and if you doubt, go ask the soda clerk.—Baltimore "American."

The Restlessness of Women.

IN the July "Cosmopolitan" Ella Wheeler Wilcox, with characteristic force and directness, deals with what she regards as a very serious and growing evil now prevalent among her sex in this country, at least among those who belong to the well-to-do and upper classes of society. She says:

"One who studies American womanhood with any care must be alarmed at the growing restlessness of the sex.

"My mountain of mail is often a volcano of seething unrest. It seems a relief to many women—women, doubtless, whom the world supposes to be happy wives and mothers—to write to one they believe to be sympathetic, of the discontent that surges in their hearts.

"To turn from these letters to a social function is to encounter the same elements in another form. Beneath jeweled corsages beat restless hearts; from under the flower-laden brims of the modish hats look unhappy eyes, gazing out into the world with longing for an indefinable something—a happiness imagined but unattained.

"While I believe the tendency of humanity is constantly upward toward a higher plane, it is an indisputable fact that this restlessness of woman is a giant evil, and one of serious growth."

Mrs. Wilcox says it is puzzling to trace this great wave of feminine restlessness to its source. She speaks of the present false standards of wealth, the desire for splendid social station, and for villas at the seaside and castles in Europe, but closes by saying that "after all, a lack of good, everyday common sense is at the bottom of" it all. While this restlessness is a baleful sign of the times, rendered all the more mischievous by the almost equal restlessness of men, it is comforting to reflect that there is a large—a very large—class of women who have and who use constantly good, everyday common sense. But of course they do not belong to that growing class of women who desire to lead in society, and who dream of villas, castles and foreign titles.

Beware of Danger.

Said the melancholy man: "Do you ever look back on your life and reflect on the opportunities you have missed?" "No, sir," answered the hustler. "It would be just my luck to miss some more while I was brooding over what can't be helped."—"Waverley Magazine."

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with me—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left

HENNESSY having expressed the opinion that Christian Science is all foolishness, "Well, sir, who can tell?" said Mr. Dooley. "If it wasn't f'r progress, I'd be sure the Christyan Scientists was wrong. But th' doctor who attinded me whin I was young 'd be thought as loonatical if he was alive to-day as th' mos' Christyan Scientist that iver rayjooced a swellin' over a long-distance tillyphone. He inthrajooced near th' whole parish into this life iv sin an' sorrow, he give us calomel with a shovel, bled us like a polis captain, an' niver thought anny medicine was good if it didn't choke ye goin' down. I can see him now as he come up dhrivin' an ol' gray an' yellow horse in a buggy. He had whiskers that he cud tie in a knot round his waist, an' him an' th' priest was th' on'y two men in th' neighborhood that carried a goold watch. He used to say 'twas th' healthiest parish in th' wurruld, barrin' hangin's an' thransportations, an' thim come in Father Hickey's province. Ivrybody thought he was a gr-reat man, but they wudden't lave him threat a spavin in these days. He was catch-as-catch-can, an' he'd tackle annything fr'm pneumony iv th' lungs to premachure baldness. He'd niver heerd iv microbes, an' nayther did I till a few years ago, whin I was tol' they was a kind iv animals or bugs that crawled around in ye like spiders. I see pitchers iv thim in th' pa-apers with eyes like pooched eggs, till I dhreamed wan night I was a hayloft full iv bats. Thin th' dock down th' shtreet set me r-right. He says th' microbes is a vigitable, an' ivry man is like a conservatory full iv millyons iv these potted plants.

"Well, that sounds all right, an' I sind f'r a doctor. 'Dock,' says I, 'me vilets ar-re thinnin' out, an' I feel as though I was full iv sage brush,' I say. Th' dock puts a glass chube in me mouth an' says, 'Don't bite it.' 'D'ye think I'm a glass eater?' says I, talkin' through me teeth like a Kerry lawyer. 'What's it f'r?' I says. 'To take ye'er timprachoor,' says he. About th' time I'm r-ready to sthrangle he removes th' chube. 'How high does she spout?' says I. 'Ninety-nine,' says he. 'Good hivens,' says I. 'Don't come near me, dock, or you'll be sun sthruck.' I says. 'I've just examined ye'er blood,' he says. 'Ye're full iv weeds,' he says. Be that time I'm scared to death, an' I say a few prayers, whin he fixes a hose to me chest an' begins listenin'. 'Annything goin' on inside?' says I. 'Tis ye'er heart,' says he. 'Glory be,' says I. 'What's th' matther with that ol' ingine?' says I. 'I cud tell ye,' he says, 'but I'll have to call in Dock Viathricle, th' specyalist,' he says. 'I oughtn't be lookin' at ye'er heart at all,' he says. 'I niver larned below th' chin, an' I'd be fired be th' Union if they knew I was wurrukin' on th' heart,' he says. So he sinds f'r Dock Viathricle, an' th' dock climbs me chest an' listens, an' thin he says, 'They'se something the matter with his lungs, too,' he says. 'At times they're full iv air an' again,' he says, 'they ain't,' he says. 'Sind f'r Bellows,' he says. Bellows comes and pounds me as though I was a roof he was shinglin', an' havin' accidentally hit me below th' belt, he sinds for Dock Laporatteny, an' th' Dock sticks his finger into me as far as th' knuckle.

"He shakes his head an' goes out iv th' room with th' others, an' they talk it over at tin dollars a minyit while I'm layin' there at two dollars a day—docked. Whin they come back, wan iv thim says, 'This here is a mos' inthrestin' case an' we must have th' whole class take a look into it,' he says. It means me, Hinnissy. 'Dock,' he says, 'ye will remove its brain. Viathricle, ye will have its heart; an', Bellows, ye will take its lungs. As f'r me,' he says, 'I will add wan more vermiform appindix to me belt,' he says. 'Tis sthrange how our foolish predecessors,' says he, 'niver got on to th' dangers iv th' vermiform appindix,' he says. 'I have no doubt that that's what kilt Methusalem,' he says. So they mark out their wurruk on me with a piece iv red chalk, an' if I get well, I look like a rag carpet. Sometimes they lave things in ye, Hinnissy. I knowed a man wanst—Moriarty was his name, Tim Moriarty—an' he had to be hemstitched horridly because they was goin' to be a ball game that day, an' they locked up in him two sponges, a saw, an' ice pick, a goold watch, an' a pair iv curlin'-irons belongin' to wan iv the nurses. He tol' me he didn't feel well, but he didn't think annything iv it till he noticed that he jingled whin he walked.

"That's what they do with ye nowadays, Hinnissy. Ivry time I go into Dock Cassidy's office, he gives me a look that makes me wisht I'd wore a suit iv chain armor. His eyes seem to say, 'Can I come in?' Between th' Christyan Scientists an' him, 'tis a question iv whether ye want to be threated like a loonytic or like a can iv preserved vigitables. Father Kelly says th' styles iv medicine changes like th' styles iv hats. Whin he was a boy, they give ye quinine f'r whativer ailed ye, an' now they give ye sthrychnine, an' nex' year they'll be givin' ye proosic acid, maybe. He says they're findin' new things th' matther with ye ivry day, an' ol' things that have to be taken out, until th' time is comin' whin not more thin half iv us 'll be rale an' th' rest 'll be rubber. He says they ought to enforce th' law iv assault with a deadly weepin' again th' doctors. He says that if they knew less about pizen an' more about gruel an' opened fewer patients an' more windows, they'd not be so manny Christyan Scientists. He says th' difference between Christyan Scientists an' doctors is that Christyan Scientists thinks they'se no such thing as disease, an' doctors thinks there ain't annything else. An' there ye ar-re."

"What d'ye think about it?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"I think," said Mr. Dooley, "that if th' Christyan Scientists had some science an' th' doctors more Christyanity, it wudden't make anny difference which ye called in—if ye had a good nurse."

"I understand that Fraliman has come to the conclusion to contest his uncle's will." "Well, what do [illegible]"

The "Fake" Element in Success.

IT is well enough to prate about the beauties of absolute truth and sincerity, but there is no successful merit without a little "faking" to set it off; and "faking" without merit will prosper where merit without "faking" would starve. Barnum's declaration that the public loves to be humbugged is not flippancy, but a serious criticism of human nature. Apropos, an exchange relates the following:

"Here, Willie," said one of the foremost members of the bar, the other day, to his office boy, "spill a little red ink on this will." The boy took the document, which had been neatly typewritten and backed, and proceeded to rule red lines about the margin and across the indentations and spaces; underscored initial words in paragraphs and doubly underscored divers names and phrases; and then returned the paper to his employer.

"This red ink is a little bit of 'faking' one must do to please people," remarked the lawyer to a newspaperman who happened to be present. "Most clients won't believe that a will, a deed or a contract is valid unless there is red ink on it. Once I drew a will for a rich old man. I gave the matter much care and study and drafted the instrument briefly and in very simple language. I had it typewritten, but neglected to enliven the document with fancy designs in red. Really, I was proud of the simplicity and at the same time of the clearness of the draft. About a fortnight later another lawyer, a friend of mine, con-

Pierre-Marie, who was older than his companion and had been wrecked once before, was the first to come to himself again; he looked out upon the sea and I heard him mumble a savage oath. Then, as he took off his wet woollen jacket he caught sight of the laniard of his watch; this he drew from under his belt and held to his ear.

"H'm!" he exclaimed in surprise, "it has not stopped! That—" and he tapped it lightly with his finger—"that is a good watch!"

As soon as they were dressed in dry clothes and cheered a little by the hot wine, they were eager to know what had become of the boat. Pierre-Marie flushed purple when he heard that the pilot Alexandre had hastened to the place of the accident and had righted her.

With their knees still trembling, their hair stuck to their foreheads by the salt water and the sweat of their agony, their bodies shaken with suppressed sobs at the thought of the young companion they had lost, they climbed into the boat again and sailed away. They turned the Pointe des Poulains, passed the gay little port of Denborck on their way to the pretty little port of Bordery. The Gouenantin girl had to be notified. I kept to the land and arrived at the same time as the others. It was the fateful murmur of the crowd that warned the child.

She came out on the threshold of her door, upright in her black costume, her anxious little face flanked by the white wings of her coif. From afar she saw the peasants and the fishermen who were gathering together. They were pitying her. She could see it in their looks; she could hear it in their sorrowful words and the "Alas! alas!" that the wind brought her.

Driven by some unknown force, she ran towards the slope of the road that rose between her and those who were approaching. The child's face was pale and her eyes were wide with terror. When she saw the two fishermen returning alone, she understood at once what had happened. With a cry of anguish she ran back to the house calling out, "He is dead! he is dead!" to those within.

"He is dead! he is dead!" she cried to the pictures of the two departed parents. "He is dead! he is dead!"—and she threw herself down at the foot of the black cross fastened to the white wall. "He is dead! he is dead!" she murmured, choked with sobbing, as she crouched down, her head pressed against the wall and her arms stretched up to the image of Christ.

The fishermen and peasants, their hats in their hands, stood in silence outside the threshold, unable to find any words of consolation. I was among them, and, like them, was speechless.

fided to me as a joke that the man for whom I drew the will had gone to him with the document, expressed doubts whether so simple a will could be valid, and when assured that it was valid, had gone away unsatisfied. When the old man died a will was filed, bearing date a few weeks after that which I had drawn. The document was gorgeous in red embroidery and heavy with unnecessary technical phrases. Evidently the old man had had another will drafted that pleased his eye. It is some satisfaction to me to know that the court construed the ornamental will to mean what I knew to be the very contrary of the testator's intention. Since then I have not spared the red ink."

Twin trees whose boughs together
Two birds that guard one nest,
We'll soon be far asunder torn,
As sunrise from the West.

Hearts knit in childhood's innocence,
Long bound in Hymen's ties,
One goes to distant battlefields,
One sits at home and sighs.

Like carrier dove, though seas divide,
I'll seek my lonely mate;
But if afar I find a grave,
You'll mourn my hapless fate.

"Do you think that Miss Strong will make Jack a good wife?" McRounders inquired of Clubbey.

"I wouldn't say that, but you just bet your life she'll try to make him a good hubby."—Philadelphia Press.

Yeast—Don't you think arbitration is the safest way to settle disputes?

Crimsonbeak—No, I must say that I do not. We had some trouble with our cook and I went to the kitchen to arbitrate the matter with her. Come up to the house some time and I'll show you what remains of the suit of clothes I wore that day.—Yonkers Statesman.

A MARVELOUS MEDICINE

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Sufferers Gain Strength

To operate or use plasters, simply means further exhaustion. The new Constitutional treatment, instead of weakening, actually builds up the strength and invigorates the entire system, not only this, but it arrests the progress of the disease and entirely eliminates every particle of the Cancer poison from the system. It is a pleasant treatment, and can be taken at home, without pain or inconvenience.

Port Hope Man Drowned

Port Hope, Ont., March 14. — William Douglas, miller at the Harold Barrett Company's mills, while taking up some of the logs at the dam, was knocked off into the water below. The current drew him beneath and carried him away. He was for an instant seen before going under the bridge at Walton Street. Unless the body has stopped at Helms' dam, it has probably been carried out into the lake. Deceased had been an employe of the Barrett mills for 37 years, and was 64 years of age. He leaves a widow, two sons and two daughters.

LINDSAY CASE DISMISSED

Application to Have Four Councillors Unseated Also Dismissed

The Master-in-Chambers has given judgment at Osgoode Hall dismissing the application of Arthur Mallon to have set aside the election of Mayor Ingle and Councillors John Hoar, John O'Reilly, Alex. DONOCHUE STILL MISSING

About a week ago, a laborer, Patrick Donahue, of Lindsay, left his home and has not been seen since. His friends have become anxious about him, and have caused Chief of Police, Nevison to make enquiries throughout the district. The missing man answers the following description: About 55 or 60 years of age, weight about 160 pounds, height 5 feet 8 inches, stooped shoulders, dark complexion, full beared and moustache, hair inclined to be curly. He is polite in manner and speaks with an Irish accent.

This is the man whose hat and overcoat was found at the waters edge, near the Lindsay street bridge a few days ago, and it is thought by some that he was drowned, as no tracks were found in the snow leading from the water.

How to Get Up an Appetite

Distaste for food often follows grip, and fevers, and is associated with a general weakness of the system. To impart a real zest for food, and give power to the stomach to digest and assimilate, no remedy can equal Ferrozone. This is a new and startling discovery. It strikes at the root of disease, and by removing the cause, cures quickly and permanently. Ferrozone will quickly enable you to eat and digest anything. Ormond & Walsh, druggists, can tell you a great deal more about Ferrozone, how it cures and why it cures. Call to-day and see them.

PETERBOROUGH PRESBYTERY

At the session of the Presbytery on Tuesday Rev. Dr. Torrance and Rev. Bennett were appointed a committee on obituary notices with regard to the death of Rev. Dr. Andrews of Keene. Rev. Dr. Robertson, Supt. of North-West Missions and Rev. John Lang, of Dundas, formerly of Cobourg.

The clerk reported that the pulpits of Keene and Warkworth were vacant and those congregations were authorized to call as soon as they were ready

Rev. Lord and Rev. Mr. Sinclair were appointed to make arrangements for the promised visit of representatives of the Students Volunteer movement.

There was a call sustained from the congregation at Warsaw to the Rev. W. J. Atchison to fill that pulpit. The call was largely signed and very enthusiastic.

The Mill street congregation, Port Hope, asked the Presbytery to make application on their behalf for a grant of $100 from the Augmentation Committee. The application was forwarded without endorsement.

Rev. Messrs. Lord, of Grafton; McLeod, of Brighton; Hamilton, of Havelock; McIntosh, of Centreville; Hunter, of Baltimore, and the following elders:—Messrs. W. J. Speer, Arch. Miller, W. J. Haig, J. W. Roxburgh, and Sheriff Hall.

The next meeting of the Presbytery will be held in St. Paul's church on the second Tuesday in June at 9 a.m.

AN EVENTFUL DAY

"I never began to use coffee until after I began teaching school, then a good, motherly old dame served such nice coffee that she got me into the way of drinking it.

Inside of a year I became a wreck from insomnia and nervous prostration. Every afternoon I was so drowsy and filled with apprehension that I would have crying spells without knowing why.

I laid around the house in misery, and was a misery to everyone else. Once in a while a friend would tell me that coffee was the cause of my trouble. I reasoned with them that I only had one cup at breakfast, and that was not enough to cause the trouble, but I found that that was the secret—that one cup of coffee.

It was an eventful day in our household when I quit coffee and started making Postum. I followed the directions, and the result was wonderful; no other words express it. The Postum Coffee was of a rich, beautiful color, and when cream was added looked as delicious as it tasted.

A doctor who was in the house tasted the Postum and said that it was equal to the best Mocha or Java, then quickly turned away as though it was incomprehensible. He suspected there was coffee in it, but I have been assured of the absolute purity of the Postum and have confidence in it.

Nothing ever tasted better to me than that first, well-made cup of Postum, and never since have I tasted coffee, and I now look back with horror upon the sickness it caused. We began, very quickly, to see the difference between my condition under Postum and under common coffee. I lost that feeling of despair and restlessness which oppressed me every afternoon and I began to sleep like a baby. Postum must be given the credit for all my improvement.

A word about tea also. One time when I was visiting I had a package of Postum with me. It gave out and before I could get another I had tea for breakfast. Within a few days the old wretched feeling that coffee used to give me came back, and all through the long afternoon I felt that I must weep and weep though I really over nothing at all.

Insomnia came back, but I quickly quit the tea and got all right again." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum is an absolutely pure product of the cereals as analysed by some of the best chemists in America and passed upon by the various pure food commissioners of the different states.

PROHIBITIONISTS RALLY

The Session in the Opera House Last Night Largely Attended

The prohibition convention yesterday was attended by a large number of delegates and visitors from various parts of the country, and the sessions in the afternoon and evening were expressive of the strong fight which the supporters of the bill intend to put up.

In the evening, the meeting was held in the opera house, with Mr. H. P. Lindsey in the chair. On the platform were a number of the resident clergymen of the town, and Rev. W. W. Buchanan, representing the Ontario Branch of the Dominion Alliance.

A number of short addresses were had from local gentlemen, in support of the Ross Bill, and urging the advocates of temperance to work as they had never worked before.

Rev. Mr. Hanna wished to show where he stands on the question of abolishing this great social evil, and all who have the good of their fellowmen at heart should work to that end.

Rev. Crossley thought if the whole of the liquor in Peterborough were thrown in the Otonabee, it would be a great service to the community, although it might not be conducive of good to the fishes. He wished to see the present issue kept out of politics. He was in sympathy with the movement, and ready to vote and work for it; he did not care a cent which party gave us prohibition, so long as it came.

Rev. Gunton, though a minister, believed in voting and supporting one side of every vital issue. The temperance people must stand together and make their demands, for after all the votes count more than money; the trouble is, the money gets so many votes.

Mr. Buchanan followed in a strong, analytical address on the proposed bill and the referendum. A great deal has been said on the question in general, said he, but a good deal of it has been like a glass of soda water—mostly sweetened wind. We have reached a point where we must face the issue in its concrete aspect. The question is in politics now, whether we will or no. But unreasoning partyism is the despair of all reform. Whether our examination of it helps or harts a party we should be honest enough to prosecute it to the end. The coming days may be unpleasant, but birth can only come through trouble, this is the beginning of the end. We shall presently reach the goal which we have sought so long. He considered the Ross Bill under two heads; restrictive legislation and referendum. The Bill is not a measure of prohibition, yet since it is making to that end, we should give it our undivided support. It is a modest measure of restrictive legislation. There is nothing revolutionary in its whole framing. It is simply carrying out in a somewhat more advanced degree the principles which have already been applied in our license system. He showed how the license was granted permission to sell liquor for twelve months only, and had no guarantee of any further privileges. If he built his hotel to secure a license, he was perpetrating a fraud on the public and on the license department. The new bill will not interfere with a man's liberty. Under its provisions, liquor would be legally sold for the purpose of the arts, medicine, and the sacraments of the church. It would be the death blow of the treating system; and if we put it out of the bar we can trust to the women of our country to keep it out of the home. Temperance people opposed to prohibition should be found giving the bill their best efforts. The sale of liquor under this bill would be restricted to drug stores, who, however, would be required to take out a license from the government. The certificates presented for the liquor would be kept on a public fyle. The penalties for violating the act were, not less than $200 fine for first offence, and imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than two years for a second offence, without the option of a fine. Also, immediately a man was convicted, the magistrate should put the accused on oath as to whether he had ever been convicted before. For sacramental purposes, the limit of purchase would be two gallons. A Manitoba druggist had been deprived of his standing by the Pharmaceutical Association, for violation of the Act. The measure is a good one, but there are ample grounds for objections to the referendum to be submitted to the people. The time is most inopportune, coming just after an election, when there will be a reaction from the high pitch of feeling during a provincial campaign. Then we are require to poll a larger vote than has been polled at any time in Switzerland, where they have been having referendums for 24 years, or in the United States, where it has been a custom for a much longer time. We are asked for more than a majority of the votes cast at the last provincial election. The largest referendum vote ever taken in Switzerland, on the question of the Government taking over the railways, was 38 per cent. of the voters, while on the vote for representatives, 71 per cent. were polled. In the United States, all referendums are decided by a majority vote and in every state but one, they are taken at a Presidential or State election. There is another objectionable feature, that the ballot boxes are already stuffed by 200,000 voters, for all the liquor votes, and those not polled at all, count against the passage of the Bill. In this way, every man who votes, is marked as a supporter of the cause, and many men have not the courage to face this.

The referendum may not give us prohibition, but when we as a body put men in the house who are the embodiment of the principle, we shall have what we want. Mr. Ross has given all he can, in the face of the opposition met with from his colleagues, and even his Cabinet Ministers. Public sentiment is not always necessary for the enforcement of the statutes. We do not want a law on the statutes alone; we want it in experience. All honor to the ministers, and the work they have done in the temperance cause, but we will never have prohibition until a political party places its chances of return on the strength of the issue, and is willing to stand or fall by it.

It is unnecessary to submit this referendum, as the will of the people had already been ascertained. When a deputation waited on Mr. O. Mowatt, then head of the Provincial Legislature 8 or 9 years ago he expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the majority in favor of prohibitive legislation, and said the Province was only limited by its constitutional powers. Later Mr. Hardy and Mr. Ross have voiced the same sentiment. But not politicians are to blame; it is ourselves. We must not lose our hatred for the liquor traffic.

Mr. G. W. Mulligan rendered a solo in a most acceptable style and the meeting closed with the National Anthem.

IT IS THE GREAT SPRING MEDICINE USED IN THE HOMES OF OUR BEST PEOPLE

Refuse All Substitutes and Imitations That May Be Offered to You

If in the spring time people acted with more promptness, decision and wisdom, suffering and misery would be vastly reduced.

To put off the work of regulating and strengthening the nerves, purifying the blood and regulating digestion at this time of the year is a very serious mistake.

Rundown, weak, nervous and diseased men and women cannot with safety refuse to use Paine's Celery Compound, the greatest of vitalizers and health builders. The onward and triumphant march of the great medicine in Canada and Newfoundland should be positive proof that it is the right medicine for all who look for strength, robustness, energy and permanent health.

It is of the greatest importance that every sick person should get just what they ask for from their druggist or dealer. Paine's Celery Compound, so celebrated for its curative virtues, has many vile imitations. If you are offered a substitute or imitation by any dealer, leave his store and go to some honest merchant who will give you what you ask for. Examine wrapper and bottle and see that the name PAINE'S is on each; no other is genuine.

NO VACANT HOUSES

In Ashburnham—So the Assessors Report Big Demand for Houses

During the past few months there has been considerable activity in real estate especially in the matter of renting houses. The assessors in Ashburnham have been on their regular rounds and state that there is not a vacant house in the village. This is quite a change from a few years years ago but nevertheless it is a most welcome one, and fully indicates that there has been a steady advancement in the commercial and industrial condition of the town.

In Peterborough it is now a very difficult matter to get a house to rent as there has been a large number of families moved into town during the past few months from outside places. There should be a big building boom this summer.

TWO FRENCH OFFICERS HAVE BEEN MURDERED IN PROVINCE OF KWANG SI

THE SPANISH REJOICE AT METHUEN'S DEFEAT

One Journal Foolishly Regards it as the Turn of the Tide—King Will Visit the Riviera.

London, March 15.—A despatch from Dr. Morrison, in Pekin, to The Times, says that quickly following the reassuring messages from Kwang-Si, news has been received of the murder of two French officers on the frontiers of that province. The Chinese Government is alive to complications that may ensue, and is taking measures to punish the officers under whose jurisdiction the murders occurred.

CRITICISM OF FRENCH NAVY OFFICE.

London, March 15.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that the forthcoming article by Alfred Duquet, the well-known military expert, is an enthusiastic defence of the new French submarine boat, and a scathing attack on the red tapeism of the old-fashioned methods of the French navy office. He says France possesses the best models of the submarine boat yet constructed, and that the navy office is doing almost nothing to form a submarine fleet.

GERMANY TO WITHDRAW FROM TIEN-TSIN.

London, March 15.—A despatch from Pekin to The Times quotes Dr. Morrison as saying that the Italian, German, Japanese and Russian representatives met yesterday to consider their reply to China's inquiry when the foreign government will be withdrawn from Tien-Tsin. As a result of the meeting the German Minister expressed his willingness to withdraw at a date not earlier than July. He stated, however, as a condition that Germany would require a foreign military officer, preferably a German, on the River Conservation Board. Dr. Morrison says that while the occupation of Tien-Tsin continues, China is losing an income of six hundred and seventy-five thousand pounds annually from salt, while the closing of the native banks with correspondents in the interior is seriously injuring trade.

SPANISH REJOICE AT THE DEFEAT.

London, March 15.—A despatch from Madrid to The Times says that the defeat of Lord Methuen evoked fierce rejoicing in the Spanish press. The Imparcial regards the defeat as the turn of the tide, saying that Heaven is manifestly on the side of the Boers. The abuse lavished on British is only comparable with that formerly poured on the unfortunate Spanish generals in Cuba.

KING WILL VISIT THE CONTINENT.

Paris, March 15.—A despatch from London to the Paris edition of The New York Herald says the King will leave for the Riviera at the end of this month, and will probably land at Cherbourg and go directly south without passing through Paris.

A CELEBRATION MAY 24TH

A Crack City Regiment Should be Invited to Spend the Holiday Here

The drill season will be opened in earnest in a short time, there has been considerable talk of holding a big celebration here on the 24th of May, to take the form of a field day. A number of officers of the regiment have suggested that a regiment from some of the cities should be invited to come here for the day. This is a good idea. A regular field day would be a change from the usual manner of celebrating the 24th and would also inspire more enthusiastic military feelings in the hearts of our young men. There could be no more fitting manner of celebrating the holiday proposed and the council and citizens of town would certainly come forward and offer any help possible.

Some time ago there was some talk of getting a new stand of colors for the regiment but nothing has been done as yet. Some of our enterprising ladies should take the matter up and by canvassing the citizens and merchants it would be but a very short time until the necessary amount of money would be raised. Have these colors ready and present them to the regiment on the 24th of May would be very suitable. The officers will arrange to have the regiment well drilled for the ceremony of "Trooping the Colors," a very pretty and interesting ceremony and one which would be witnessed by every person in town. This interesting ceremony has not been witnessed in town for a number of years, in fact since the present stand of colors was presented to the regiment nearly a quarter of a century ago. A move should be made soon and if some of the ladies in town can only be interested in this movement the regiment will have new colors, and the people of town will witness an interesting and pleasing affair on Victoria Day this year.

MADE AN ASSIGNMENT

The Peat Fuel Company Assigns After an Expenditure of $50,000

The Trent Valley Peat Fuel Company has assigned to Mr. R. B. Hall of Stratton and Hall, Peterborough. The company was organized about three or four years ago for the purpose of making fuel from peat, and after spending over $50,000 they have come to the conclusion that the theory of the thing is not perfected as yet. The news will be received with regret as high hopes were entertained that the project would be a success, and that fuel would be placed on the market at a very small price owing to the almost unlimited supply of raw material.

IT GOT HERE ALL RIGHT

How a Letter with a Peculiar Address Reached Us.

A few days ago a letter was delivered to The Times, addressed as follows: "To the editor of the brightest daily paper in Peterborough." The letter was from a young lady, applying for a situation.

This only goes to prove that the great family journal is regarded by everybody as the most widely read newspaper in the district. It is natural, therefore, that the address above given should find us. Indeed this g.f.j. would be surprised if it had not done so.

Peterborough people who have relatives attending the Toronto University were made to feel very uncomfortable on account of the alleged outbreak of smallpox which, it appears may not be smallpox at all. The students, however, have been vaccinated. Rah, Rah! Ski-U-Mah! HANG ON.

Coffee Topers as Bad as Others.

"A friend of our family, who lived with us a short time, was a great coffee drinker and a continual sufferer with dyspepsia. He admitted that coffee disagreed with him, but you know how the coffee drinker will hold on to his coffee, even if he knows it causes dyspepsia.

"One day he said to me that Postum Food Coffee had been recommended, and suggested that he would like very much to try it. I secured a package and made it strictly according to directions. He was delighted with the new beverage, as was every one of our family. He became very fond of it, and in a short time his dyspepsia disappeared. He continued using the Postum, and in about three months gained twelve pounds.

"My husband is a practicing physician, and regards Postum as the healthiest of all beverages. He never drinks coffee, but is very fond of Postum. In fact, all of our family are, and we never think of drinking coffee any more." Mrs. Mary E Brown, Waterford, Va.

Postum is delicious if made after the simple directions. All grocers sell Postum. POSTUM-CEREAL CO., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

LIVING ON AIR

Scientists Say It is Perfectly Possible

Paris, March 13.—Chemistry asks the startling question whether the human race will always go on eating to sustain life? Instead of using the vital elements as they are stored up in solid foods, why not receive them by direct absorption? When a man takes wheat and makes it into bread and eats that bread, he takes little more out of that bread than carbon, nitrogen and oxygen. The wheat plant has taken these elements out of the atmosphere, and the man takes them out of the wheaten bread. Cannot a man do what the wheat plant does—take those elements out of the atmosphere? The wheat plant gets nearly all its food out of the air. Can a man do the same as the wheat plant? If he could the necessity for work would no longer exist, wealth would be useless, perfect equality would prevail, land would have no value. This may seem all very absurd, but the subject is well worth considering, for science is making rapid advances in the direction indicated. Science has already found the means of making starch out of the atmosphere, and starch is identical chemically with sugar, and sugar, as we all know, is easily changed into alcohol. But science has advanced beyond the point of extracting starch out of the atmosphere, and Prof. Berthelot, in Paris, has demonstrated that human life can be sustained by chemical foods. The experiments secretly made upon six volunteers to test Prof. Berthelot's theories regarding the value of chemical foods have been successful so far. The four men and two women subjected to his treatment have taken nothing for three weeks except pellets containing various combinations of carbon, azote and hydrogene, and this without showing distress or impairment of strength. Three have lost considerable flesh, the weight of two has remained stationary, while one is actually growing fat on the strange diet. Will Prof. Berthelot's discovery be the means of ending all necessity for work, and solve the great problem of human existence?

Magyars Celebrate

New York, March 15 — This is the Magyars' Fourth of July, the anniversary of their independence, and as is customary the day will be celebrated in the mining regions of Pennsylvania, upper Michigan and elsewhere throughout the country where there are Magyar settlements. The Magyars usually are called Hungarians. They attained their freedom in 1844 after a long and heroic struggle.

Malt Breakfast Food

Has Been a Marvellous Success and Has Proved a Blessing in Our Canadian Homes

The men and women, the boys and girls who regularly enjoy full digestive vigor, active brain, physical strength and sweet natural sleep, are, in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, users of Malt Breakfast Food.

It certainly behooves the users of oatmeal and other starchy and indigestible grain foods to give immediate attention to their present handicapped condition — poor digestion, heated blood, stomach derangements, skin eruptions and loss of bodily energy.

Malt Breakfast Food, predigested, free from every trace of insoluble starch and other properties that retard digestion, is building up thousands of weak and rundown people. Dyspeptics who have made it their sole diet for a week or two have banished their troubles. Try it in your home. All grocers.

HELEN GOULD'S GIFT

Nearly All of a Million Dollars Given to the Y.M.C. Association

New York, March 15 — The new naval branch of the Young Men's Christian Association in Brooklyn, is now completed and will be ready for occupancy within a few days. This branch of the Y.M.C.A. owes its existence to Miss Helen Gould, who gave $413,000 for its creation. The building is the finest of its kind in the country. It is a club and a hotel in one, and its principal feature will be its magnificent roof gardens. There will be shooting galleries, hot and cold water plunges, a dining-room, library, auditorium, a lecture room and the class and club rooms, together with vast dormitory accomodations.

Better Conditions for Trainmen

New Haven, Con., March 15. — The new working schedule for the trainmen of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad went into effect to-day. Under the new arrangement the hours of work remain as heretofore, but the pay of most of the men has been increased. The new schedule settles differences between the company and the trainmen which at one time threatened to precipitate a general strike.

Perfect Cure for Bronchitis

This disease can be treated only by a remedy carried to the affected parts along with the air breathed, for nature intended these organs for the passage of air alone, and sprays, atomizers and internal medicines utterly fail. But Catarrhozone doesn't fail, for it goes wherever the air breathed goes, and its healing antiseptic vapor is sure to reach every affected spot. Catarrhozone is inhaled at the mouth and after passing through every air cell of the breathing organs is slowly exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone protects and heals the inflamed surfaces, relieves congestion, allays inflammation, and perfectly cures all bronchial affections. Price $1. Small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co. EMPEROR OF AUSTRIA WEARY OF HIS CROWN

EMPIRE'S FUTURE THREATENED

Worthless Crown Prince Regarded Incapable of Ruling Realm—Archduke Otto is a Profligate who Maltreats Wife—Reports of Abdication Are Founded on Emperor's Own Words

Vienna, March 15 —The press of Austria, with the exception of the official and semi-official organs, now comment boldly on the prospective abdication of Kaiser Franz Josef.

Most of the papers take it for granted that the old emperor will soon renounce his throne, the only matter of speculation being the future of the empire, which will fall into the hands of Crown Prince Otto, at present the most immoral member of the Hapsburg dynasty.

All sorts of scandals are laid at his door, not the least of which is his brutal treatment of his wife, whom he has beaten frequently. His son, the Archduke Charles, is 15 years old, and as a short life is predicted for his father he is next in line of succession. It will be remembered that Archduke Ferdinand renounced his rights to the throne of Austria-Hungary in 1891, when he married his sister's pretty lady-in-waiting, the Countess Sophie Chotek.

At the court banquet at Buda-Pesth Emperor Franz Josef, conversing with a recently pensioned officer said:

As his majesty spoke these words his face was inexpressibly sad. It seemed to mirror all the horrors of the great misfortunes which have befallen the house of Hapsburg during the last three decades.

Worked The Wrong Way

A well known local sport is having considerable fun poked at him because of a joke he tried to play on a stranger from the country, but which acted as a boomerang. Our friend, who has the reputation of being a practical joker, was drinking beer in a hotel with several other men, when the stranger entered and joined the group. He seemed like a guileless, innocent, sort of fellow, and the sport determined to play the old funnel trick on him, placing the funnel inside the waistband of the trousers and pouring a glass of beer into it when the victim's attention was distracted. Several of the men placed coins on their heads and succeeded in dropping them into the funnel, but the stranger refused to try it. Finally the practical joker bet him a silver dollar that he couldn't drop the coin from the top of his head into the large end of the funnel. The stranger agreed to the wager, on condition that the sport should try it first. This the joker consented to do. He placed the funnel in position and leaned his head back to get the dollar on his forehead. Just then the supposed victim poured his glass of beer into the funnel and made a hasty exit, while the joker indulged in deep-muttered profanity.

WEST PETERBORO NOMINATION

A mass meeting of supporters of the Ross Government of West Peterborough will be held in Bradburn's Opera House, Peterborough, on Saturday, March 22nd, at 1.30 p.m., for the purpose of nominating a candidate to contest the representation of the West Riding in the next Local Legislature. Addresses will be delivered on the occasion by Hon. J. R. Stratton, Hon. Senator Cox, Hon. Senator McHugh, Mr. John Lang, M.P., and Mr. Thomas Blezard, M.P.P. It is requested that all supporters of the government who can do so will attend. All are interested in the nomination to be made and all are invited. There being several speakers it will be necessary to begin the proceedings of the Convention promptly on time, 1.30 o'clock p.m., Saturday, March 22nd.

Send a postal card with your address and The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q., will mail you free of cost full range of designs of Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns to make selections from.

New York, March 14 — In the mails from Europe this week were many packages of shamrocks sent to Irishmen in America to aid in the proper celebration of St. Patrick's day. The shamrocks were packed in damp earth in tin boxes and were found, when opened to be as fresh as when packed. The packages were consigned not only to New York, but to Chicago, Denver, Minneapolis, St. Louis and other cities throughout the country.

SAYS IRISH STOPPED MISS ROSEVELT'S VISIT

President Forced to Withdraw Daughter's Trip to Coronation

THE WORK OF BRITISH HATERS

New York, March 15 — It was Irish influence which induced President Roosevelt to withdraw permission to his daughter, Alice, to attend the coronation of King Edward of England," exclaimed Congressman John F. Fitzgerald, of Boston, last night at a meeting in the Bijou Theatre, Brooklyn. Loud cheers greeted this statement by Mr. Fitzgerald.

"I have it on the most unimpeachable testimony. Representations were made to the President that it would be a grievous mistake for him to permit his daughter to be present at the coronation. It would look as if the Executive of the greatest of Republics were pledging the support of the United States to King Edward, and this is the view the delegation that visited President Roosevelt took. The President saw that to send his daughter to the coronation would be a grave political mistake.

"I am certain that he recognized the fact that were he to send his daughter to the coronation, citizens of Irish birth or descent in the United States would feel that they had reason to consider themselves unjustly treated, and that the cause of liberty the world over would receive a decided setback.

"Now, if President Roosevelt really wants his daughter to go to England on a useful mission let him send her there to plead the cause of the Boer women and children who are perishing by the thousand in the frightful reconcentrado camps in South Africa. The death rate of these terrible camps is fifty per cent. of all prisoners — a truly terrible arraignment of British policy in the Boer war.

"Irishmen in this country should pledge themselves never to be friends with England or with King Edward or any of the royal family of Great Britain."

Meeting at the Y. M. C. A.

A large and very enthusiastic meeting was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall last night, for the purpose of organizing a Peterborough lacrosse team to enter the C.L.A. Mr. Rolly McWilliams occupied the chair, while the duties of secretary were performed by Mr. A. Terril. Mr. McWilliams presented the report of the committee appointed to look for suitable grounds for playing on. After looking over a number of places the committee were of the opinion that the Riverside Park was the best and most central place. Assistance will be asked to get the grounds in shape. After some discussion, it was decided to put a team in the C.L.A. series, the team to be picked from the best players in the different local teams in town. After some discussion on other matters the following officers were elected:

Hon. President—Mayor Dunn.
President—R. F. McWilliams.
1st Vice-President—Wm. Rudkins.
2nd Vice-President—Harry Neill.
Manager—Mr. Jas. McCabe.
Secretary—Mr. Chris. Graham.
Treasurer—Geo. Giroux.
Captain—To be elected later.
Team Committee—Captain, Manager and Messrs. Rudkins, J. Begley and Dr. Scott.
Executive Committee—Messrs. Taylor, Ayers, J. J. Howden, B. Rickey and E. Dillon.

A membership fee of $1.00 will be charged for adults and 50c for all under 16 years of age. The choice of colors for the club was left to the Executive Committee. The outlook for a good team to enter the intermediate series of the C.L.A. are very bright, and no doubt the team will uphold the good name of the town, and if possible, bring home the cup.

LACROSSE.

Ontarios organize.

The annual meeting of the Ontario Lacrosse Club, of Port Hope, was held last night, and the officers were elected for the ensuing year. The club will nominate J. H. Renwick for office on the C.L.A. council and J. K. Munro, of Toronto, for the Secretaryship.

BASKETBALL.

Two very interesting games of basketball will be played in the Y.M.C.A. gymnasium to-night, when the "Electricians" will play their second game in the series with the "Ironclads" of the Wm. Hamilton Co., and the Business College team play the "Orioles" of the B. F. Ackerman Co. These games promise to be very interesting, and the public are cordially invited to attend.

THE RING.

O'Brien could not be found.

New York, March 13.—W. A. Gavin and G. C. Lee, the Englishmen who came over here to get American boxers to fight in England during the King's coronation, are of the opinion that Jack O'Brien, the heavyweight champion of England, is not acutely desirous of fighting Thomas Ryan, the middleweight champion of America. Messrs Gavin and Lee went over to the City of Brotherly Love yesterday, intent on offering Mr. O'Brien a large purse for a contest with Ryan. They enquired for Mr. O'Brien and went to various places where, they were assured, the clever Philadelphian could be found. To their intense disappointment they failed to catch a glimpse of him and came away from Quakertown depressed with the unpleasant belief that Mr. O'Brien was strongly opposed to entering the ring with Tommy Ryan.

Maher and McCoy matched.

They had no difficulty in finding Peter Maher, however, and he readily consented to fight "Kid" McCoy, in England next June.

Representatives of Sharkey and Walcott called at the Gilsey House yesterday and deposited forfeits of $500 each to guarantee their appearance in the ring during coronation week against any opponent selected by the National Sporting Club.

Denver Ed Martin and Bob Armstrong were matched to settle the negro heavyweight championship and Frank Erne and Pat Daley will tussle for the lightweight honors.

HOCKEY.

It is base ingratitude on the part of Stratford to withdraw from an organization of whose favors it at one time received more than its share.—Mail and Empire.

Vice-President D. J. Carmichael, of the Penetanguishene Hockey Club says: "We lost the game with Stratford on account of a broken skate. Of course it was an accident which could not be helped, and we will not whine about things of that kind, but had the winter remained with us long enough, we would have challenged the winners of the trophy. We still believe that our junior team can defeat any junior team in the province."

On behalf of our sport-loving citizens of Lindsay, Mr. Sam Britton offers seven handsome and valuable gold medals for a tournament in Lindsay between the Peterborough, Fenelon Falls and Lindsay teams.

The citizens of Penetang are loyal to their junior hockey team. On Tuesday night, they were banquetted by the citizens at the Canada House, and Mr. Cornett, on behalf of the town, presented each player with a handsome medal, suitably inscribed.

Tournament in Toronto.

Toronto, March 14.—Early indications point to a splendid entry for the city boxing championships in the Mutual Street Rink, March 27, 28, and 29. Already two dozen from Toronto alone are assured. J. J. Smith, who won from McDonough, of Peterborough, in the 148-lb. semi-final at the Canadian championships last spring, but was obliged to default, owing to sickness to McBrearty, of Montreal, has entered. He is especially anxious that the Montrealer should come this year. Entries close on March 22, and should be sent to H. A. Wilson, 35 King St. West. The gold and silver medals are being made in Toronto, and they will be the finest ever offered at any tournament in Canada.

PING PONG

Although about a year behind London in taking up the game of ping pong, New York has produced some very expert players, and the game now seriously threatens the supremacy of bridge whist. It is simple to learn but difficult to play, and many cracks at tennis admit that their skill at this game has been of little or no benefit to them in ping pong.

Speculation as to the Cause of Delarey's Magnanimity—Four Canadian Constables Ill in South Africa

London, March 15.—Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, the former Commander-in-Chief of the British army, starts for Cape Town to-morrow, and, although the officials deny that his trip is anything but a private visit, gossip connects it with the military situation. It is pointed out that Lord Wolseley's knowledge of South Africa, gained as a fighter and administrator, might be highly useful to Lord Kitchener either at the base (Cape Town) or at Pretoria.

Colonel Frank Rhodes and Arthur Rhodes, brother of Cecil Rhodes, and Lady Methuen will be passengers on the steamer which will take Lord Wolseley to Cape Town.

BOERS BREAK THROUGH

Heilbron, Orange River Colony Tuesday, March 14.—Commandant Mentz, with the Heilbron commando of the Boers, broke through the Heilbron-Wolve Hoek blockhouse line at Gotenburg last night. The Boers had been pursued for several days. So far as known only one Boer was killed and five were captured. The British columns, during the course of the pursuit of Commandant Mentz, picked up scattered parties of Boers, aggregating fifty men.

London, March 15.—Secretary Brodrick read the following despatch from Lord Kitchener in the House of Commons last evening: General Methuen was brought to Klerksdorp to-day. He is doing well. Everything possible is being done for him.

Replying to Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman's question as to whether Lord Methuen had been released by General Delarey, Mr. Brodrick said: "It is not mentioned in the telegram, but I presume from the fact of his arriving at Klerksdorp in charge of a British medical official that he was released."

Timothy Healy, Irish Radical, observed: "Will the British Government be equally magnanimous and release Kritzinger?"

Mr. Brodrick made no reply.

DELAREY'S MOTIVE

London, March 15.—The newspapers generally are at a loss to account for the motive in Delarey's release of Methuen. It is generally conceded that the Boer commander's magnanimity is accounted for by his inability to properly look after the wounded man. It may also be supposed that he was glad to thus repay the kindness General Methuen showed his wife and children when they were overtaken by the cruel fortune of war. The Daily Mail expects to see either Cronje or Viljoen returned to the Boers in exchange for the British General.

CANADIANS ILL.

Ottawa, March 15.—A cablegram received from London announces that four members of the South African Constabulary are ill with enteric fever. They are James G. Stevenson, whose father is W. S. Stevenson, Morewood, Ont.; Wm. Dawson (1,415), of Toronto; Quartermaster-Sergt. Arch. Galbraith, mother Mrs. Galbraith, Saltcoats, Assa.; J. F. Roberts mother Mrs. Roberts, 6 Berthelet street, Montreal.

Incorporation of a Well Known London Firm

The Company will Build Large Additions to their Already Extensive Premises

A recent issue of the Ontario Gazette contained the announcement that the well-known firm of D. S. Perrin & Co., biscuit and confectionery manufacturers, had been incorporated as a limited liability concern, with a capital stock of $250,000, with head office in London, Ontario, and will be styled "D. S. Perrin & Co., Limited."

The rapid development of this large and successful business carried on by Mr. D. S. Perrin during the past forty years has created a demand considerably in excess of the facilities for manufacturing, necessitating still further improvements and increased capacity. It has, therefore, been decided to devote the main building at 82, 84 and 86 Dundas street, through to Carling street, almost entirely to the manufacture of biscuits. In order to do this, the property has been secured on Carling street, immediately west of the present premises, on which a candy factory, six stories with basement, will be erected immediately. Two stories will also be added to the building erected some three years since. When these changes, which are expected to be completed about May 1st, are made, and new machinery installed, the company will not only enjoy the reputation of making the best combined line of biscuits and candies in the Dominion, but will also possess manufacturing facilities unexcelled by any other firm. The company have their own electric light plant for lighting the whole of their premises, a refrigerating system providing the necessary cold storage, which renders them independent of the changes in temperature, and manufacture all the immense quantity of cardboard and wooden boxes required for packing their goods.

The popularity of the biscuits manufactured by this company is beyond question, and includes both the cream sodas and an immense variety of fancy lines. Not only does this company excel in the quality of the biscuits produced, but dealers generally, when requiring an especially fine line of confectionery for the best trade, recognize the fact that their assortment is incomplete without some of Perrin's goods, including some of their celebrated "Newport Chocolates." Their biscuits and confectionery find a ready market from the Atlantic to the Pacific, which territory is covered regularly by their seventeen travelling representatives, and branch warehouses in Winnipeg and Montreal fill promptly orders from customers in their respective localities.

A striking feature of this establishment is the entente cordial which exists between employer and employee. There seems to be a mutual confidence which results in benefit to both.

Continued prosperity is assured the new company so long as the methods hitherto in vogue are continued, and they are to be congratulated on being one of the live manufacturing concerns of the city of London, which has done probably as much as any other institution in it to advertise that city throughout our broad Dominion.

THE REFERENDUM

Mr. Buchanan and his Prohibitionist friends had a big meeting on Thursday night. It was to have been a time of general rejoicing, but Mr. Buchanan refused to indulge in the usual generalities, and got down to business. He condemned the referendum as a measure which counted all the stay-at-homes against prohibition, which he considered designedly unjust. However, after hearing him we came to the conclusion that the simplest and fairest way is for the prohibitionist voter to ask his candidate where he stands, and if he stands for prohibition let the prohibitionist support him. If the candidate is merely a referendum fiend, and not a prohibitionist, the distinction should be made. As for Whitney, it is not known where he stands, and all Ross has to fear is the Prohibitionist vote? Is it worth considering?

THE BONUS CRAZE

The propriety of granting municipal bonuses to manufacturers has never ceased to be questioned, and very early in our experience of them it was found necessary to set certain limitations on the freedom of the municipalities in this respect. It has, unfortunately, however, become the practice of the Legislature to grant, for the most insufficient reasons, special legislation evading or overriding these conditions and limitations. The general law itself operates inequitably. It is so framed that no large community could fulfil the preliminaries necessary to the granting of a bonus. Very small communities are also said to be practically debarred from doing so.

As bonuses are objectionable in themselves, it may be held that the disabilities of the large and small communities are of no injury to them. But this is not the case, for if portions of the Province are debarred from availing themselves of the law, while others are not, the latter are likely to reap whatever benefits are in it. The provision that debars such communities as Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, London or Kingston from availing themselves of the act is that which stipulates that bonus by-laws must be submitted to a vote of the property-owners, and must secure two-thirds of the votes on the roll before becoming operative. It is difficult to poll such a vote in any considerable town, and in the larger communities quite impossible. The provision which is said to tie up the smaller places is that preventing the granting of a bonus or bonuses when the aggregate sum granted amounts to an annual payment greater than ten per cent. of the municipal taxation.

It does not appear, however, that any of these provisions are allowed to stand in the way. At the late session the Private Bills Committee has given its sanction to a Collingwood bill authorizing a loan of $20,000 to a manufacturer. This is said to break the general law in two ways. In the first place, the industry in question is already established in another municipality, and, secondly, it is asserted that Collingwood has already exceeded the ten per cent. of taxation that municipalities are allowed to grant in bonuses. A statement is in circulation, and as it has been handed to some members of the Legislature it is presumably correct, that the taxes collected in the town of Collingwood for the year 1901 amounted to $39,114. Ten per cent. on this amount would be $3,911, whereas, in fact, during that year the town paid $16,379 in bonuses. That is to say, 40 per cent. of the taxes paid were immediately paid out

PROBABLY no human invention has aided the course of justice to a greater extent, says London "Tit-Bits," than the snap-shot camera. It has been instrumental in condemning criminals, and has also been the means before now of saving innocent lives.

A case in point is that of Alfred Grayson, an Englishman who was living a few years ago at Rio de Janeiro. He was accused of the murder of a Brazilian named Linares, a clerk in the same office with himself. The two were known to have quarreled some days previous to the Sunday on which Linares met his death. Apparently, however, they had made up their difference, for they went out sailing that day on a small yacht which Grayson had hired.

In the evening Grayson brought the dead body of Linares home. His story was that the latter had fallen from the mast and fractured his skull. But medical evidence was of opinion the wound on the head had been made with a stick or oar. An oar was missing from the yacht's dingey. The mast-climbing story, too, sounded improbable, for the rigging was all worked from deck. Taking the recent quarrel into consideration, and Grayson's well-known violent temper, the case was black, indeed, against the Englishman. The coroner's jury had already found him guilty of murder, when a passenger on a Marseilles steamer, which had arrived in Rio on the Sunday afternoon, came forward with a new piece of evidence.

This was a snap-shot photograph taken as the vessel entered the harbor. Far away, under the cliffs, a tiny vessel was sailing, and against the white sail was a dark mark, which a powerful magnifier proved to be a falling man. By an almost miraculous coincidence the camera had been snapped just as Linares fell. The photograph turned the scale in Grayson's favor.

Almost equally curious is the way in which a photograph aided justice in the Cooper murder case. Cooper was assistant to a young blacksmith named McKenna in a Lanarkshire village. Both men were known to be fond of the same girl. One day Cooper was found dead on the floor of the smithy. He had been poisoned with carbolic acid. McKenna was suspected, but there was no proof whatever of his having ever bought or owned any carbolic acid, while Cooper was known to have purchased, as a toothache remedy, the phial found beside his dead body. "Death from misadventure" was the verdict.

Shortly afterwards McKenna was arrested. It appeared that an English tourist provided with a kodak had passed through the village on the very morning of the murder. Attracted by the quaintness of the old forge, he had taken several snap-shots of it. The photographer went on to stay in an out-of-the-way part of the Highlands, and did not hear of Cooper's death for some days. Then he hastened to develop his plates. Plain in one of the pictures were three bottles on a shelf. Two were beer bottles, the third was unmistakably one of those fluted blue glass bottles in which poisons are sold. It had also a label on it, and though the wording on this could not be read, yet on the strength of this evidence the police made a thorough search of McKenna's premises. They found the remains of the bottle in question in an old well, and proved that it had contained carbolic acid. Then McKenna confessed his guilt.

The more recent developments of scientific photography must make the criminal feel less secure than he used to. One of those thieves who make a living by van-robbing got an unpleasant shock one day in March last. He had safely got off with a tub of butter which he had stolen from the tail of a wagon as it was crossing a bridge in Rochester, N.Y. The deadly witness against him was a photograph taken by telephotography from the top of a neighboring high building.

A biograph picture of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge over the Niagara Gorge was recently taken, and, when developed, thrown upon the canvas at a music hall at Toronto. It was then noticed for the first time by the audience that a human body was tossing and spinning in the whirling waters. Search was at once made, and the body of a missing and much-advertised suicide was discovered, still caught in the furious suction of the whirlpool.

Hindu criminals succeed by long practice in forming a little bag in their throats into which they can guide jewels when they steal them. Last September a native was arrested for stealing a diamond worth 10,000 rupees from a jeweler's window in Calcutta. But as the evidence was only circumstantial, and possession unproved, he would have been liberated had it not occurred to the police to have an X-ray photograph taken of his throat. That showed the gem safely hidden in the little sac. The thief was sentenced to two years' imprisonment, but he still refuses to give up the diamond.

The Roentgen-ray photography has also been instrumental in adding several thousand pounds to the customs revenue of Buenos Ayres within the last year. Valuable jewelry on which no duty was being paid was known to be coming into the country in letters. It is, however, illegal to open letters or stamped packages, so the law-breakers were unchecked. At last, in June, 1900, several registered letters and packages were examined under X-rays in the presence of the Argentine Postmaster-General. Sixty-six suspected packages contained £4,000 worth of jewelry, and were, of course, all confiscated.

What She Said.

It wasn't a smoking compartment, but they were using it for that purpose all the same, and she was too modest to object. By and by the two men got into a discussion over the woman question, and at last one of them, an unregenerate bachelor, appealed to the lady thus:

"Do you think there will be men in heaven, miss?"

She blushed.

"No!" she said. "They will want to go somewhere where they can smoke."

The discussion stopped; so did the smoking.

To be acceptable to the aristocracy one must be an ace or a millionaire.

A Day's Fishing.

THE fishing season having now positively begun, I think I will go down to the deep waters and try my luck. The great mistake made by so many fishermen is that they are lacking in the necessary patience for success in their hobby. Very often, after a man has sat for two or three days waiting in vain for a bite, he begins to feel the monotony a little tiring, and wants to throw up the whole enterprise. The enthusiastic angler, however, never allows himself to grow weary. He will wait three weeks for a bite, and when the exciting moment comes, he wrenches his prize out of the water and feels that he has not lived in vain. When you have once cast your bread (or whatever you are using for bait) upon the waters, you should be prepared to stand by and see the thing through if it takes all summer.

No angler expects to be landing fish all the time. As a matter of fact, the biggest fish are never completely landed at all. If you have ordinary luck you will land a few average-sized wrigglers, but you can't very well make them any bigger than they are, and your friends can size up their dimensions at a glance; whereas the fish that you hooked out of the water, but couldn't manage to finally land, grows every time you talk about it. This fish is well known to expert anglers. Its dimensions are only limited by the powers of imagination possessed by the operator. Most anglers will let it go with a weight of about twenty to thirty pounds avoirdupois; and the man who insists upon anything bigger than that must choose his audience very carefully in these knowing times. I have no sympathy with the man who hooks a fish that tries to wrestle him on to his back as it flies out of the water, or that aims crushing blows at his head with its off-side fin. And when that kind of man tells you that he fought three rounds with his prize in the endeavor to down it so that he could bring it away with him, you should not trust yourself to a comment on the narrative. That kind of man is wasting his talents on a modest job like angling. He ought to have been a political journalist.

When you have cast your line, you should sit by quietly and wait for the results. That delightful old prig, Isaak Walton, laid it down as a rule that anglers should avoid swearing, lest they be heard and catch no fish. It is not very clear to me why a man who has settled down by the water's edge for a day's fishing should want to swear. I don't see, in any of the hand-books on the craft, any hints that swearing has ever been considered half as useful as a wriggling worm for fishing purposes. As far as I can see, a man might stand by a stream and profane steadily for several hours without getting any more bites in consequence. If a fish will not bite at a tempting hook, I should doubt very much whether it will do so because somebody on the bank is referring to its ancestry in disrespectful terms, and is casting rather red aspersions on its moral character. The injunction as to swearing appears quite unnecessary, but dear old Isaak couldn't help preaching a little in between the bites.

After waiting a little while and looking at your float, you will probably see it begin to bob up and down. This either means that something is biting at the hook, or else that an empty sardine tin has got mixed up with your line. You must let the bobbing go on till the float is dragged under water, and then you pull in with both hands, and land the upper portion of a dilapidated boot which somebody has left in the stream by an oversight. Fishing is called "the contemplative man's recreation," chiefly, I believe, on account of the very weird things that the average angler is called upon to contemplate in the course of a day's skirmish with the wonders of the deep.

Many anglers, however, do not recommend the practice of sitting down and fixing the eye on the bobbing float. After you have thrown out your line, you open the lunch basket and take out the first bottle. Then you light a pipe and take a glance or so at your float to make sure that it isn't bobbing. By that time you will be ready for the second bottle. When the second bottle has been properly and truly dealt with, the float will bob a good deal oftener than might be expected; but you don't need to take notice of low conduct like that. If a gentleman can't sit down by the water's edge and take a little light refreshment without being guyed by a mere decorative quill, it's hard luck, that's all.

By the time you have got on to the fourth bottle, you will begin to realise what a thoroughly enjoyable sport this angling business is. You will begin to wonder at first what bounder has been and thrown his line alongside yours, as there are two floats to be distinctly seen. You need not, however, bother about that. After all, you didn't come down to the water for what you could catch; but for the jolly sport of thing. Well, there's the fifth bottle ready anyway, and it's thirsty work looking on and waiting for a bite.

Of course, there are anglers who can be carried away by the sport so much as to follow a float with their eyes for a whole day, with scarcely a drop in between. These men will wade through two feet of water, and carry the spare worms in their mouths on the chance of hooking a wriggler that has been hovering about playfully for an hour or two. But this is not the weather for enthusiasm of any kind; and the only thing that you will find to admire in these rabid anglers is that their perspiring activity makes you feel so thirsty that the rest of the bottles can be opened in their right order without waiting. Some anglers reel up their line at the close of the day's sport and take it back home. But after a dozen bottles or so of the best, you won't want to be bothered with any dim nonsense of that kind. Just kick the whole kit into the water, and call for help to enable you to get home again without any fuss. Angling is a grand sport if you know how to take it.—"Pick-Me-Up."

The Real Difficulty.

Appy Tite—If we only had some lines, now, we might do a little fishin'.

Shady Bowers—Fishin', eh? Who's goin' ter dig de bait, bait de hooks, frow in de lines, haul out de fish, and take 'em offen de hooks?

Appy Tite—Dat's so; we'd have to hire somebody to do dat part of [illegible]

Swallowing

A sword is a trick not conducive to health or longevity. But it is not more injurious than the hasty swallowing of half masticated food washed down by gulps of ice water in summer or cups of hot coffee in winter. Hasty eating is the foe of health. Sooner or later it must result in indigestion or some other form of stomach disease.

Mrs. Mary E. Lewis, of Tanner, Gilmer Co., W. Va., writes: "I will always recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Pleasant Pellets' for they cured me when doctors and other medicines failed. For fifteen years I suffered untold misery. When I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's medicines, I had given up all hope of ever getting well. I could not lie down to sleep, and everything I ate would almost cramp me to death. Was very nervous and could hardly walk across the room. I only weighed ninety pounds when I commenced taking these medicines six years ago; I now weigh one hundred and forty pounds, and am having better health than ever before. My friends all say they can hardly believe that I am the same person; after being sick so long. I have changed to be robust and very cheeked. I have taken fifteen bottles of the 'Discovery' fifteen of the 'Prescription' and fifteen of the 'Pellets.'"

Dr. Pierce's Medical Adviser, paper covers, is sent free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay expense of customs and mailing only, or if cloth binding is desired send stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Late Queen's Autographs.

According to the London "World," great annoyance has been caused at court by recent sales of Queen Victoria's private letters and autographs, of which an immense number have been produced in the open market during the last few months. It is impossible to understand how such strictly confidential communications as the Queen's private letters to foreign sovereigns and to the Duchess of Gloucester and other members of the royal family can have come to be publicly offered for sale, unless they have somehow passed into the possession of the servants of the recipients.

The Playgoer's Dinners.

A correspondent who signs himself "Serious Playgoer" writes to the "Illustrated London News": "Is it not possible to induce the public to moderate its eating and drinking before going to the play? If you have eaten a very large meal, how can you be in the mood for real drama? Nowadays the playwright has to provide, not drama, but an aid to digestion, a kind of dramatic equivalent to the cigarette and liqueur. He may count himself happy if rows of gentlemen in white waistcoats are gently stimulated by a theatrical anecdote, set to music if possible, and enlivened by charming costumes. If his characters have any troubles, these must be comic embarrassments, not the sordid cares that crease even a white waistcoat in actual life. I see the necessity for this entertainment so long as the playgoer has no scruple about his dining. Max Beerbohm, who treats this subject with admirable philosophy, proposes that the theater shall open in the early morning. Let us take our drama, he says, after breakfast, when the mind has a dewy freshness. Let commerce and its toils be put off until the evening. This, I fear, is a poetic ideal, like asking the moon to shine in the morning and the sun to oblige about nine p.m. It is upon the playgoer's dinner that reformers must concentrate their energies."

Coats of mail are now being manufactured from papier-mache that cannot be distinguished from real antique armor. According to the wishes of the customer, the armor can be turned out bright steel, silver and gold inlay, hammered brass, rusty iron or malachite. As described by the New York "Evening Post," the new goods are calculated to deceive the best critics, and to give all the satisfaction of the genuine coat of mail. They are warranted not to break easily or to cut any unfortunate guest upon whom they may happen to fall. All descriptions of armor can be had. The new invention has aroused the anger of the dealers in antique armor, who declare that it is intended to ruin their trade.

A well-known English firm of tobacconists are giving away in their packets of cigarettes a small map of the Klondike district. It is colored red, and the words "British Territory" are printed upon it in large letters. On the back is found the following little history of the gold fields: "There is no doubt that the Klondike district is the richest gold field yet discovered. It comprises some 192,000 square miles, mostly in British territory, and although mining has been going on steadily for the past ten years, it was only in August, 1896, that the extraordinary richness of the diggings was discovered." We have been accustomed to portraits of fat women and popular heroes for so long that the novelty is as pleasant as it is instructive.

Where He Failed.

The young girl yawned and seemed interested. He was quick to push his advantage.

"I am the possessor of a town and country house, a yacht, a stable of thoroughbreds and a box at the opera."

She hesitated, and a slight flush betrayed that she was listening.

"I have got," he continued with a certain fierceness, "thirty servants, forty pairs of trousers, fifty ancestors, three automobiles, six prize bull pups and an army commission."

He felt that he had lost. He had played nervily and high, but she was above his limit.—"Waverley Magazine."

Mrs. Fitz-Candle—Ah, me! There was a time when you always called me "Daisy;" now it's "Mrs. Fitz-Candle," as if I were the merest stranger to you. Fitz-Candle—Found out my mistake, my dear. Daisies shut up at night. You don't.—"Pick-Me-Up."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

CHAPTER I.

Daisy—The Spoiled Darling of the Family.

There was a great flutter of excitement in the Gordon farmhouse one lovely June morning, and it was all caused by the letter Hetty and Olive Gordon, the farmer's two pretty daughters, were reading together.

"Oh, it will be perfectly delightful!" cried Hetty, shaking her dark curls back, her eyes sparkling, and a wave of color, like the heart of a great red rose, flaming up into her dimpled cheeks.

"I dunno as I understand this thing," he said; "read the letter again, Hetty, from beginnin' to end."

"I'm sure it's perfectly easy to understand, papa," pouted Olive, impatiently. "It's an invitation from Colonel Ruthven's wife for Hetty and me to spend two weeks at Briar Hall, in Briarvale, to welcome Mrs. Ruthven's niece, a great heiress, who is to arrive in time for the great lawn fete on the 20th.

"The hall has been closed since that awful event happened, it is true, and the grounds show neglect everywhere but the lawn is to be trimmed with bunting, and fairy, colored lamps are to be lighted in the evening, and——"

"Let me see the letter," interrupted the farmer. "Strange that your sister Daisy wasn't asked; the lass will feel terribly cut up about it. That's hardly fair."

"Well, she wasn't," declared Olive. "There's to be just a certain number of young gentlemen invited at the hall, and a certain number of us girls. So, you see, Daisy would have been one too many; she would have had no escort at the boating parties, horseback rides, and all that."

"Bless you, the child wouldn't mind that one bit!" maintained the farmer, good-naturedly. "She could have gone along with either one of you, and your beaus."

Two pairs of black eyes flashed angrily, and two pretty faces flushed to the roots of their dark curls.

"That chit of a thing!" cried Hetty Gordon, contemptuously. "And father"— reddening a little — "you shouldn't try to force the youngest daughter into society until the elder two are married off. There's time enough for Daisy. You must remember I am twenty-two, while Olive is twenty —and Daisy is only sixteen."

"I almost believe you two are getting jealous of little Daisy," laughed the farmer, uproariously, "ever since she declared she would soon be old enough to cut you out with your beaus."

"There she comes now!" cried Olive, hurriedly thrusting the letter into her pocket. "Promise us not to let her know anything about this affair, until we are started and on the way. Then she cannot tease to go."

"Bless little Daisy," said the farmer, gently, as he turned toward the open window, and saw his favorite daughter —his pretty, willful, motherless Daisy —a slim girl, with flying yellow curls, and a face flushed with excitement, hurrying through the clover -field toward the house.

It was no secret that the honest old farmer loved his youngest child best; she was his darling, his idol, this bonny, golden- haired little Daisy. He could never endure having her a whole day out of his sight. He guarded his treasure too well, and that was why he came to lose it.

Over the fields, flying like a bird, came Daisy and in another moment the young girl had sprung through the vine- wreathed doorway, out of breath, pell-mell into her father's arms.

"Heyday, what's the matter now, Daisy?" he said, laying one rough, toil- hardened hand on the tumbled curls, and looking down into two lovely, blue- bell eyes, swimming in great, big tears.

"Oh, papa," pouted Daisy, "is it true that Hetty and Olive are going down to Briar Hall to stay two weeks, and that I am not to go? Oh, please, papa, let me go too," and the lovely, flushed face was raised eagerly, appealingly to his. "And there's to be a grand lawn-party there. Oh, papa, do let me go."

"No doubt you'd enjoy the frolic, pet," rejoined the farmer; "but you can't go, child; you wasn't asked."

"Even if she had been invited, she couldn't have gone," broke in Hetty. "Who would there be to help Margy and look after your meals, father, if she went?"

"Look after his meals," repeated black eyed Olive, with a little laugh and a shrug of her shapely shoulders. "Precious little looking after anything she'll do. She spends all of her time chasing butterflies, or sitting up in the peach tree."

"It's none of your business if I do," blazed out Daisy, wrathfully shaking back her yellow curls and stamping a little mite of a foot. "That's not half so bad as standing in the peach orchard and quarreling over which of you Aleck Hamilton comes over to the farm to see."

Weary's Objection.

Weary Waddleton—Me, too; I cu'dn't tell whedder dey luv'd me or was after me munny.

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

A Four Leaved Clover.

I WAS hard at work drawing a bird, which might eventually draw a cheque, when the doorbell sounded. I didn't want to be interrupted, for my editor, as a few editors are, was a soulless brute where promptitude was concerned, and my drawing had to be completed.

In a moment the servant brought in a card. It was the proper size and all that, and the name upon it was "Mr. Edward Ross."

Now, there are peculiarities about cards, and somehow this one rather impressed me. I knew no one of that name, yet the neat, white thing was unmistakable; so, laying down my brush, I sought the reception-room.

A big, trim-looking young fellow faced me, a wonderfully musical voice bade me good-morning with a certain cheery smoothness which was very pleasing, and a pair of particularly keen eyes took me in from head to foot, then apparently fixed themselves upon my left ear.

"I'm afraid you are busy?" he remarked, as his eyes shifted from my ear.

At that instant I remembered a second brush, for the moment forgotten in its usual place.

"Good—it's business," he commented. "The fact is, a friend of mine wants a story of the Speedway according to this memo. He asked me to get it; I made a few enquiries; Mr. —— advised seeing you." As he concluded he handed me the slip of paper, upon which was scribbled, "Conception, prime movers, construction, cost, prominent patrons, value to public, undesirable features, if any; interesting as possible; not to exceed five thousand words."

"That's all easy enough, if the price be right," I said.

There was ample time, so I closed with the offer, and the business end of the interview was reached.

"How far is this Speedway from here? I've never seen it," he said, as he prepared to leave.

"Only a few blocks," I replied; then, urged by a sudden impulse, I added: "If you don't mind waiting twenty minutes in my shop while I finish a small matter, I'll take you up there."

"Good," he replied. "I shall be only too happy, if you are sure I'm not too much trouble."

"This way," I replied. "Smoke up and talk as much as you want to—doesn't bother me in the least."

His eyes lighted with pleasure as they fell upon the almost completed drawing, and his remarks presently proved that he knew the bird well. In a few moments I was busy with finishing touches; and, while he said little, his keen eyes noted every move with absorbed interest. After a bit I laid aside brushes, picked up the glass, verified the work and rose.

"Take a look through the glass," I said. "It'll show you what the result will be."

He looked long and smiled approval.

"It's wonderful," he said, "what knowledge and skill can do. That bird is all right. I can't do such things, but I have a rare good eye. That little drawing carries me back to a place far away, where that bird made his home in a certain tree. I know him well and—would—would you sell me that? I mean after you are through with it," he hastily added.

"No, but I'll give it to you three weeks hence. I can't sell it twice, you know," I retorted, laughing.

In a few moments the drawing was ready for mailing, and we started. The first mail-box trapped the bird; then we swung away for our destination. From the bridge we looked down upon athletic field and ball-grounds, and here my companion's personal knowledge of Upper Manhattan ended. Once upon the Speedway he became as animated as an eager boy, but the shrewd comments he made upon every important feature proved him to be rarely well informed concerning the cost of and work and the requirements of a fast, safe course. Before we had passed beneath the mighty arches which eloquently declare man's mastery over natural obstacles, he had me wondering, for those keen eyes of his saw everything and his crisp remarks proved that he had read much and had a wonderful memory.

Those who have not seen the Speedway can have no conception of its beauty. Upon the one hand the broad water, yet stirring with the pulse of the distant sea; beyond that, noble hills rolling away in tremendous, halted billows of green; beside you the low stone wall, with its guarding metal rail; then the broad-flagged walk; then the Way itself, broad and ample and carefully brushed as smooth as a yellow carpet. Across it, another broad walk, and towering far above it, tremendous cliffs of roughest rock, with grand trees clinging where they may and brush and creepers draping with lovely screen all traces of man's wondrous effort. Such is the magic roadway which the wizard money conjured from among rock-masses flung by warring forces in mystic days of old. Legends of giants' hour and crafty elves cling like lichens to these rocks, but now, at their bases, curves a modern race-course, printed by the flying feet of the swiftest light-harness horses the world contains.

As we strolled along a beautiful brown colt passed at top speed, his gait the perfection of smooth trotting, the dainty pneumatic seeming hardly to touch the ground. Soon he came jogging back, full of fire and eager for another burst. I knew the driver, and in response to my query of "Anything doing to-day?" he replied, "Sure—the match—start in 'bout an hour."

Then I remembered that a couple of rival gentlemen drivers had matched their favorite fliers weeks before, and that this was the day of the race. Furthermore, I was aware that big money had been wagered and that a clinking race was expected. The coming contest explained the deserted appearance of the Speedway—beyond a doubt a crowd of keen horsemen was gathered about the headquarters at the farther end of the course.

I explained the situation to Ross, and suggested our waiting where we were for a while, as we were near what would be the finish.

BREAKFAST—SUPPER

"Know anything about them?" he queried, while his shrewd eyes twinkled with interest.

"Yes," I replied; "one's the best horse, but its owner's up, and t'other nag's got the best mechanic behind him."

"What's the difference between the horses?"

"Lengths!"

"And between drivers?"

"Miles!"

"Sure of that?"

"Absolutely certain!"

"How will the betting be?"

"Probably two to one on the nag that's going to lose. He's a fast, showy horse, his driver is a great bluffer, and the crowd will surely back the combination. But I know something of the other pair, and neither horse nor man makes mistakes. The man is an amateur, but he's fit for professional company—a wise, cool, absolutely straight fellow, who is satisfied with a head when a head will do the trick."

"Looks like something of a cinch, then?"

"Very like it. The match was made apparently as the outcome of a chance-raised argument. I know both parties were looking for it for weeks. The man who is going to lose it imagines that he talked the other into making it. Do you savey?"

Ross smiled, then remarked that he wouldn't mind having a small bet on the result, and suggested that we move along and find out how things were. As we turned to go, he started slightly, then glanced at me.

"I see it, too—pick it up," I remarked, laughingly.

Before us, on the strip of sod and almost hidden, lay a small silver bracelet, a cheap affair, to which were attached a few plated bangles. As Ross picked it up he uttered a sharp cry.

"Well—of all the curious things!" he almost shouted, as he handed me the trinket. "What do you think of that?"

Attached among the bangles was a locket-like affair—two small crystals held together by a circular band of gold with a little ring to hang it by, and between the crystals was tightly pressed a tiny four-leaved clover.

"Neat bit of work," I commented, as I closely examined it; "and it's a genuine clover, too," I concluded, as I handed it back.

"Hurry up," he exclaimed, as he thrust the bracelet into his pocket. "I'll lay some long green on that driver you fancy. How're you fixed?" he continued, as we bustled along.

"Oh! I'll chance a ten-spot on it for luck," I said through my laughter, for Ross was visibly keen to follow his whim.

"Ten-spot be d—d! I'll make it five hundred if these guys are game!" he retorted with energy. "Why, it's like finding the good stuff. I only hope they've got their bundles with them!"

"It's good betting they have. These men always go heeled, and some of them have money to burn," I replied.

"Lead me to them. I'm a cooking-range!" he gurgled gleefully, and presently we neared the crowd.

Ross's manner at once changed. Calmly indifferent, he moved among the little knots of whispering horsemen, until he had bored his way into the center of a noisier crowd, where betting talk was free.

"General—one hundred even?" queried a sweaty, red-faced fellow, but the gray-haired Southerner addressed smiled and shook his head. "One hundred to seventy-five! Come, General, time's short," continued the man, but the offer was declined. "Does anybody care for it? Open to anybody! Come, gentlemen!"

For a moment there was no response, then Ross remarked, "I'd like a bit of that."

With the celerity of the turf they got together, and the wads they produced were fat to bursting. After a brief conference the red-faced man planked down $600 at the odds, Ross counted out the needful, the house took charge of it, and the red-faced man remarked: "Just had $600 to play with. Might as well have it all in a lump. Saves trouble collecting!"

Ross smiled a four-leaved sort of smile; then we worked our way out.

"Don't know him, but he's a good 'un!" I heard a well-known sporting man remark as Ross reached the door.

The story of the race need not be dwelt upon, for it was the old, old story of the mechanic versus the amateur. After losing the first heat by an open length, our horse, or rather our driver, took command and won out. There was the usual hot discussion, the usual kick from losers, and finally a challenge from the loser for another race for bigger money, professional drivers. This the owner of our horse declined.

"A long-headed chap, that fellow," remarked Ross, as we tramped homeward. "You had him sized up all right. Now we'll have a bite and settle."

We turned at length into a cafe, where over the cigars we discussed the fortune of the day and the curious finding of the bracelet.

"Wonder if it would be any harm to put that charm on my chain?" queried Ross, as he fingered it lovingly. "I don't want the other truck, but the little clover must stop with me. I believe in it. To find one is lucky; but to find one all ready mounted like this is something unheard of, and I'll see the oracle's worked full time," he added with a grin.

With a knife he tinkered at the tiny ring until the clover was detached; then he fastened it to his chain, and while we sat his fingers kept playing with it.

When the check was brought he settled for everything; then divided his winnings in half and pushed one wad over to me.

"What's this?" I gasped.

"Your whack!" he remarked, crisply.

"But—but—" I remonstrated. "What the devil have I to do with it? It's your money—I won't have it!"

"Yes, you will, too!" he retorted. "We were in on the deal. You saw the trinket before I did. It won for us. I've had a right pleasant time, and I insist!"

For a moment his eyes met mine with a peculiar, hard expression; then they softened to a mirthful twinkle, and he said:

"Oh! very well! If you absolutely decline to take what's yours, I can't help it!" With which he thrust the twin rolls into his pocket. "Now steer me to the L-road stairs, and I'll away home."

Within a block we met a small girl—one of the weasel-faced, half-fed type so common in New York streets. She must have imagined herself on 125th street, Paradise, instead of Manhattan, for Ross stopped her, slipped the bracelet over her grimy paw, pressed a quarter into her palm, smiled and passed on. For a moment she stood petrified with amazement, then she sped away as fast as her wretched little shanks could carry her. No doubt she told her friends "de swell guys" gave it to her and no doubt her friends guessed she'd "pinched" it, or, if swell guys actually had given it to her, that they were very, very drunk at the time.

By the foot of the stairs we chatted for a few moments, then up he went, two steps at a time, for the rumble of an approaching train was plainly audible. As I turned away he whistled sharply, and, leaning over, shook his clover charm. I laughed and waved my hand.

"So long!" he cried. "Best not put your left hand in your coat pocket," and he vanished as the creaking train came to a standstill.

Of course my hand at once went into my pocket and closed on a roll of bills. He had feared some stealthier hand finding it.

"Curious chap, but game and good as they make them," I thought as I strolled homeward.

* * * * * *

Weeks passed, and I saw no more of Ross, but one day I received a brief note, which read: "I have an empty bird-cage at No. —, —— street." I at once mailed the drawing to the address. Next day came an envelope, which contained a brand-new "twenty" and a note, which read: "Made this myself with a pen—try to 'pass it.'" He'd made the note with a pen all right, but the "twenty" was genuine. I wondered, for these things seldom happen.

A couple of weeks later came a photograph of the clover-charm, and on the back was scribbled: "It's a wonder—nothing but 'fours'—and all winners."

I whistled—for mine eyes began to see things, and that evening I sought for a certain Puritanical-looking party, who might have passed for a Presbyterian divine, but who never passed for anything the other parties might say in red, white and blue speech. I found him in a certain quiet corner which he was given to filling when there was nothing doing. He looked very depressed, but greeted me pleasantly enough.

"Deacon," I ventured, "do you happen to know a fellow named Edward Ross?"

He gave a mighty start, then in a strangely hollow voice he asked:

"Haven't you seen to-night's paper?"

I shook my head.

"Read it," he said, as he drew a copy from his pocket.

Great headlines told it all. A party of gamblers had gotten into a row in a saloon, and after the smoke had cleared away, a few were on the floor, some wounded, one dead. The dead man's name was Walter Canade, alias Ross, alias "Four-leaved Eddy." There was the usual sensational story.

I looked at the Deacon, and remarked that I had met Ross.

"Then you met one of God's own gentlemen!" he exclaimed. "Eddie was the soul of honor, a college man and a perfect gentleman. He always wore a four-leaved clover in a charm on his chain. Last night he was a big winner—he claimed he'd always been lucky since he found that clover charm. He said 'found' it, but we didn't believe any such nonsense. His girl gave it to him for a birthday present. Last night it was hot in certain rooms; he had his coat off and his watch was in the pocket of his shirt, the little charm hung right over his heart. When the row began everybody got on their feet, and he stood there with that thing shining on his shirt. It was a mark, I tell you—a mark—and the cursed hound that did the gun-work couldn't help but hold on it!"

"And—?" I ventured.

"Why, the lead just took out the glass and the clover, that's all! But, stranger!" he almost shouted, "if you knew that dead boy you knew a square, game man. There's a diamond stud will be another mark before many days—you mark my words!"

And there was.

Church Hymns.

CONSIDERABLE interest and perhaps some uneasiness has been aroused of late by criticism, widely reported and discussed, of certain well-known and popular church hymns. The critics urge that our most common hymns "are not literature;" that they do not possess sufficient literary excellence to win the approval of intelligent and cultivated minds, and therefore would better be dropped.

Objections of this kind—and they are not made for the first time—are usually made by men who are better known for their literary attainments than for their religious experience. They are based on an error, argues the "Youth's Companion." Neither in conception nor in purpose are hymns intended to be literature. Many of them are literature in the strictest sense. Yet who supposes that Luther was stirred by literary ambition when he produced "Ein' feste Burg ist unser Gott"—"A mighty Fortress is our God?" or that John Fawcett, the obscure country preacher, thought he was producing literature when he wrote "Blest Be the Tie that Binds?" The one was beset by forces with which he felt himself unable to contend alone, the other touched by the love of the humble parishioners who crowded about to beg him to decline a call to a rich church in London. Each gave voice to the spirit which sang in his heart, and so were born one of the noblest songs of Christian courage and one of the tenderest expressions of Christian brotherhood.

It is not what the hymns are, but what they do, that counts. Think of the noble list—the "Rock of Ages," "Guide me, O Thou Great Jehovah," "Lead, kindly Light," "Jesus, Lover of my Soul" and hosts of others which have molded the religious life of the whole English-speaking race. They have inspired deeds of love and mercy, instilled patience and courage in the depressed, comforted the dying, and consoled those who mourned. So long as they continue to do these things they fulfil the purpose for which they were intended, and are worthy of the place they hold in the hearts of those who sing them.

* * *

It came to us, so white and pure,
  A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
  'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
  But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
  Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as soot, it strews
  The streets and pavements where we go,
We tramp it under foot and kick—
  'Tis not the snow we used to know!

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

BREAD DYSPEPSIA

White Bread Makes Trouble With Some People

Loading up with white bread and starchy cereals is quite sure to ultimately bring on some disorder of the bowels, and is frequently the cause of appendicitis.

The starches are not digested in the upper stomach but are treated in the duodenum and from there on down through the whole length of the bowels. Consequently, if too much starchy food is used, particularly white bread, trouble is likely to set up. White bread does not contain the diastatic principles which nature placed in the wheat berry to help digest starch, but the white flour miller leaves that part out.

Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food was perfected purposely to supply the starch of the cereals and the other parts intended by nature for use, and presents them to the body in a form that will easily be digested. In fact they are predigested by a natural means during the process of manufacture, so that one can get all the energy and value from that sort of food without without overloading the organs.

A man from Brantford, Ont., says: "For the first twenty years of my life I lived out of doors, then I took up my present employment, which is indoors and requires the exercise of the brain rather than the body.

Gradually a languid feeling took possession of me, which developed into dyspepsia and later into constipation. These conditions continued for several years in spite of pills and laxatives without number. After a time I began to suffer from great lack of vitality and from time to time with cramps in the bowels which usually laid me up for three or four days. Finally the physician discovered that I was on the point of appendicitis. After one of these severe attacks, about six months ago, a neighbor brought in a part of a package of Grape-Nuts to try, and I noticed good results from the first, and have continued the use of the Food in place of white bread and cereals I formerly used.

I have gained considerably in weight, feel much better than I have in years, my complexion has cleared up, digestion is good, and I have not had a cramp since starting; but more important than all else, I notice a distinct clearness of mind sustained by an energy and nerve force that I have not known before.

I have learned an exceedingly valuable lesson in living, and will not, hereafter, load myself down with food requiring too much bulk to supply a sufficient amount of nourishment as I used to. This lesson in moderation in diet, and knowing how to select proper food is worth everything to me." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

MR. W. D. PARKER RESIGNS

The Acting Manager Withdraws from That Institution

Yesterday Mr. W. D. Parker resigned his position as acting manager of the Ontario Bank. During his 14 years of faithful service in that popular institution, latterly as manager, Mr. Parker has made hundreds of friends, who will sincerely regret his departure. Mr. Parker's resignation is entirely voluntary, and was tendered personally at a meeting of the Board of Directors in Toronto yesterday. The directors and Mr. Parker part good friends.

We are pleased to learn that he does not intend to leave town at present, at least.

It Stands First in the Estimation of a Prominent Justice of the Peace

Paine's Celery Compound

Do not allow dyspepsia, indigestion and stomach troubles to continue their body-destroying work as you enter the glad springtime. While nature is arousing from her winter slumber of death and putting on a brighter and more cheerful garb— while the birds, the rills and the brooks are joyously singing their peans of welcome to a new life, so should men and women endeavor to cast off the fetters of disease and put on that new life that enables them to appreciate the joys and beauties of a new-born season.

The great spring emancipator and liberator from the common diseases of life is Paine's Celery Compound. Tested for years by the ablest physicians and always triumphant in overcoming sickness, it is gladly recommended by the great majority of medical men from day to day.

Mr. John Mackenzie, Justice of the Peace, and Clerk of the Township of Sarawak and Brooke, Ont., says:

"You will think me ungrateful in not sooner acknowledging to you my entire cure from dyspepsia through the use of Paine's Celery Compound; but when I tell you that I suffered all the tortures of dyspepsia for five years, and during that time having taken most of the great remedies advertised as the only sure cure for the horrible complaint with little or no benefit, I was determined to be cured before I would be satisfied. Some of the "great remedies" would give me a little relief while I was taking them, but as soon as I stopped them I was as bad as ever.

"When I commenced taking Paine's Celery Compound I fully expected the same results, as my confidence in all medicines was shaken; but from the first dose of the compound I felt better, and after taking two bottles I thought I was completely cured, but to make the cure certain I took four bottles more. It is now over two years since I took the last dose, and have not had the least symptom of the disease in any way. I can from my own blessed experience recommend Paine's Celery Compound as a sure cure and a very pleasant medicine to take."

RETURN VISIT OF

PROF. O'BRIEN

Acknowledged by most intelligent and prominent people. His methods were approved of by judge and jury in the General Session, March 14th, 1901, which fact proves that scientific palmistry as practised by him has no connection with the vulgar fortune telling under the heading of astrology, tea cup tossing, card cutting, and the gipsies palm reading, who do not know the first principle of the theory.

Professor O'Brien's reputation is far and wide. People from every part of the world consult him. His patrons rank among judges M.P.'s, lawyers, clergymen, of every denomination, intelligent priests, doctors, bankers, students, mechanics, etc., etc.

Those who never had their head or hand delineated, should call at once on Prof. O'Brien. His delineations are graphic and instructive, and he always makes it a point to give the young people good and sound advice. Don't forget there is only one Prof. O'Brien.

In phrenology he is at the head of his profession, in palmistry he has no equal. Call for circular and see what the Catholic Register, News, Mail and Empire, Globe, etc., all the leading Toronto papers say.

During his first visit in Peterborough 300 people were examined by him, and still they come as fast as ever, for they all know what Prof. O'Brien's abilities are.

Those wishing to consult him please come early and avoid disappointments as Prof. O'Brien can only remain in Peterborough a few days longer. A photo read free to patrons. Private office at 302 Hunter st. terrace. Hours 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

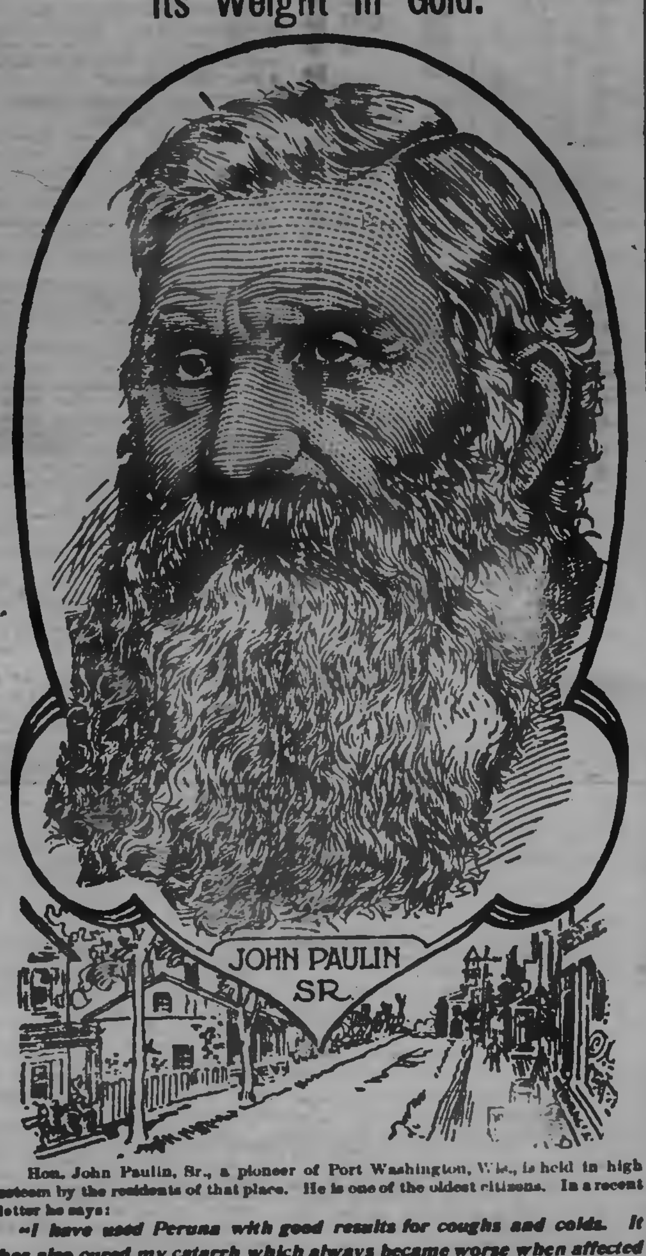
A WISCONSIN PIONEER

Recommends Pe-ru-na as Being Worth its Weight in Gold.



JOHN PAULIN SR.

Hon. John Paulin, Sr., a pioneer of Port Washington, Wis., is held in high esteem by the residents of that place. He is one of the oldest citizens. In a recent letter he says:

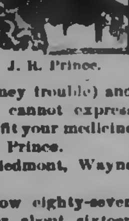
"I have used Peruna with good results for coughs and colds. It has also cured my catarrh which always became worse when affected with but a slight cold. I am recommending Peruna because it is worth its weight in gold."—JOHN PAULIN, SR.

Mr. A. Howell, Marietta, Ga., writes: "I have been troubled with catarrh in head, throat and stomach for several years, and from accounts that I have read in several newspapers of the good effects that many had received from Peruna, and whose veracity could not be doubted, caused me to give it a trial, and I bless the day that I did make a trial. It has made a new man of me.

"I was all my life up to about five years ago a very healthy man, and about that time I was troubled with catarrh. I tried a number of prescriptions from different doctors but none seemed to relieve me until I commenced the use of Peruna, and from its use I can truly say that I have been greatly benefited.

"I am now in my eighty-seventh year and can walk and get about as well as many much younger than myself and attribute it greatly to the use of Peruna. I keep some on hand all the time, and consider it the cheapest medicine in the world."—Mr. A. Howell.

J. R. Prince, East Leon, N. Y., writes: "Peruna has saved my life, and made a strong, healthy, jolly old man of me. Peruna is just what every family should not be without. I have taken very few colds since I have used Peruna, but when I do catch cold, Peruna is my medicine.



J. R. Prince.

"A minister came to me last summer and said that he had seen my testimonial in the paper, and began taking Peruna. He said that it straightened him right up—(he was troubled with kidney trouble) and Peruna cured him. I cannot express my thanks for the benefit your medicine has been to me."—J. R. Prince.

Abraham Ziegler, Piedmont, Wayne County, Mo., writes:

"My wife who is now eighty-seven years old, suffered for about sixteen years from severe catarrh of the head, which affected her sight and hearing. I saw Pe-ru-na advertised in your almanac, and testimonials similar to her case attracted my attention. I [illegible] bottle and it helped her so much she is now using the second bottle [illegible] she thinks it is something wonderful. Her hearing and sight are both in part restored."—Abraham Ziegler.

In old age the mucous membranes become thickened and partly lose their function. This leads to partial loss of hearing, smell and taste, as well as digestive disturbances. Pe-ru-na corrects all this by its specific operation on all the mucous membranes of the body. One bottle will convince anyone. Once used and Pe-ru-na becomes a life-long stand-by with old and young.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada. "The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

SEVEN MAIN QUESTIONS

THAT ARE USUALLY ASKED BY MEN WHO ARE TEMPTED TO LOOK INTO A MINING PROPOSITION

1st. What is the characteristic ore showing of the property being presented?

2nd. Where is it located and is it in the vicinity of other mines that are being worked?

3rd. Is there a good title to the mines or are they merely held on bond and lease, or on an option?

4th. What sort of a corporation has been formed to take title to the property and under what state laws; also the charter life of the company?

5th. Is it safe to trust the men who are at the helm?

6th. Will money put in be used to open up the mines or will it be pocketed by the managers?

7th. Will one stand a good chance to get a fair slice of profits against what is put in?

In answer to the above questions, a prospectus, or statement will be sent upon postal card request addressed to

CHINESE "OPEN DOOR" AS GERMANY SEES IT

London Times Exposes the Methods of the Germans in the Celestial Empire

THE GERMAN MONOPOLY IN SHANTUNG, CHINA

Treaty Provides That All Capital and Material for Development Shall Come from the Fatherland

London, March 15.—Dr. Morrison, the Pekin correspondent of The Times says the best commentary on the misleading German assurances regarding Shan-Tung, is that every recent Chinese directory and collection of the treaties between China and other powers contains the authoritive text of the German-Chinese agreement concerning railway, mining and other privileges in Shan-Tung, which was signed in March 1898. This treaty stipulates that if at any time the Chinese form schemes to develop Shan-Tung with the use of foreign capital, they must apply first to German capitalists. They must also first apply to German manufacturers for machinery, and only apply elsewhere when the Germans have declined to supply what is wanted. "Such," remarks Dr. Morrison, "is the approved German method of maintaining the 'open door' in Shan-Tung.

THE TIMES ON AMERICAN IDEALS.

London, March 15.—In an editorial The Times eulogizes Secretary Hays' address on President McKinley at the memorial exercises in the House of Representatives. The Times says the address was characterized by literary grace and skilful portraiture, and adds: "A nation's ideals, aspirations and ambitions are revealed in its favorite heroes. While Americans see in Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley, the highest types of rulers and the truest representatives of the country, the rest of the world may be reassured."

WHOLESALE PUNISHMENT RECOMMENDED.

London, March 15.—Referring to the recent student riots at Moscow, the St. Petersburg correspondent of The Times says the governor of the city and the Minister of the Interior urged that all the 500 students tried be deported to Siberia. The milder counsels of the Minister of Education prevailed, however, and only fifteen students were deported. The remainder were banished to various parts of Russia.

GERMAN AGRARIANS RECKLESS.

London, March 15.—The Berlin correspondent of The Times says the situation in regard to the Tariff bill, one of the chief measures of the present session, is as unsatisfactory for the Government and for the country as it could possibly be. The rate of progress warrants the most pessimistic anticipations. Of 946 separate items in the scheme, only 43 have as yet been discussed by the Reichstag Committee. The correspondent says the attitude of the Agrarians is one of irresponsible recklessness.

FEAR FOR SAFETY OF CHRISTIANS.

London, March 15.—Rumors of impending trouble in the Far East continue, says the Vienna correspondent of The Times. There is apprehension in regard to the safety of Christians in Macedonia and elsewhere. It is improbable, the correspondent asserts, that disturbances will lead to international complications, the agitators all acting on their own account, the ransom paid for Miss Stone having replenished their treasury, as undoubtedly her capture was concerted for that purpose. The danger of an outbreak of Mussulman fanaticism is regarded by the correspondent as remote.

YOUNG FARMER SHOT IN THIGH BY PRO-BOER

Suspected Party Leaves Country—Farmer Had a Few Hours Previously Knocked the Pro-Boer Down

Colborne, Ont., March 17.—An incident that rivals the Dr. Marlatt case at Burford, occurred on the Burnley Road, a few miles from here, yesterday afternoon, when a former minister of the Gospel was roughly handled by a young man who did not approve of the ex-minister's pro-Boer sentiments.

Henry L. Merrick, formerly pastor of a St. Albans, Vermont, church, but latterly local agent for an American assurance company, is the man whose intemperate language in connection with the South African War has made him many enemies hereabouts. He is a rabid pro-Boer, and when he learned of the capture of Gen. Methuen he publicly expressed the hope that Gen. Kitchener would be bagged next.

This remark was resented by a young farmer named Chapen Wilbert, who promptly knocked Merrick down. Wilbert was restrained from doing him further violence, and Merrick returned home.

That night when Wilbert was passing Merrick's place he was fired on by somebody concealed in a barn, and a charge of buckshot entered his left thigh. Wilbert did not wait to investigate, but hastened home, where the wound, which was a slight one, was dressed. He had strong suspicions as to who fired the shot, but failed to report the matter until the following morning, when complaint was lodged against Merrick. Then it was learned that the ex-minister had been driven to Cobourg, from which point, it is presumed, he took a train for the West.

Merrick's wife, however, says that he went to Cobourg to consult Hon. Wm. Kerr preparatory to bringing an action against Wilbert for assault and also for slander. She further says that her husband will prosecute several farmers in the vicinity of his home, whom he alleges threatened to burn his buildings if he continued to publicly sympathize with the Boers. Much excitement over the matter ensues.

London, March 17.—A despatch to the British South African Company from Cape Town reports that Cecil Rhodes is weaker this morning. Otherwise his condition is unchanged.

The Pall Mall Gazette says it understands that a syndicate of South African magnates has been privately formed for the purpose of taking over Cecil Rhodes' share holdings of every description in the event of his death with a view of preventing a dislocation of the markets.

AS TO AN EIGHT-DAY CLOCK

Conundrum Sprung by a Customer Upon a Local Jeweler

An Irishman entered a local jeweller's store a few days ago and asked to see some nice mantel clocks.

"I'm after wantin' to give the missus a bit av a clock for the mantel. Will yez be so kind as t' show me wan?" he asked.

The obliging clerk brought out one that struck the Irishman's fancy.

"And will yez tell me what yez would tax me for the likes of that?"

"Twenty-five dollars," said the clerk.

"Twinty-five dollars! Howly murther! For that little bit av a clock! Is there something wonderful about that bit av a clock, will yez tell me?"

"Certainly," said the clerk. "That is an eight-day clock."

"And phwat is that?" asked the Irishman.

"Why, it goes eight days without winding."

"So much as that?" said the Irishman, scratching his head. "Begorra, there's wan thing I'd like to be after asking yez. If that bit av a clock goes eight days without winding, how long, for the sake av St. Patrick, will it go if yez wind it?"

A NOVEL SCHEME

Crown Attorney Ball, of Woodstock, has his own ideas about money by-laws. He intends to give them definite shape in a bill, which, he says, he will have put before the Legislature at the next session by Mr. Pattullo, or by his successor. Mr. Ball believes that every citizen has the right to spend his money in the way he thinks best, but that he has no right to put his hand into another citizen's pocket against that citizen's wish. In short, Mr. Ball holds that those citizens who are in favor of giving money in the way of a bonus (and the word bonus has a wide meaning to Mr. Ball) should sign their names to the ballots, and that their property should be taxed to the amount required by the money voted by them. This would be perfectly fair, in Mr. Ball's opinion, as those who were not disposed to be progressive would be able to look on, without any cost to themselves, while their more ambitious fellows tried to make things move along in order to keep somewhere in the vanguard of the march of events.

Off For Biltmore.

Knoxville, Tenn., March 17 — The agricultural classes of the University of Tennessee leave to-day on their annual excursion to the famous Biltmore farms of Mr. George Vanderbilt, at Asheville, N.C. The students travel in a special car and will remain at Biltmore studying the model methods of farming and dairying pursued there.

TRIAL OF MARINE OFFICERS.

Manila, March 17 — Few incidents since the American military operations began in the Philippines have attracted more attention than the court-martial trial of Major Littleton W. T. Waller and Lieutenant John H. A. Day of the Marine Corps, which begins to-day. The court is composed of army officers and officers of the Marine Corps, with Colonel James Forney of the Marine Corps presiding. The two officers are accused of executing natives of the island of Samar without trial. The charges specify that Major Waller and Lieut Day killed three native stevedores on the streets of Basey, Samar, without trial. These stevedores were among the natives who accompanied the disastrous expedition of Major Waller and a detachment of marines to the interior of Samar last December. It is said that these stevedores mutinied and proceeded to the foothills, where they dug camotes, a variety of sweet potato, and that they later concealed and refused to turn them over to the Americans, saying that when the marines died of hunger they would have a good supply of arms and ammunition.

Washington, D.C., March 17—Much sympathy is expressed here for the two marine officers who are placed on trial at Manila to-day charged with executing natives of the island of Samar without trial. Friends of the two officers attribute their actions to loss of mind, due to the privations which they suffered in their expedition last December. Major Waller is known particularly well in this vicinity, having been appointed to the marine corps from Virginia. He was commissioned second lieutenant in 1880. He was on the frigate Lancaster in the Mediterranean, and was present at the bombardment of Alexandria. He was promoted to first lieutenant in 1885, and in 1889 became captain, and was stationed at Norfolk, Va., from 1891 to 1895. He was transferred to the battleship Indiana when the destruction of the Maine in Havana harbor indicated war with Spain, and had charge of the second battery on that ship. In November, 1899, Major Waller, who had been promoted to that rank July 25, 1899, was stationed at the marine barracks at Cavite, where he remained until early in June, 1900, when he sailed for Taku with a detachment of 100 marines, and took part in the fighting at Tien Tsin on July 14, assisting in capturing a fort. After leaving China he returned to Manila, and from there on October 22 1901, he went to the island of Samar with 330 marines. Soon afterwards he attacked a force of insurgents occupying a strong position at Sojton, and after two days' desperate fighting carried the position. Two of the marines and twenty-six insurgents were killed.

Case of Modoc Lynchers.

Alturas, Cal., March 17—The cases of J. R. Meyers, Joseph W. Levaston, E. S. Trowbridge, Orris Trowbridge, Fred Roberts, Harry Roberts, Dick Nichols and Claude Marcus will come up for preliminary examination today before Judge Harrington. The men are charged with the murder of Calvin Hall by lynching at Lookout, May 31st last. The nature of the charge has attracted widespread attention to the case and the court examination will be followed with much interest.

Gala Time for Hibernians.

St. Louis, Mo., March 17 — The Knights of St. Patrick have made great preparations for their annual St. Patrick's day banquet, to be given to-night at the Southern Hotel. Those who have accepted invitations to respond to toasts include Martin Glynn, national vice-president of the World's Fair Association; Rev. Francis Doyle, of Mobile, Ala., and Mayor James A. Reed, of Kansas City.

Irish Sale in Salisbury House.

London, March 17 — High society will be much in evidence to-day at the customary St. Patrick's day bazaar of the Irish Industries Association. The various articles offered will no doubt bring good prices and the poor Irish peasants for whose benefit the bazaar is held will realize a tidy sum. The sale is held in the Arlington street residence of Lord Salisbury, who donated the use of the entire house for the purpose.

For Defence of San Juan.

San Juan, Porto Rico, March 17 — A board of army officers meet here to-day to discuss the matter of areas needed for garrison and other purposes at each point selected in the project for the defence of the harbor of San Juan. The plan provides for the construction of concrete batteries equipped with guns of the latest and most improved pattern. The board consists of Lieutenant Colonel John M. K. Davis, Artillery Corps; Captain Clement A. F. Flagler, Corps of Engineers and Captain Joseph T. Crabbs, quartermaster.

Good Bout Promised at Savannah.

Savannah, Ga., March 17 — The arena of the Savannah Athletic Club is to be the scene to-night of what promises to be one of the best pugilistic contests seen hereabouts for a long time. The principals will be Tommy Corcoran and Jack Grace, who has recently returned to America after meeting with success in South Africa and England. Corcoran has recovered entirely from his last match with Owen Ziegler, and appears to be in condition to put up an interesting bout. The articles call for a 20-round affair at 147 pounds.

A Dakota Anniversary.

Yankton, S.D., March 17 — Dakota pioneers recall the fact that to-day marks the fortieth anniversary of the convening of the first Legislature of the Territory of Dakota, which met at Yankton March 17, 1862. Of the members of the upper house in that first assembly W. W. Brookings, of Minnehaha county, is the only one still living, and M. K. Armstrong, of this county holds the same distinction for the lower house.

Banquet by Celtic Sons.

Seattle, Wash., March 17—The Celtic Sons of Washington celebrate St. Patrick's day with a big banquet here to-night. Prominent men are to be present from many parts of the state.

General - Sports.

At the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday night two very interesting games of basketball were played. The first game was between the Ironclads, of the Wm. Hamilton Co., and the Electricians, of the C.G.E. Co. The Ironclads won by a score of 21—6.

The second game, between the Orioles of the E. F. Ackerman Co., and the Business College team, resulted in a victory for the college boys by a score of 26—16.

A large number of people witnessed the games, which were fast and interesting.

HOCKEY.

Montreal defeats Winnipeg.

The second game in the challenge series for the Stanley Cup was played in Winnipeg on Saturday night between the Victorias and the Montreal team. The ice was in splendid condition and after a fast game, the result was a victory for Montreal by a score of 5—0. This leaves the teams one game each. The deciding match will be played to-night and promises to be very interesting. At the present time it looks as though the Montreal team will capture the cup.

The Galt and Stratford Hockey Clubs have convinced themselves, if nobody else, that they were cheated out of the intermediate and junior championships by the O. H. A. Both clubs are talking of seceding and joining the W.O.H.A. or some other equally as influential and stable organization. It certainly is the toughest kind of luck to be beaten both on the ice and in the Committee room.—Toronto Star.

CRUEL BLOW TO STRATFORD.

Stratford is indignant because the O.H.A. committee did not give it a championship that it could not earn on the ice, and now threatens to cut loose from the association. No one will worry.—Brantford Expositor.

Not every hockey club has a Cabinet Minister as an enthusiastic follower. Hon. E. J. Davis, as patron of the Newmarket Club, saw his team reach the semi-finals in the O.H.A. intermediate series, but Hon. J. R. Stratton, patron of the Peterboro Club, had the pleasure of seeing his team win the championship. Mr. Stratton had a luncheon prepared for the Peterboro team at the Grand Union Hotel on their way home from Galt. The train was late arriving, and the players and their supporters did not have time to partake of the repast. On Tuesday night in Peterboro, in conjunction with the big banquet, which will be held in honor of the team, Mr. Stratton will dine a hundred of the team's enthusiasts.—Toronto Star.

LACROSSE.

In Stratford, the news that London is to have a senior lacrosse team this season, caused no surprise. Classic City men state that London has been importing players during the winter and has now a first-class team recruited there.

THE RING.

Harry Harris, the clever Chicagoan, and Andrew Tokell, a promising British featherweight, will come together.

It is highly probable that Geo. Gardner, of Lowell, Mass., will be secured to meet Tommy Ryan.

Bids close for Big Fight.

New York, March 15.—The limit of time fixed for the bidding for the heavyweight championship fight between James Jeffries, the present holder of the title, and ex-champion Bob Fitzsimmons, expires at noon to-day, and it is expected that choice of location will be announced to-night. The evident sincerity of the two big fighters in coming to terms has led to a spirited rivalry among the fistic organizations throughout the country to secure the battle. The high bids publicly announced by several of the leading clubs, has frozen out the smaller organizations, but it is believed that not fewer than six or eight clubs have put in bids worth considering. The choice apparently lies between Los Angeles, San Francisco and Fort Erie Canada, with the chances favoring the selection of San Francisco. The time will probably be fixed for the middle of May. Jeffries' theatrical tour closes this week, and he will go immediately to the vicinity of his home in southern California to condition himself for the battle. Fitzsimmons has taken time by the forelock, and is putting in six or eight hours a day in training at his home at Bath Beach. He appears already to be in splendid condition, and says he will be fit to fight the battle of his life in another month.

Walcott and Jackson Draw.

Baltimore, March 15.—Joe Walcott and "Young Peter" Jackson fought 10 rounds to a draw here to-night before the Eureka A. C. It was one of the fiercest battles ever seen here, and was witnessed by 3,000 people. Under the conditions of the match, Walcott was to have put Jackson out or get no part of the gate money. They went at it hammer and tongs from the start, and kept it up to the finish, both men being groggy at times, but finishing strong. It might have been anybody's fight at any stage, and though the sympathies of the audience were with Jackson, a local man, they were well satisfied with the decision of Referee Geo. Mats. Jackson showed marked improvement over his form in November last, when Walcott made a chopping block of him, but could not put him out.

Salt Lake City, Utah, March 17 — Followers of pugilism in Salt Lake are on the qui vive, in anticipation of the fight between Jack Wade, champion lightweight of Montana, and Jack Clifford of California, which is to be pulled off to-night under the auspices of the Salt Lake Athletic club. It will be a 20-round go at 133 pounds. The men are regarded as evenly matched and a fierce contest is expected.

COCK FIGHTING.

Hamilton, March 12.—There was a big cocking main a few miles out of this city last night, and a large number of sports from town were present There were in all, about forty birds entered, including several from the States.

Allentown Eisteddfod.

Allentown, Pa., March 17—The eisteddfod, for which arrangements have been in progress for months past, will open to-day. The contestants for the various prizes offered include more than five hundred singers from Scranton, Wilkesbarre and other cities and towns of northern Pennsylvania.

LETTER FROM LINCOLN IN HEAP OF RUBBISH.

Written in November, 1864 to Mother Who Lost Five Sons in the Civil War.

New York, March 15 — Soiled and faded, torn and frayed, a letter written by Abraham Lincoln a few months before his assassination was found yesterday in some rubbish and papers on Broadway near the Postoffice by Morris Cohen, No. 149 Forsyth street.

Cohen had been out in search of work for a week. He noticed a collection of old papers and torn letters which had been blown into one of the corners of the postoffice building. Overturning the mass with his foot, a faded autograph letter from President Lincoln came to light. It read as follows:

"Executive Mansion.
Washington, Nov. 21, 1864.

"To Mrs. Bixby, Boston, Mass.

"Dear Madam: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the Adjutant-General of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle.

"I feel how weak and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming, but I cannot refrain from tendering you the consolation which may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

"Yours very sincerely and respectfully.

"A. LINCOLN."

Cohen still has the letter. It is a noted letter, which appears in several of the standard biographies of Lincoln. How the original got here is a mystery.

Fisheries Congress Opens

St. Petersburg, March 17 — The international fisheries congress and exhibition, for which preparations have been making for some time, was opened to-day. Owing to the somewhat short notice given of the exhibition the United States could not participate officially, but several private pisciculturists of the Pacific coast of America are taking part. The congress will last five days. The programme includes papers and discussions on scientific investigation of salt and fresh water fish culture, oyster culture, legislation, statistics, the condition of life among fishermen, amateur fishing and other allied topics.

Arkansas Sunday School Teachers.

Van Buren, Ark., March 17 — Many visitors are here for the annual Sunday school institute of the Arkansas Methodist Conference, which will be formally opened this evening and continue in session through Tuesday and Wednesday. Prof. H. M. Hamill, D.D., of Nashville, Tenn., who is in charge of the gathering, has arranged an interesting programme consisting of papers, addresses and discussions of great interest to those engaged in Sunday school work.

Items of Interest

Chicago, March 15.—A mysterious dinner party has excited the curiosity of the press of this city. The diners were Boers and pro-Boers. The genuine Boers were the envoys from The Hague, C. H. Wessels and A. D. W. Wolmarans, who have been endeavoring in vain to cajole Roosevelt into interfering in the war in South Africa. Peter Van Vlissingen, of the Transvaal League, did the honors as host in a private room at the Chicago Athletic Club. The other guests were Mr. S. A. Calhoun and two traitorous Englishmen, Montague White, and Dr. G. B. Clark. Montague White was former Boer Consul in London, and Clark is known to be one of the most unpatriotic Britons in the Empire. He was formerly member of the British House of Commons, and was a prominent leader among the English pro-Boers. Dr. Clark arrived in Chicago on Thursday, and the Boer envoys arrived from Washington yesterday. Dr. Clark was very anxious to come here quietly and accomplish his secret mission without attracting public attention. The dinner last night was behind closed doors, and the members of the Transvaal League will not reveal the purpose of it.

London, March 17. — Sir F. Lugard, in his report as High Commissioner for Northern Nigeria, draws a gloomy picture of the kingdoms of Sokoto and Gando in the north. He says: "There is, probably, no part of the "Dark Continent," in which the worst forms of slave raiding still exist to so terrible an extent, and are prosecuted on so large and systematic a scale, as in the British Protectorate of Northern Nigeria. Each year, as the grass dries up, armies take the field to collect slaves." As to the development of trade, it would appear that little can be done until the caravan routes from the interior to the Niger are rendered safe. Sir F. Lugard thinks that much progress has been made in this during the past year, particularly from the Anglo-French frontier in Borgu, but so vast an area as Nigeria cannot be commercially developed except by railways, and "political reasons urge the construction of a railway in this vulnerable part of the Empire, as a portion of the scheme for imperial defence."

A FLOATING CHURCH FOR SAILORS.

London, March 17.—A new steamer of unique character arrived at Yarmouth recently, from the builders at Leith. She is named the Queen Alexandra by her Majesty's consent, and is the gift of an anonymous donor to the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen. The vessel is fitted out as a floating church and hospital for service with the fishing fleet. She is also provided with gear for trawling.

ANOTHER GREAT BOER DRIVE BREAKS THROUGH

The British Lines--Spanish Press Bitter, Says Heaven is Surely on Side of Boers

LORD WOLSELY HAS GONE TO CAPE TOWN

His Visit Will be Entirely of a Private Nature—Another Canadian Trooper, R. J. Moore, is Ill

London, March 17.—A despatch from Heilbron to the Central News reports another great drive for Boers by the British cordon last Sunday. The line extended from Frankfort on the right to Lindley on the left. It resulted as usual and had the usual features of the Boers driving the maddened cattle at the line.

Commandant Mentz, with the Heilbron commando of the Boers, broke through the Heilbron-Wolve Hoek blockhouse line at Gottenburg last night. So far as known only one Boer was killed and five were captured. The British columns, during the course of the pursuit of Commandant Mentz, picked up scattering parties of Boers, aggregating fifty men.

WOLSELEY GOING TO CAPE

London, March 17.—Field Marshal Lord Wolseley, the former commander-in-chief of the British army, will start for Cape Town to-morrow on private business.

Colonel Frank Rhodes and Arthur Rhodes, brothers of Cecil Rhodes, and Lady Methuen, will be passengers on the steamer which will take Lord Wolseley to Cape Town.

London, March 17. — The Madrid correspondent of the Times says the defeat of Methuen has evoked fierce rejoicing in the Spanish press. The Imparcial regards his defeat as the turn of the tide, saying Heaven is manifestly on the side of the Boers, while on the other side are "Satan and Beelzebub, the devil of pride and the devil of avarice."

The abuse lavished on Great Britain by the Spanish press, says the correspondent, is only comparable to that formerly poured on Spain's own unfortunate generals in Cuba and elsewhere.

CANADIAN TROOPER ILL.

Ottawa, March 17.—The Casualty Department at Cape Town notified the Governor-General to-day of the serious illness of Trooper R. J. Moore, of the S.A.C. His father is Wm. Moore who resides somewhere in the North-West Territories.

A PIANO FULL OF EXPLOSIVES.

London, March 17.—The Daily Chronicle publishes the following letter from a yeoman in South Africa: You mustn't think that I'm cruel because I go in for smashing things, but you can never trust a Boer. The other day we came to an empty farmhouse, shut up; we broke into it and came across a piano with a note attached begging us not to smash it, as it was a present from somebody's mother. I guessed that note was all bunkum, and suggested that we should open the instrument. We did so, and, sure enough, it was full of ammunition. That was good enough for us; we burnt it down, but it did not burn long, for the house blew up.

The Queen Alexandra is splendidly equipped, and will be a great boon to the thousands of men engaged in the deep sea fisheries.

A NOVEL IDEA IN EDUCATION

London, March 17. — A question was asked at a recent meeting of the London School Board as to whether teachers were empowered to expend prize money in the purchase of pictures or toys for the use and pleasure of the children generally. The board possesses a teacher, the head-mistress of an infants' department. This lady is an enthusiast, and believes in the ideal. She thinks that children should not be rewarded for doing right by prizes, but that they should be taught to do right for right's sake, and that the way to get this principle inculcated among them is to make their surroundings as enjoyable as possible. and she has got the board to divert the money due to her school from the prize fund, and to allow her to expend it in toys and pictures for her school. The result of the experiment is being watched with interest, although no definite answer was given to the question.

London, March 17. — Mr. R. W. Hanbury, M. P., president of the Board of Agriculture, has appointed a departmental committee to inquire into and report as to the present position and future prospects of forestry and the planting and management of woodlands in Great Britain, and to consider whether any measures might with advantage be taken, either by the provision of further educational facilities or otherwise, for their promotion and encouragement.

MOUNTAIN SIDE SPLIT OPEN

Seattle Wash., March 17. — A special from Juneau, Alaska, says that a letter has been received there from the Greek priest at Kenai, on Cook Inlet, telling of a terrible volcanic eruption in the vicinity about January 1. The whole side of an unnamed mountain seemed to be split open and fire and lava pouring from it. The village of Kenai was covered with ashes, and the earthquake which accompanied the eruption caused several tidal waves, doing much damage.

BURGULARS IN JOLIET, ILLINOIS.

Joliet, Ill., March 17.— About half-past one o'clock yesterday morning six masked robbers broke into the Exchange Bank at Minooka, eight miles west of here, blew open the safe and stole $2,000 in cash. The noise awakened Theodore Kreis, an employe of A. K. Knapp, the owner of the bank, and former Marshal Wm. Paul. Kreis went to the home of Mr. Knapp and told him there were robbers at the bank. Kreis was met by one of the robbers, who was on guard, was knocked down, and pounded into insensibility. Mr. Knapp and another man while on his way to the bank were confronted by two men with four revolvers, who threatened them with instant death if they attempted to proceed further.

The burglars made good their escape on a hand car, and have not yet been captured.

Winnipeg, March 17. — Rev. Joseph Hogg and Rev. W. L. Armstrong reported to Dr. Douglas, the city health officer, yesterday, of the unsanitary condition of a collection of shacks known as "New Jerusalem" west of Princess street, and immediately north of the Canadian Pacific Railway company's freight sheds. The matter was brought to light by several ladies of the relief association, who visited that district during their slumming work. They found the hovels filthy, crowded, and unfit for human beings to live in. Most of the people there are foreigners.

The place is crowded with humanity and dogs. The evil results which would ensue if infectious disease got into the quarter was pointed out, and the health officials promised to investigate the report. It is said that they are all owned by a Jew who rents them out for the lump sum of $[illegible] per month.

Most of the residents are Galicians and other immigrants who, failing to make a living in the country, returned to the city. The children may be seen in large numbers in the north end, travelling through the city, picking up fuel, and in fact anything else which can be turned to use. The ladies of the relief association found them living in wretched lean-to's, and with but the rare necessities of existence.

London, March 17.—Recently the day's business in the House of Commons opened with the presentation of a round of petitions unexampled in the annals of Parliament. The entire British Empire came to the House in this constitutional form to declare in favor of the King's Declaration which "must not be tampered with."

To Mr. J. W. Mellor, K.C., M.P., had been entrusted the work of presenting these petitions, which were piled up on the floor near the Mace, and required two stalwart janitors for their removal. They were organized by the Church Association, and are signed, to the extent of over half a million signatures, by the King's subjects in Great Britain, the Colonies, and British possessions; also by British residents in foreign countries — France, Germany, and Austria-Hungary. England alone contributes [illegible] signatures, Scotland 51,196, Wales [illegible], and Ireland [illegible].

Among "Greater Britain" are the following:—Melbourne, [illegible]; N.S.W., [illegible]; Fremantle, [illegible]; New Zealand, [illegible]; Hobart, [illegible]; Canadian (about) [illegible]; British Columbia, [illegible]; Nova Scotia, [illegible]; St. John's, [illegible]; South Africa, [illegible]; West Africa, (over) [illegible].

The most interesting petition came from Zululand, which was written in the native language and translated, in accordance with the rules of the House, before being presented to Parliament.

With regard to the third clause of the Oath, the disestablishment of the Church in Ireland in 1869 makes the use of the former language impossible and it is probable, states the Press Association, that the King-in-Council will revert to the simpler form of the clause which was employed at the coronation of William and Mary, who were thus interrogated:—

"Will you, to the utmost of your power, maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant reformed religion established by law; and will you preserve unto the bishops and clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain unto them?

It is also under the consideration of the Privy Council to alter the clauses dealing with the King's title, so as to include his Majesty's new one of "Emperor of India and Sovereign Lord of the British Dominions Beyond the Seas."

London, March 17 — The English flat racing season which commences at Lincoln to-day is of particular interest to Americans for several reasons. There are more American stables to be represented than ever before, and, what is more interesting, the expatriated William Waldorf Astor has announced his intention to race a stable of thoroughbreds that will give the millionaire Americans on the English turf a hard battle for first honors. It is interesting to note also, in view of the loud outcry from some quarters regarding the American invasion, that in the three handicaps to be run during the Lincolnshire meeting the top weight in each case is an American horse. The piece de resistance of the Lincolnshire meeting is the mile handicap, worth $10,000, which has been for nearly a century the first important race of the year. The Lincoln meeting lasts only three days, after which the racing is transferred to Liverpool to finish up the week. There the Spring cup is a feature, but it is entirely overshadowed by The Grand National, which, with the exception of the Derby, attracts the biggest crowd of any race in the world. The distance is four and one-half miles, and the number of obstacles to be essayed thirty-two.

THE LORD'S DAY

It is pathetic to note the efforts made by those who would preserve inviolate the Sabbath or Sunday as a day of rest and worship. Earnest men and women band themselves together in the large cities and bombard the civic authorities, the shipping, the railway people — all large employers of labor whose concerns run on Sundays, with petitions, which are probably thrown into the waste paper basket. The trains run, the steamers load, the factories hum, the chaffering is heard on the streets, the theatre lures, and there is no more Sunday. It is sad enough, but it seems inevitable. Commercial interests are supreme. It is all wrong, but this is the fact. Competition has become absolutely ruthless, and every advantage must be seized to keep the place which has been won. And the tendency is to more and more work on Sunday. The sanctity of the day is no longer regarded. The Puritan Sabbath deserved to perish, as it had been made a Killjoy, and millions had a right to curse it for the terrors which it inspired, but the loss of the day of rest and recreation and worship in the seven is incalculable. One may find the Sunday still in certain parts of the country, where all is peaceful and still, and the bells chime sweetly and the people in their Sunday clothes, wend their way to church—happy content, without misgiving or question, but in the large centres I fear the good people will labor in vain for the recovery of a lost institution which was a blessing to the race.

THE PRINCE AND THE AMERICANS

Our democratic friends to the south insist upon the simplicity of their life and manners. They are strong and wholesome and independent. They regard with scorn the effete trappings of royalty. They spur all inherited distinctions. They smile contemptuously at the ceremonies which mark the great occasions at the European courts. And yet such is the fallibility and inconsistency of human nature that the people who deride the fripperies of monarchial life, grovel in the dust before a prince of the blood. Our good friends have always toadied to greatness, but it is right to note that there is a saving grace in the fact that they laugh at themselves. They would be very angry (for they are not quite out of their teens yet, you know), if outsiders called them sycophants, but they are willing to poke fun at their own weakness, which just saves the situation from utter pathos. Prince Henry of Prussia was in the United States, and crowds pressed to shake his hand, to catch a glimpse of him in passing, to breathe the air with the brother of the German Emperor. The whole country was in a furore. There was deep heartburning as to who had the best claim to gentility and precedence, and the simplest democrats in the world, who threw off the monarchial yoke, are inventing genealogical trees to give the sense of antiquity and prestige. It is all very amusing. The Americans are the cleverest people in the world. They are the natural conquerors in the domain of invention and trade. And they are also unconscious humorists. Some of their public men gravely take them to task now and then, and insist upon simplicity and seriousness, but how can you expect a grave face when you have a breezy youth, and the world at your feet? The true meaning of and reverence for life will come by and by. But we are young, we are ardent, we are confident, and all the laws and facts of Cosmos move and operate for us. And therefore we shall be foolish, if we want to, and we shall spend millions to see and entertain a prince, although in the general we despise princes; and we will toady and eat dirt, although we are simple; and we shall laugh at our own inconsistency and feel sublimely certain that whatever we do or say, the future of the world is ours—not because Mr. Stead says so, but because the way of nature and evolution, climate, geography and population make it so.

Remarkable Surgery.

One of the most astonishing feats of surgery to date, though we are getting accustomed to these marvels, was exhibited at the recent surgical conference at Lyons, France. The subject was a young man whose larynx had been removed and replaced by an artificial one of hard rubber. "The natural glottis and vocal cords," says a French journal from which the Literary Digest translates, "are replaced by a thin rubber diaphragm with a slit in it. As the size and tension of this diaphragm are always the same, it can vibrate in only one way and produce but a single note. The man's voice, therefore, never varies in pitch, and is much like the voice of Mr. Punch; but as the modifications of the voice which produce vowels and consonants are due to motions of the palate, tongue and teeth, which parts remain intact, the subject can speak distinctly, though always in the same tone. Above the rubber larynx is a metal sieve, which prevents the entrance of solid food into the larynx and breathing-tubes. Liquids which trickle in are led away by a tube connecting the rubber larynx with the esophagus or gullet. There is still another tube which comes out in the front of the neck. This enables the subject to breathe more freely than he could do through his artificial glottis and gives this a rest. When he wishes to speak, he stops the hole in his neck with his finger."

Sandwichmen's Banquet.

There is an annual gathering at the Lambeth Baths, London, Eng., during the Christmas holiday week which is well on its way towards becoming one of the historic celebrations of the great British capital. Certainly it is of a kind that would be possible nowhere else. It is the annual banquet to the London sandwichmen. Organized originally by the proprietors of Reynolds' newspaper, it is, perhaps, one of the most grateful of festivals in Yuletide benevolence the world over, largely because its recipients are the human flotsam and jetsam of the greatest mass of humanity congregated in one spot on the earth. Reynolds has the first right to describe it, and the report of the proceedings in that newspaper has a favor of Dickens' London that makes it good reading:—

An air of expectation hung over and possessed the crowd which thronged around the doors of the Lambeth Baths at about six o'clock on Monday night. This expectation was the child of knowledge. These men, or at least many of them, knew what awaited them. Their nostrils had been already invaded by savory odors and they were glad in the belief that huge joints of beef, legs of mutton, loins and legs and briskets of pork, with vegetables galore, with hot steaming Christmas pudding and delicately-flavored mince pies awaited them. They knew that they would be able to wash this goodly fare down with honest ale, or that, if they preferred, they would be permitted to quaff the innocuous ginger beer. They knew, too, that they would afterwards be invited to smoke sound tobacco—for the great tobacconists who contribute to this feast never send aught but the good leaf—out of a homely pipe. They knew, moreover, that while they did this they would be listening to good music and merry humor and witnessing clever art. They were finally ecstasied in their anticipation by the sure and certain hope that when they quitted the hall they would carry with them a gift of clothing, including a warm, cosy, cardigan jacket, a packet of tea, a briar-wood pipe, and—laugh not, ye Philistines; it meant Christmas comfort to these men—a florin coined in his Majesty's own mint. Was it any wonder that these poor fellows, possessed by the sure and certain knowledge of sure and certain good cheer, counted, as the poet says, "the weary beatings of the clock?"

They did not allow their anxiety to hurry them into indecorum. When at last the doors were thrown open they marched to their seats as quietly and with as excellent an obedience to the usages of courtesy as even the estimable Jeames Yellowplush would desire. There was no scurrying, no scuffling. It was a procession of well-contained men. A genial, good-tempered officer stood at the inner door, with one or two other men in uniform beside him; but their services were never required. A cheery "Pass on, my lads," from the sergeant was sufficient to quicken the procession, and a good-natured warning was sufficient to check it. The savory smell which had defied bricks and mortar and flavored the very atmosphere of the street had now become a comforting, assured fact. The great doors of the kitchen were open; and the guests caught glimpses of white-aproned and becapped cooks hoisting up from cavernous saucepans veritable mountains of well-cooked, honest English meat. The sight was the hors d'oeuvre of the feast. These men wanted afterwards no stimulant to a jaded appetite. They revealed—most of them—a fine Falstaffian capacity.

I regard skimmilk as a valuable part of the hog ration, worth at least 30 cents a hundred pounds, when mixed with grain, either whole or ground. That is, if a dollar's worth of feed be used for hogs, 30 cents' worth, or one hundred pounds, of skimmilk would make the ration more valuable than if the whole dollar was used for grain, with only water instead of skimmilk.

This skimmilk keeps the hog healthy, and therefore thrifty, preventing constipation and its attending evils, especially swine plague or hog cholera, the dread of all farmers raising hogs. In fact, I cannot recall a case of hog cholera or other disease among hogs where skimmilk formed a good part of the hog ration. I have in mind notably the case of one of our station patrons who recently sold a nice, thrifty hog in this market, weighing some four hundred pounds, fed and raised wholly on skimmilk from this station, which shows that we can make porkers equal to the best grain fed, and more healthy than those fed on grain alone. If this result of feeding skimmilk can be obtained in one instance, why can it not be obtained in many and by any farmer?—J. H. Crowley, in Kansas Farmer.

"Johnnie," said his mother to the incorrigible, "I am going to have your father whip you when he comes home tonight!"

"Please don't, mamma," replied Johnnie, penitently, "paw is allus so tired when he comes home."—Boston Post.

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times. On the other side was written "I have went home."

"The gravity which is supposed to attend all court proceedings was seriously disturbed in a New York court room one day last week," said a young lawyer who had just returned from a business trip to that city. Current History.

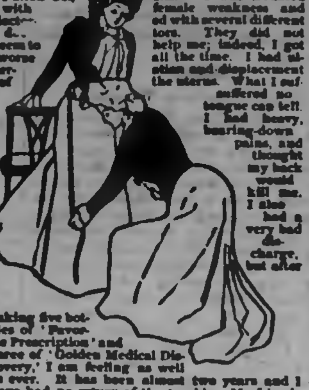
Current History for February presents a record of the world's events during December last and closes the eleventh volume of this valuable chronicle. A striking portrait of Secretary Hay is the frontispiece of this number, to accompany an opening article by Joseph Fitzgerald, entitled "The New Treaty and Secretary Hay." The contents in general deal with Congress and the President's message, the South African war, the United States in China's crisis, the Supreme Court decisions respecting the Philippines, the Pan-American Congress, South American matters, Lord Rosebery's Chesterfield speech, Marconi's triumph, etc. Price $1.50 a year. Beginning with the March number a new department entitled "Literary Chronicle," conducted by Nathan Haskell Dole, will be added to the magazine, considerably increasing its value. Other important additions to the corps of writers are being made. Sample copy free on application. Address Current History Co., Boston, Mass.

A remedy suggested for scours in lambs or sheep is to give them two fresh raw eggs. Repeat in twelve hours if relief does not come. This is worth cutting out and pasting in your scrapbook. Insect powder dusted into the wool is recommended for sheep ticks. A pound will dust from ten to fifteen sheep effectively. Avoid buying large, coarse boned rams to mate with small ewes. Size should be attained gradually and in accordance with the correct principles of breeding. A sheep will stand severe cold so long as kept dry and out of draughts. A wet fleece becomes a good heat conductor and absorbs bodily heat until the animal becomes thoroughly chilled.—Shepherd.

Anecdotal.

George Ade, the Chicago man who writes the "Fables in Slang," hails from Indiana, which he has said is a State which a man "should never go back on—or to." The other night he met an Indiana woman who asked him if he had ever noticed how many bright people came from Indiana. "Yes," he replied, "and the brighter they are the quicker they come."



Women are vastly more patient than men. It is scarcely believable that a woman, suffering past all telling, can attend to business, and bend and stoop with a back whose ache is agony. And beyond all this she smiles as she bends and stoops about her customer. A man might swallow down an oath or keep back a groan, but his face would be like a thundercloud, and his voice scarcely disguise his irritation.

For women who suffer from backache, bearing-down pains, or other pains due to womanly diseases, there is no other medicine equal to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It regulates the womanly functions, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

There is no alcohol in "Favorite Prescription" and it is entirely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics. A vegetable preparation, it cannot disagree with the weakest condition.

"I wish to thank you for the good your medicine have done me," writes Mrs. Mae Brown, of Canton, Ills. "I was troubled with female weakness and doctored with several different doctors. They did not help me; indeed, I got seem to worse all the time. I had ulceration and displacement of the uterus. What I suffered no tongue can tell. I had heavy, bearing-down pains, and thought my back would kill me. I also had a very bad discharge, but after taking five bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and three of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' I am feeling as well as ever. It has been almost two years and I have had no return of the trouble. My friends tell me I don't look as though I ever was sick."

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Piechaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they meant it for a joke or not. It's a hard life; and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unawares by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. So think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day, marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous.' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation."

MIDY

Anecdotal.

In an after-dinner speech at the London Savage Club recently on the purity of the English tongue, Winston Churchill remarked: "I have written five books, the same number as Moses—but I will not press the comparison."

Charles II. once granted an audience to the courtly Quaker, William Penn, who, as was his custom, entered the royal presence with his hat on. The humorous sovereign quietly laid aside his own, which occasioned Penn's enquiry: "Friend Charles, why dost thou remove thy hat?" "It is the custom," he replied, "in this place for one person only to remain covered."

Eben Jones, the crabbed millionaire lumberman of Minnesota, hired all his mill-hands himself. One day a Swede applied to the irritable old man, and secured a place on the saws. As he was leaving he said: "Mester Yones, in does yob you geef me doaller and hallef a day. Besides dat, do you eat me or do I eat myself?" "Oh, eat yourself!" replied the old man. "I have dyspepsia."

Phil May, the noted English cartoonist, went into an oyster saloon in the East End of London one day and ordered a dozen natives, when another man entered and gave a similar order, enquiring anxiously of the proprietor if the oysters were fresh. "Fresh!" echoed the bivalve merchant. "Fresh! Why"—indicating Mr. May with a wave of his hand—"the first oyster that gentleman took up bit his lip!"

An Irishman who was charged with stealing a watch from a fellow-citizen, stoutly denied the impeachment in court, and brought a counter accusation against his accuser for assault and battery committed with a frying-pan. "Why did you allow the prosecutor, who is a smaller man than yourself, to assault you without resistance?" asked the judge; "had you nothing in your hand to defend yourself with?" "Bedad, your honor," said Pat, "I had his watch, but what was that against a frying-pan?"

The "Scotsman" tells of a Dublin man who insisted that a Scotch friend should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last cigar. "Now, look here," said the man from Dunedin, "I'll hae nae mair o' this. Here ye've been keepin' me at your house for a month, an' payin' for a' the amusements and cabs and so on—I tell you I'll stan' nae mair o' it! We'll just hae a toss for this one!"

One of the eccentricities of that most penurious of pedagogues, Dr. Barrett, was that he hardly ever appeared outside the walls of Trinity College, conducting his modest menage there with the help of a decrepit old housekeeper, who attended to all his wants, even to daily fetching from a nearby dairy the half-pennyworth of milk needed in the establishment. When one frosty morning, Mary, going on this errand, slipped and broke her leg, the worthy doctor for the first time in years left the college to pay her a visit in the hospital. On reaching her cot, it is related that his sympathetic greeting was: "Hallo, Mary; so you broke your leg; I suppose you broke the jug, too, but where is the half-penny?"

Mr. Justice Mathew of England is a man of such mild and kindly exterior, with such gentle voice and manner, that almost invariably he gives the impression of being a simple country gentleman rather than a profound lawyer. This was evidently the idea of a professional seller of painted birds, who some years ago met him in the neighborhood of the law courts, and, exhibiting one of his birds, asked him if he could tell to what species it belonged. The judge stopped, examined the bird with great care, pretended to admire the gaudy plumage, examined it again, and then remarked: "I do not think I have ever seen a bird exactly like this, but, judging from the old proverb that 'Birds of a feather flock together,' I should say it was a jailbird."

Far Reaching Influence.

"OLD-FASHIONED Indian stories, the dime novels of years back which were within the reach of all the boys, were an important factor in building up the great West," said a typical Westerner. "These novels used to circulate in a neighborhood till they had been read by every boy and had fallen to pieces through handling. They fired the ambition of the youngsters, set them to practising shooting and riding, and sent many of them to the West in search of adventures. Some soon returned to their homes, others became bad men and were killed in time, but the great mass of them, too proud to return home, created the vigorous, wide-awake population of our Western States. I have talked to hundreds of our Western pioneers about the causes which brought them west, and a majority of them admit that dime novels had more to do with it than anything else."

A Heretic.

"The man is a drivelling idiot," said the trust magnate.

"A plumb fool," agreed the coal baron.

"An unmitigated lunatic," assented the steel king.

"As brainless as a barrel," added the corporation lawyer.

"But what has he done?" asked the ordinary citizen.

The crowd was convulsed with laughter.

"Why, he says," they replied, choking and gurgling, "he actually says that money isn't everything!"—Smart Set.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

And a peal of merry laughter, bright and joyous as a mocking-bird's, fills the old sunny kitchen, much to the amusement of the farmer and the discomfiture of the two girls, who put in an angry disclaimer at once, muttering something about "shocking fibs."

"You shall not go now anyhow," said Hetty, turning angrily away. "If you went I should stay at home."

"So should I," said Olive.

"That would make the picnic, or lawn-fete, or whatever it's going to be, ever so much pleasanter," declared Daisy, with a gay laugh that startled the robins under the eaves from their nests.

"Don't quarrel, girls," interrupted the farmer, hurriedly. "You all know how it makes me feel, and your mother a-layin' in her grave."

"Poor papa!" cried the impulsive Daisy, throwing her soft white arms around his rough neck, and kissing his sunburned face. "I'm awfully sorry I said anything to Hetty and Olive before you. I'll stay at home if you want me to, papa; I wouldn't do it for them, though, mean things."

Like a flash Daisy had torn herself from her father's arms, and was hurrying across the clover-field to her favorite nook, the low branches of the peach tree, to have a real, good cry, for it was a disappointment a bitter, grievous disappointment to this sweet sixteen year old little Daisy, that she must stay at home alone for two long, dreaded weeks, and miss the grand lawn fete, too, where there would be dancing and feasting, mirth, music and merriment. Oh, dear, oh, dear, how could she ever stay away!

Ah, there was no one to warn her that it was the hand of fate trying to prevent her from going to Briar Hall.

Daisy's eyes were so blinded by tears, she did not see the handsome young man approaching until she ran directly into Alexander Hamilton's arms.

"Dear me!" she cried, persistently turning her tear-swollen face another way. "Is it you, Mr. Aleck?"

"What is the matter, Daisy?" he asked anxiously, attempting to take the little, slim, white, fluttering hands which covered her face, in his; "you've been crying."

"I haven't!" flashed out Daisy, defiantly, "and there's nothing the matter," but somehow the rebellious tears would trickle through the slim fingers.

"Daisy," he said, earnestly, still endeavoring to capture the little hand; "I have something to say to you—something to talk over. Come, let us walk on through the orchard, I——"

"I know all about it, and I don't want to walk," cried Daisy bitterly. "If you go on up to the house you'll find Hetty and Olive there ready enough to talk to you about it."

"But it's you I want to talk to, Daisy," said handsome Aleck Hamilton, eagerly. "I am sure you haven't heard about it, and don't know about it," but before he could finish his sentence Daisy had left him and was half-way across the orchard.

"I almost wish I had told Mr. Aleck all about Hetty and Olive's meanness in teasing papa to keep me at home—mean things," she sobbed.

Alexander Hamilton had walked slowly on to the fields where he espied Farmer Gordon, who had returned to his plowing.

"I'm right glad to see you, Aleck, my boy," said the farmer, extending his toil-hardened hand to the young man. "Have you been around to the house? I reckon you'll find Hetty and Olive there."

"I haven't been to the house; my visit this morning is to you, Mr. Gordon," replied the young man, modestly—fairly blushing to the roots of his bonny dark curls.

"To me, eh?" returned the farmer, good-naturedly.

"Yes, sir," said Aleck. "I leave the village today. I am come to say good-bye."

"Well, well," exclaimed Farmer Gordon, in astonishment; "rather a sudden notion, ain't it? I hope you ain't leavin' for good."

"I am afraid I shall have to be gone a year, sir. I will make a confidant of you, Mr. Gordon, for I know it will go no farther. I am going to see how a speculation I have on hand turns out. Every dollar I have earned since I was a boy—pushed out into the world to battle for myself—has gone into it. If I lose, I will bear it like a man. I can commence life anew; thank God, I have strong hands and a stout willing heart."

"That you have, lad," exclaimed the farmer, heartily.

"I hope you may, lad," returned Farmer Gordon. "I've allus stuck to farmin' myself. I don't know much about raisin' and gainin', but I hope for your sake you'll come out at the top of the heap."

"Thank you," said Aleck, warmly—adding in a rather embarrassed way: "I have a great incentive to make money now, and return to the village as quickly as possible, for I—I—shall leave my heart behind me."

"Eh!" said the farmer in astonishment.

"It is quite true," said handsome Aleck, paling a little, yet going on bravely. "I leave all that the world holds dear to me in this village—ay, on this farm. Can you not understand, Mr. Gordon—surely you must have seen that I love one of your daughters."

WHEN I was a schoolgirl, with many definite opinions, I remember having a talk with a man of thirty, who happened to advance a theory—I forget about what—which aroused in me ardent dissent. I eagerly presented my view, which was the exact reverse of his, and paused for him to defend himself. He gave me a friendly look; then leaned back and gazed out of the window, with the remark, "Well, there's something in that, too."

I felt as if the bottom had dropped out of the room. For, I thought, if one really held an opinion, how can he say there is "something in" the contrary view? But since then I have not only had many such experiences; I have myself become an offender. And I wonder if it is altogether a gain. It may be sheer contrariness, but I do get a little tired, sometimes, of broad-mindedness and tolerance, and long for good, bigoted narrowness that can be counted on. I should really like to be told: "No, you're totally wrong; what you have just said is false absolutely. The facts of the case are these, and if you don't believe it, so much the worse for you." How I should enjoy that! But I have not had the experience since my brothers grew up. Occasionally, in desperation, I have assumed the part myself, and taken my stand on positive assertion of a single half truth; but it does no good. I simply live over that early experience; again I am told, "There's something in that, too," and it gives me the feeling, to quote a figure used by a friend in another connection, of having come up against a soft curtain where I expected a wall.

"A plain categorical proposition," says Mr. Morley, "is becoming less and less credible to average minds. Or at least the slovenly willingness to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time is becoming more and more common." I do not think it is quite this. Men surely used to hold two directly contradictory propositions at one and the same time with the utmost ease. The point is that they did not know they were contradictory, whereas we do; and still we hold them—or rather, entertain them, as one would interesting guests. Our attitude toward every opinion we meet might be expressed thus: "Well, there's something in that, too. Come right in!" And the new opinion comes in, and draws a chair up to the hospitable fire, and finds a friendly circle of other opinions there; they shake hands all round, and each tells the others what good fellows they are.

This is amiable, but, in honesty, I don't like it. It is like the congress of religions, which I have never been able to understand, save on the assumption that each secretly hopes to convert the others by taking them off their guard, or that no one is in earnest about his religion except as regards its common moral basis. The old attitude used to be, "You think differently from me: therefore you're wrong, therefore you're bad, therefore I'll kill you." One by one these clauses have been dropped, beginning with the last one; thus reversing the system of "the House that Jack Built." First we stopped killing the other man, then we stopped thinking he was bad, and now we have nearly stopped thinking he is wrong. May this not be carried too far?—From the "Contributors' Club."

Defeated the Bicyclist.

"GO and hitch up the ostrich," is not at all an absurd command on an ostrich farm. There these great birds are often harnessed to a carriage, and make fairly good substitutes for horses. Although they cannot draw a heavy load, their speed is a recommendation.

At Jacksonville, Florida, there is a bird named Oliver W. that can run a mile in two minutes and twenty-two seconds. His owners claim that he is more satisfactory than a horse because he eats less, never shies at anything, never runs away, and goes steadily at a good pace without laziness or fatigue.

This particular ostrich appears to like his work. When the little carriage is brought out he comes running toward it at full speed, with both wings spread out, ready to have the harness put on.

On one occasion a cyclist tried to pass Oliver W. on a long, smooth stretch of road. He came up behind the carriage, thinking to get ahead and escape the dust. Oliver W. thought differently. He threw his head high in the air, gave a flap with his wings, and went forward with a speed that astonished the cyclist. Putting forth more effort, the latter made another attempt to pass the ostrich, but the faster the pedals of the bicycle moved the faster sped the long legs of the bird.

It so happened that the cyclist had a record as a fast rider, and to be distanced by an ostrich was not to his liking. For two miles he tried to pass his feathered rival, but was then obliged to give up the race, defeated.

Some fast horses have tried conclusions with Oliver W. who seems to like nothing better than testing their speed, starting slowly, to make them think it easy to distance him, and then gradually increasing his pace.

Modest Fees.

LAWYERS do not usually get the small end of a bargain with their clients; but the "Green Bag" recalls two incidents where the clients had rather the best of it.

Sir Walter Scott's first client was a burglar. He got the fellow off, but the man declared that he hadn't a penny to give him for his services. Two bits of useful information he offered, however, and with these the young lawyer had to be content. The first was that a yelping terrier inside the house was a better protection against thieves than a big dog outside; and the second, that no sort of lock bothered his craft so much as an old rusty one.

Small compensation as this was, the first brief of the noted French lawyer, Monsieur Rouher, yielded still less. The peasant for whom Monsieur Rouher won the case asked how much he owed him.

"Oh, say two francs," said the modest young advocate.

"Two francs!" exclaimed the peasant. "That is very high. Won't you let me off with a franc and a half?"

"No," said the counsel; "two francs or nothing."

"Well, then," said his client, "I'd rather pay nothing."

And with a bow he left.

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as coal, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go,
We tramp it under foot and kick—
'Tis not the snow we used to know!

Interesting to Smokers.

A New York Sun editorial the other day was of interest to smokers—even, possibly, to reformers who include in their list the "holy herb nicotian":—

"A sacrificial fire has been burning in Clayton, N.J., and the savor of it still tickles Gloucester County nostrils. The Anti-Nicotine Club brought to its rooms all its idols, cigars, cigarettes, pipes, tobacco, and burned them up in the stove. So fierce for the moment is the rage in Clayton against the holy herb nicotian. The case of the Vice-President of the club, Mr. Samuel Turner, is especially glorious or sad, according to the taste and fancy of him who considers it. He is 75; he has smoked for 63 years; with reasonable prudence and longevity he might hope to hold the smokers' record, for this county at least, and puff away in peace and comfort for a whole green century. He throws away the laurel in his grasp. He makes fuel of the comrades of two generations. In the heat and fury of the Clayton anti-nicotine movement he gives up the charmer of pain, the consoler of sadness, the blameless companion of reverie, the silent partner of books, the lubricator of digestion, the fountain of philosophy, the mother of good temper, the nurse of sound old age, the old, faithful, harmless, constant friend.

A boy may toss away his cigarette and a youth his cigar or briarwood, worn for show and ornament rather than for use, and feel no loss. But wait till you come to forty year. Nobody really takes his degree in the first and greatest University of Virginia before that age. His bacon isn't really cured till then. Then he becomes entitled to the freedom of the city of Nicotia. Then, if he has eyes to pierce through the smoke, he begins to see how the world goes round. For instance, what made the Elizabethans great? Tobacco. What made Bismarck great? Tobacco. Take such a philosopher and let him come to sixty year, as he cannot fail to do unless you crush him with automobiles or dynamite. For twenty years more he has worshipped at the fragrant altar. Surely he will not be turned away from it now. Surely he will obey the voice at eve obeyed at prime.

The case of Samuel Turner of Clayton shows what capacity of self-renunciation exists in the bosom of the veteran smoker. But why do people leave off smoking? Well, one reason is that there is a lot of confounded doctors who make it their pleasure to knock yours in the head. They tell you point-blank: "You positively must stop smoking;" and all the time the rascals have cigar cases in their pockets. That's the worst pang of the condemned smoker.

The Guards' New Uniform.

The thirteen hundred Guards who left the other day for South Africa were accoutred in the new uniform which has displaced the khaki, which was the all-prevailing hue at the beginning of the war. Popular interest," said The Times in describing their inspection by the King, "in these ceremonies is as keen to-day as it was when the first contingent departed for the war. Long before noon the approaches to the barracks were crowded with spectators who had not the privilege of admission to the parade ground, and were content to look on from Birdcagewalk and the railings of St. James' Park. It was not an unfavorable morning for such a display. A sharp frost nipped the air and a light mist hung over the park. Within the enclosure was a scene of picturesque activity. Guardsmen, in long grey overcoats and busbies, moved about among the ever-increasing crowd of civilians; bands mustered, and men in the new campaigning uniform paraded for a preliminary inspection by their officers. Smart and serviceable is the judgment that will be passed on the new kit. The color is a blend of khaki and drab—drab tunic, drab breeches, drab puttees, and drab hat. The hat is a novelty in shape, being broader and more substantial in appearance than the ordinary soft felt with which we have become familiar. Rakishly looped up at the side—on the right for Grenadiers and Coldstreams, who wear the white and the red hackle; on the left for the Scots, who, instead of hackle, have the tartan badge of white and red—it is not merely a comfortable, but an effective and even picturesque head-dress. And it has this further advantage, that it is not uniform, and, therefore makes men less conspicuous objects for the enemy's rifles. In the early days of the war our soldiers were easily distinguished, even when lying scattered on the drab veldt, because of the uniformity of the helmet, though covered with khaki, whereas the Colonial troops in their soft felt hats were invisible from even a short distance. The accoutrements, however, have little of the quality of invisibility. The bandoliers are of light grey canvas, the belts are white, the haversack is white, the blanket is rolled in a white cover. Only the water-bottle and the cover of the "billy" or canteen which hangs from the shoulder over the blanket are of khaki color. The buttons, too, are of shining brass—buttons that are rarely seen after they have been once under the close fire of Boers. Yet there is this to be said—a few days on the African veldt will tone down the glaring whites to a neutral tint."

His Application for Cash.

One of the recent incidents in the invasion of England by the United States has to do with an American boy of the "smart" order. Arising out of an application in court to presume the death of one Alfred Richardson, who had been manager of some cycle works at Middlesbrough, and who had mysteriously disappeared, it was elicited that he had been advertised for in some American papers, and that one reply was received from H. C. Starnes of Virginia, U.S., a boy purporting to be nine years of age, who alleged that the deceased had married his mother in 1893. There were also two enclosures from a man represented to be a County Court Judge. Asked by the solicitors for particulars, the boy further wrote: "If there is a Estate over thear coming to Alfred Richardson, y of corse that is a coming to me, and I want to get just as I can." Another document came, said to be from a County Court Judge, which began: "This certifies that Mr. H. C. Starnes has brought before me 20 good old citizens of Scott country—and proved that his father was Mr. Alfred Richardson." It was signed "Judge." The English Judge said it seemed impossible that a County Court Judge anywhere could frame such a thing, and he granted leave to presume the death.

A Flag for the Empire.

"An empire flag! At last an ensign which shall adequately represent Great Britain both at home and beyond seas seems assured. The Express is able to announce that the King has received with favor the suggestion that a new flag was needed to keep pace with the growing empire, and that a finished design for the same will be submitted to his Majesty next week. Mr. C. D. Bennett, the cousin of a distinguished colonial Governor, and himself well known in several of the colonies, has been entrusted with the responsibility of preparing this design. Mr. Bennett has had many difficulties to contend with, in evolving an harmonious and artistic design which should fittingly express British sovereignty. He has succeeded, however, in giving our colonial possessions full representation, without sacrificing the chief feature of the old flag—the Cross of St. George—which is in itself a familiar emblem of England's power in every quarter of the globe.

"Underneath the crown, on a blue scroll is inscribed the Latin rendering of the motto—'the empire on which the sun never sets'—which is the proudest boast of every Englishman:

Solis occasus.'

"In the righthand top corner of the flag will be placed the particular device representative of the empire beyond the sea. For instance, the flag to be used in India will contain the star of India in the righthand top corner.

"The flag as used in Australia will contain instead the device of the new Commonwealth, while the Canadian and other colonial Governments will add to the design their own badge, for use on all 'empire flags' in that particular part of the world.

"This design has been warmly commended by several persons high in authority to whom it has been exhibited. It now remains for his Majesty to place the final seal of approval. Mr. Bennett has notified the King that the design awaits his Majesty's pleasure, and it will probably be exhibited to him next week. Should it be approved by his Majesty, the new design will become 'official' without delay.

"To the King himself is due this idea. His Majesty has realized that the present national emblem does not fully express the dignity and importance of the empire. When the Prince and Princess of Wales started on their tour nearly a year ago they were especially instructed to carefully note every shade of colonial opinion on the subject—whether a new flag was desired and what each colony expected. Everywhere the answer was the same: 'Give us a new flag.' When the popular verdict was reported to the King, his Majesty at once signified a desire to have a proper design prepared. After weeks of toil the design is ready, which many people believe will eventually be flying at the mastheads of our warships and over British possessions at home and abroad."

The King's Champion.

"The Champions of Britain were originally paid for their services by being allowed to hold Scrivelsby Manor by what is technically called Knight Sergeantry, a term applied to lands held in exchange for a yearly service rendered to the reigning Sovereign. The holding of estates by Knight Sergeantry, a remnant of the old feudal system, was done away with during the Restoration of 1660, so that the present Champion holds his estates exactly as other estates are held by the nobility or county gentlemen of England.

"His sole recompense now consists in claiming a gold cup, together with the horse used at the coronation, with the saddle, armor and furniture. The horse, by the way, is always supposed to be the second best in the Sovereign's stable—the best being used by the Sovereign himself. At the coronation of George III. the Champion, Mr. John Dymoke, is said to have ridden the horse which carried George II. during the battle of Dettingen."

Emperor Francis Joseph.

"The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria is very plain in his tastes and habits. At 6 o'clock in the morning he takes his breakfast, consisting of some cold meat, coffee and fresh-made bread and cake. Between 12 and 1 o'clock he takes his dejeuner, two dishes of meat and some ordinary pastry. Dinner is served at 6 o'clock sharp. All his meals are served in his library at his writing desk. Not even a tablecloth is spread. His personal valet on duty receives the dishes in an antechamber on a large tray, and puts the tray before the Emperor on his desk. Very often the Emperor takes a spoonful of soup between two signatures. He is a very busy man. With the meal, the menu for next day's dinner is sent up and laid before the Emperor. It contains two soups, patties, fish, two entrees, two roasts, two desserts, pastry, cheese, fruit, etc., and the Emperor with a blue pencil crosses out whatever he does not want. The Emperor does not care much for wine. He prefers a glass of beer. Nor does he indulge in expensive Havana cigars. A plain home-made cigar, the so-called Virginia cigar, long and thin, with a straw running through it, is his favorite smoke. These cigars cost only five kreuzer—that is, about twopence apiece."

Englishman—"You have some pretty high buildings in Chicago, haven't you?" Chicorgan (in London)—"I should say we have. Why, the tops of some of them are covered with snow all the year round."

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—Town Topics.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

Cancer Growing

Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

DROWNED LANDS ASSOCIATION

Held a Meeting on Saturday — Will Claim Damages for Drowned Along the Otonabee

A meeting of the owners of drowned lands along the Otonabee River was held in the Town Council Chamber on Saturday afternoon for the purpose of considering what action should be taken to force the Dominion Government to pay them for lands rendered useless for cultivation by the high water in the Otonabee River. There is no doubt that the Government are very slow about trying to remedy this trouble, as the farmers have interviewed Mr. Blair at Ottawa regarding the damaged land and after considerable correspondence he has refused to do anything. A board of commissioners have reported that the Government is not liable for any damages caused by the water being held back at the Hastings dam, while on the other hand the Association has received reliable information that the dam is the cause of the trouble. Several affidavits from residents along the Otonabee show that before the dam was built that in a great many places a person could walk with safety across the river, now the water has been raised and this cannot be done. The action taken so far was carefully explained by the chairman, Mr. D. Kennedy, and also by Mr. Wm. Ayers. These gentlemen stated that without a doubt the association had good grounds for an action against the government, and thought it a great injustice that they should use public money to help destroy the property of a large number of people in the country. He thought there would be some benefits derived if the government grant the request made by the Water Conservation Association. Others thought it would be no benefit to any one. Mr. Ayers stated that he thought the owners claim for damages should be first. After some further discussion the meeting adjourned until some time in June.

A BUSY WORKER.

Coffee Touches Up Different Parts.

Frequently coffee sets up rheumatism when it is not busy with some other part of the body. A St. Joe, Mo., man, P. V. Wise, says, "About two years ago my knees began to stiffen and my feet and legs swell, so that I was scarcely able to walk, and then only with the greatest difficulty, for I was in constant pain.

I consulted Dr. Barnes, one of the most prominent physicians here, and he diagnosed the case and inquired, 'Do you drink coffee?' 'Yes.' 'You must quit using it at once,' he replied. I did so and commenced drinking Postum in its place.

The swelling in my feet and ankles and the rheumatic pains subsided quickly, and during the past 18 months I have enjoyed most excellent health, and, although I have passed the 65th mile post I have never enjoyed life better.

Good health brings heaven to us here. I know of many cases where wonderful cures of stomach and heart trouble have been made by simply throwing away coffee and using Pos-

RESISTED ARREST

Mr. Dennis, of Roseneath, Makes a Desperate Fight for Liberty

A few months ago the firm of O'Leary & Dennis, merchants in the village of Hastings, made an assignment for the benefit of their creditors. Between the time of the assignment and the taking over of the stock by the assignee's man, it is claimed that Dennis removed a large amount of the goods in the store, as there is a big discrepancy between the stock sheets of the bankrupt firm and the goods taken over by the assignee. Mr. Dennis and his mother are charged with stealing the goods, and a man named Lasheur is charged with receiving them. Mr. O'Leary, now a resident of Toronto, claims that Dennis stole $1,000 from him. As a result a posse of police visited the village of Roseneath one day last week, and after a severe tussle, arrested the three parties and took them to Hastings, and from there to Cobourg. Dennis made a desperate fight for liberty, and jumped from an upstairs window in trying to escape. Two shots were fired after him and he stopped. Altogether, it required the assistance of five men to secure the prisoner.

LOST NINETY DOLLARS

Harry Marshall, a Shantyman, Losses $90 —Claims He Was Way-Laid

Henry Marshall, whose home is in Port Hope, while on his way home from the shanties, spent Friday in town, and imbibed rather too freely. That night he went to the police That night he went to the police station and stated that he had been relieved of his wad, amounting to about $90. The man was very drunk at the time, and could give no information as to how or where he lost the money. He was given shelter at the police station that night, that he might be in condition to give more information in the morning. He was still unable to tell any more, and as nothing could be learned from the man the police were unable to do anything towards recovering the money.

How a Sprain Does Hurt!

But it isn't the pain alone that is dreaded, just think of the loss of time and wages. Sprains without number have been cured by rubbing Polson's Nerviline well into the pores of the skin surrounding the joint. No matter whether it is a sprained wrist, ankle, knee or back, just try Nerviline on it, and see how quickly it will cure. There is only one liniment that can be depended upon to cure sprains, strains and swellings, and that is Polson's Nerviline. Large bottle 25c.

SCARCITY OF APPLES.

Not For Years Has There Been so Few Apples in Peterborough.

Not for many years have apples been as scarce in Peterborough as this winter. For long periods since the new year opened, housewives have been unable to get a single apple when they wanted them.

The prices in consequence have been away up, and as high as $1.50 a bag has been demanded by the fortunate few farmers who had any to bring to market. The prices all along have been about on a par with those of oranges.

Housewives have been in despair all along by reason of being unable to get apples, and the apple pie has been an exceedingly rare article at dessert in this city for some time past.

This year is the good year for apples, and next winter ought not to see the scarcity in that line this winter has.

Deafness Curable!

Sufferers from impaired hearing will be glad to know that their affliction is probably not due to any organic defect in the ear, but results probably from a thickening of the lining of the middle ear caused by catarrhal inflammation. Hundreds of perfect recoveries as a result of the inhalation of Catarrhozone are reported, and on the highest authority we recommend this treatment to our readers. Catarrhozone quickly restores lost hearing, and its efficiency is placed beyond dispute by the case of Mr. Fazall of St. Thomas, who recovered perfect hearing by using Catarrhozone, after years of deafness. Price $1. At druggists or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

LAKEFIELD MAN ACQUITTED

Lou Le Bar, of Lakefield Man Charged with Obtaining Money Under False Pretences

At the police court in Lakefield on Wednesday last, Mr. Lou LeBar, an employee of Mr. M. Fischer's tailoring establishment, was charged with obtaining money under false pretences. It appears that some time in December LeBar and Carter collected a sum of money ranging between $6 and $17, to present to Dr. Blanchard on his departure for South Africa. The money was never given to the "Doc" and this got the men into trouble. LeBar, who was badly under the influence of liquor at the time, stated that he had but a very hazy idea of what had been done. The evidence of the witnesses all tended to exculpate LeBar. Carter acted as "treasurer" of the fund, and LeBar had been seen to hand over certain moneys to him. The magistrate thought that a very serious offence had been committed, and that Carter's evidence was very unsatisfactory. He could not find proof that he was guilty, and he was therefore allowed to go. Carter had come to Peterborough a few days previous and paid $8 to Mrs. Blanchard, a proceeding which he undertook to avoid the painful publicity of a prosecution. Mr. R. E. Wood appeared for the Crown, and Mr. O. A. Langley for the defence.

RETURN VISIT OF

Acknowledged by most intelligent and prominent people. His methods were approved of by judge and jury in the General Session, March 18th, 1901, which fact proves that scientific palmistry as practised by him has no connection with the vulgar fortune telling under the heading of astrology, tea cup tossing, card cutting, and the gipsies palm reading, who do not know the first principle of the theory.

Professor O'Brien's reputation is far and wide. People from every part of the world consult him. His patrons rank among judges M.P.'s, lawyers, clergymen, of every denomination, intelligent priests doctors, bankers, students, mechanics, etc., etc.

Those who never had their head or hand delineated, should call at once on Prof. O'Brien. His delineations are graphic and instructive, and he always makes it a point to give the young people good and sound advice. Don't forget there is only one Prof. O'Brien.

In phrenology he is at the head of his profession, in palmistry he has no equal. Call for circular and see what the Catholic Register, News, Mail and Empire Globe, etc., all the leading Toronto papers say.

During his first visit in Peterborough 265 people were examined by him, and still they come as fast as ever, for they all know what Prof. O'Brien's abilities are.

Those wishing to consult him please come early and avoid disappointments as Prof. O'Brien can only remain in Peterborough a few days longer. A photo read free to patrons. Private office at 363 Hunter st, terrace. Hours 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $50 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

SEARCHING INQUIRY INTO METHUEN DISASTER DEMANDED--RUMORS OF WAR

Times Correspondent at Pretoria Says That Anything Derogatory Must be Punished--How to Avoid Future Catastrophes

London, March 17.—The Pretoria correspondent of The Times says the mishap to Lord Methuen is regrettable, but that it does not justify an alarming view of the military situation. The matter demands a searching inquiry, for any act deemed derogatory to the prestige of the army must and will be visited with punishment. He goes on to say that the only way of avoiding these unfortunate incidents is to increase the strength of every column to 2,000 men, but that under the circumstances this is impossible. The great difficulty consists in having to deal with an enemy scattered over so large an area, with insufficient troops to cope simultaneously with each roving band. The progress made during the last six months is illustrated by the fact that Botha, who in September was able to mass nearly 2,000 men on the Natal border, can now only collect 700. Though favored by the nature of the country, and in spite of the repeated assurances of his followers that they would make a determined stand, he shows no inclination to fight, retiring eastward from Vryheid before Gen. Bruce Hamilton. Schalkburger remains north of the Delagoa line.

RUMORS OF WAR IN THE ORIENT.

London, March 17.—A despatch to the Times from St. Petersburg states that rumors are current regarding the imminence of an outbreak of war between Russia and Japan, but are made light of in diplomatic circles. It is regarded as possible that these rumors owe their origin to a fact which is vouched for, that several merchants have been officially informed that no consignment of goods for the far east will be accepted for the present by the Siberian Railway, its resources being fully occupied in forwarding troops and war munitions to Vladivostock. The Russian military authorities, however, deny in the most explicit terms that any increase is contemplated in the strength of the forces in the far east.

TROUBLE ABOUT CHINESE SALT.

London, March 17.—The correspondent of The Times at Pekin cables that the Russians, who last August seized privately owned salt near Tangku worth a quarter of a million sterling, have been prevented from selling it to the Viceroy Yuan, who forbade the Chinese to purchase. The Russian Minister, Lessar, in order to escape from "an untenable question," has offered to restore the salt without compensation, only asking of Ching a written undertaking that China will not engage foreigners in Northern China. Ching, it is said, complied with this request without consulting Yuan, but the latter has declared that Ching had no power to give such an undertaking.

TWENTY THOUSAND MEN FOR SOUTH AFRICA

Almost Half a Full Army Corps to be Thrown Into South Africa

INDIA AND AUSTRALIA TO SEND MORE MEN.

Dearth of Officers Is so Great That Only One Is Attached to Each Company of 150 Men—War to be Pushed with Vigour

London, March 18 — The War Office has received an urgent call for reinforcements for South Africa, and it is understood that a full half army corps will at once be despatched to the Cape. 5000 have already been ordered from India.

Instead of sending complete regiments, strong companies of 150 men each have been picked from the various battalions in India, with not more than one officer attached to each company. The reason for this latter arrangement is the dearth of officers in the Indian commands, owing to previous drafts upon them for service against the Boers.

The men of the Indian contingent are all seasoned men of at least seven years' service, and are expected to give a good account of themselves. But the soldiers do not look upon the prospect with sanguine eyes. They have seen various other regiments and companies melt away under the leaden hail from burgher rifles and the weekly casualty lists are a lesson in themselves. Only this week the announcement was made that 800 additional officers and men had been invalided home from the veldt, indicating the desperate climatic and other conditions under which the troops are placed.

Another unpleasant condition in army affairs is what one of the morning papers calls "the yeomanry fiasco." The report of the Adjutant General, just issued, shows that not half the 35,000 men expected are enrolled; that some of the new regiments have only a squadron and a half, while of the old corps only five have 400 men each out of an establishment of 500.

The number of regiments is now 56, and their strength is given as follows: Establishment, 23,840; enrolled, 13,201; wanting to complete, 10,639. The scheme may fare better when the war is over, but for the present the outlook is gloomy.

The hints of Mr. Brodrick as to conscription may be put into effect sooner than the public expects.

A GREAT BATTLE IN SOUTH AMERICA

Terrific Fight in Which Twelve Hundred are Killed

REBELLION IN COLUMBIA

Particulars of the Fight Between the Columbian Rebels

Government Losses not Known—The Revolutionary Forces Lose Fifteen Colonels and Majors

Panama, March 16 — The losses on both sides in the battle at Agua Dulce are estimated at not less that 1200 men, or about 33 per cent. of the number engaged.

The total number of revolutionists killed is not specified in the report of Gen. Herrera, the revolutionist leader, who attacked the town. He only says that, considering the position of the Government troops, the revolutionary losses were not as high in proportion.

Gen. Castro, the Government commander, was forced to retire with from 400 to 500 soldiers suffering from thirst, although Gen. Herrera says in his official report that Castro had only about 200 followers in organized form.

Gen. Castro is reported to have said the day before the attack, Feb. 28, that the Government troops would leave for Santiago and Veraguas, drinking water being scarce at Agua Dulce. Gen. Ortiz had already left with 300 men.

Of the nine hundred who remained to defend the town many were sick on account of the foul drinking water.

Gens. Castro and Ortis have arrived at Colon with 600 men. They left a strong garrison at Bocas del Toro.

Gen. Castro reports that Gen. Herrera's heavy losses make it impossible for the revolutionists to attack the Government for some time.

Items of Interest

Plymouth, Eng., March 18.—The Hamburg-American Line steamer Deutschland, from New York March 11, having on board Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia and his suite, passed the Scilly Islands at 8.30 o'clock this morning. The steamer should reach this port at about 11.30 p.m.

EMPEROR WILLIAM STARTS OUT

Berlin, March 18. — Emperor William passed Sunday with the Empress at the Kiel Schloss. This morning his Majesty boarded the battleship Kaiser Wilhelm II. and will traverse the canal to Cuxhaven, where he will await the arrival of the Deutschland, having on board Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia. Admiral Von Thomsen, and other naval and military will participate in the reception of the Prince. The Fourth Marine Artillery and the Marine Band have been ordered to be present. The cruiser Hela will take Prince Henry ashore after the Deutschland anchors before Cuxhaven. Then Emperor William, Prince Henry and the latter's suite will board the Kaiser Wilhelm II., which will immediately sail for Kiel.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE DEAD.

London, March 18.—Sir Richard Temple the former Governor of Bombay, and who had held other important positions in India is dead. He was born in 1826.

CECIL RHODES IS WEAKER

Cape Town, March 18.—The heart symptoms of Cecil Rhodes are worse to-day, and Mr. Rhodes is weaker.

London, March 18.It was officially announced that King Edward will not go abroad this year. He will cruise in British waters on board the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert.

London, March 18.—So much greater than the supply is the demand for motor cars of some of the favorite makes that latterly an astonishing state of affairs has arisen, and enormous premiums upon list prices have to be paid by automobilists anxious to purchase. A premium of £500 and upward is quite common. There is a heavy run upon all well-known classes of cars, but it is chiefly noticeable in the case of the best French makes, such as the Panhard-Levassor and De Dion. Mr. Weigel, of the British Automobile Commercial Syndicate, said that the cars that the Panhard-Levassor and the De Dion firms could turn out for a long time ahead had been secured by the dealers, who thus control the price. Two cars taken over from the makers recently at £650 each were sold for £1,300 each. There is no difficulty whatever in securing these fancy prices. When people make up their minds that they want a certain motor car they do not care what they pay for it. In the meantime, the dealers are making fortunes.

NEW CURE FOR INFLUENZA

London, March 18."I have had remarkable success," says Dr. Porter Wornum, in a letter to The Lancet, by the burning of incense freely in the rooms of my influenza patients; it is very useful in both recent and old-standing catarrhal cases—an antiseptic used in the days of Solomon."

GALLANT VETERAN DEAD.

London, March 18.— The death is reported from Savernake of a Victoria Cross hero, Gunner Thomas McArthur, of the Royal Artillery, who won the coveted decoration by two acts of heroism during the siege of Sebastopol in 1855. The first carried several barrels of powder across open ground swept by Russian fire to the 7th Fusiliers, whose ammunition became exhausted at a critical moment, and later was the first to volunteer to spike the Russian guns in the ill-fated attack on the Redan. He also wore the China medal.

Parry Sound, March 17.— A report of a serious affair which occurred near Seguin Falls Postoffice a few days ago reached here yesterday, as follows:

A lumberman named Samuel Cooper, formerly of Toronto, who had been working near Seguin Falls during the winter, some time ago showed signs of being demented. He has, however, been considered a harmless character. Lately his case became more pronounced, for he went around amongst the farmers of the neighborhood under the delusion that he had purchased large timber limits and was making a tour of inspection. After walking around all night he went to the house of one Thomas Hooper, with whom, it is said, he attempted to go upstairs. Hooper told him his wife was ill, and wished him to go out of the house. Cooper then said he was God Almighty, and if he but touched her she would recover. Persisting in his efforts to get upstairs, it is said Hooper attacked him with an axe. Two other men who were present, whose names are given as Clair and Bannister, took part in the fight. It is said that six or seven serious wounds were inflicted on Cooper, the insane man, and that he was shot in the leg. The following day he was taken to the hospital at Huntsville. A telegram from there yesterday stated that Cooper is dead. District Constable Hanna, at the instance of Crown Attorney Haight, has been despatched to Seguin Falls to arrest Hooper and the others who took part in the affair. An inquest is being held at Huntsville to-day.

CONFESSED WIFE-KILLER

Findlay, Ohio, March 17.—Charles Rollo a suspect, arrested by the police to-day, made a confession to Chief of Police Ramsey, in which he stated that he was until a year ago a market gardener in Batavia, N.Y., and that in a quarrel with his wife last August he had struck her a blow which had caused her death. For months he has fled from the police, and has been dodging about the country. The strain is too much, he says, and he is willing to suffer punishment. He is in a state of nervous collapse, and is being held for developments.

BRITAIN'S BIG TASK IN SOUTH AFRICA

Over Forty Thousand Boers Now in Captivity

THE NUMBER INCREASING.

The Subject Treated by the Clever Editor of the Ottawa Citizen

When the War is Over There will be 50,000 Men and Five Times as Many Women and Children to Provide for.

Ottawa, March 18 — The Citizen has the following able article on the South African situation: Great Britain has now got over 40,000 Boers in captivity in South Africa, St. Helena, Ceylon, Bermuda, and other places. The larger proportion have been in captivity for nearly two years. It is interesting to speculate upon the effect of civilizing influences upon this mass of men who really represent the male portion of the Boer race. What will result from keeping these men for a long period in a state of idleness and inactivity, well fed and kindly cared for by their enemy. Travel will have a broadening influence on narrow minds; nearly all will learn the English language; and being thrown in contact with the British soldier and official they will be likely to admit that, after all, he is a very decent sort of chap. As they gain a better perspective view of their country in its relations to Great Britain and the rest of the world they may become impressed with a knowledge of a former backwardness of their national life and become reconciled to, and even satisfied with, the prospect of their future as a part of the world's greatest empire.

Still their lot must be a far from happy one at present, separated from their wives and families, knowing that their country has been almost devastated by the ravages of war and that they have to look forward to almost beginning life over again. The more fair minded and intelligent among them must view with bitterness the useless and hopeless struggle which is being perpetuated by the handful of irreconcilables in the field when they remember that but for them they might all have been back with their families and in their homes eighteen months ago but for this guerilla warfare. At the time of the surrender of Pretoria and even as late as the date of Lord Roberts' proclamation of the Transvaal and Free State as British colonies in September, 1900, these countries had almost entirely escaped the ravages of war, except for the destruction of public property by the Boer armies. Probably never in the history of any war did the inhabitants suffer so little from destruction of property or loss of effects as did the Boers in the march of the British armies from the Orange River to Pretoria and eastward from Pretoria to Koomatipoort. Not only were their farms and houses left untouched, but it was a penal offence to take their poultry without an equivalent of hard cash being rendered at their own prices. If the people had accepted the inevitable and returned to their farms then they would now be comfortable and prosperous.

As the matter stands now Great Britain will have a new problem on her hands when the war is over. Probably fifty thousand men and five times as many women and children will be on her hands, scarcely any of whom will have a home to go to. The farms are devastated, the cattle driven off, no horses left to do farm work. For a year at least after the war ends all these people will be dependent on the nation not only for the necessaries of life, but for the means of re-establishing themselves in the country. No doubt they will be liberally treated by the government and there is hope that by the time they have settled down again they will have forever given up any idea of making further trouble.

THE WAR'S AWFUL COST

Prophetic Words of Paul Kruger Now Being Freely Realized

New York, March 18 — The Herald, in speaking of the cost of the war to Britain, says:

In itself the defeat and capture of General Lord Methuen is not a very grave event. In the shock it gives to public sentiment in England, however, and by balking Lord Kitchener's proposed execution of prisoners as rebels, in prolonging the war, and in its effect upon the forthcoming British loan, the reverse might be described as disastrous.

The war has now entered upon its thirtieth month, and the expenditure of blood and treasure has borne out Paul Kruger's prediction that the conquest of the two republics would cost a price which would stagger humanity. Looking at the money cost alone, if the new loan now under consideration is made for only two hundred millions, this will make the officially estimated cost of the war more than a billion dollars, in addition to the vast sums expended for police service and other civil expenditures in the Transvaal. The sinking fund for the British debt has been suspended, taxation has been enormously increased, Government consols, which formerly commanded a premium of ten per cent., now sell at a discount of more than 5 per cent.; a quarter of a million men have been withdrawn from productive industry, the gold production of the Transvaal has been curtailed, and as a result of the destruction of property in South Africa, the rehabilitation of the Orange River and the Transvaal must continue to entail heavy expense long after the war shall have closed.

Montreal Captures Stanley Cup.

The last of the series of matches for the Stanley Cup, was played in Winnipeg last night, and resulted in another victory for the Montreal team by a score of 2—1. This leaves the Montrealers the winners of the cup by a majority of 5 goals in the three games.

The large rink was packed to the doors and hundreds were turned away. Owing to the cold wave which passed over Manitoba on Friday, and which still continues, the ice was in perfect condition. Both teams played hard, but the men from the East were too fast for the "Vics," and by better combination play, won the match.

LACROSSE.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club will be held in the Y.M.C.A. parlors on Wednesday evening at 7.30 o'clock.

The members of the Y.M.C.A. who are interested in lacrosse, will hold an organization meeting in the Y.M.C.A. hall this evening at 7.30 sharp. All interested are requested to be present.

The Crescent Lacrosse team of Perth have made arrangements for a game with the Crescents of Brooklyn, N. Y., on June 14. The match will be played on the Bay Ridge grounds, Brooklyn.

RUGBY.

At a meeting of the Rugby Club on Saturday evening, Mr. A. W. McPherson was elected captain of the team.

BASKETBALL.

The Brownies and Harriers will play a game of basketball at the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday evening at 7.45.

THE RING.

It is probable that the Yosemite Athletic Club, of 'Frisco, will secure the big fight between Jeffries and Fitzsimmons, which will come off on or about the 15th of May. The Yosemite's bid was 66 2-3 per cent. of the gross receipts. The other bids were the San Francisco A. C., 70 per cent., and the Twentieth Century A. C., 60 per cent.

Erne and Daly Matched.

New York, March 17.—It was announced on Saturday that Frank Erne and Pat Daly, two well known boxers, have been matched to fight in London during coronation week. The other bouts are as follows: Harry Harris, of Chicago, will meet Andy Tuxell, the English champion; Peter Maher will fight Tom Sharkey for the Irish championship; Gus Ruhlin will tackle Kid McCoy; Joe Walcott will box Tommy West, and Tommy Ryan will encounter George Gardner.

Ryan and O'Brien Matched.

New York, March 17.—Jack O'Brien, of Philadelphia, champion middle and heavy-weight pugilist of England, today signed articles of agreement to meet Tommy Ryan for the middleweight championship of the world. The men will fight before the Southern Athletic Club, of Louisville, on May 3rd, weight to be 158 pounds at the ringside.

Walcott whipped Stift.

Chicago, March 17.—Joe Walcott defeated Billy Stift, of Chicago, at the Chicago A. C. on Saturday night, in a six round contest.

Kid Rollie Badly Injured.

Salt Lake, Utah, March 15.—A special from Park City says that Kid Rollie probably was fatally injured during a boxing contest with Dummy Rowan at that place last night. In the second round Rollie received a heavy blow below the belt that almost put him out. He continued to fight, however, and in the third round collapsed and fell to the floor. Physicians say Rollie is badly ruptured, and that his condition is very serious.

MISCELLANEOUS.

F. F. Rolland, of Montreal, won the Canadian racquet championship on Saturday by defeating R. R. MacDougall of Montreal, in the finals by a score of 3 to 1.

John Lawson, the "Terrible Swede" a well known bicycle rider, died last night in Milwaukee, of pneumonia. He arrived in Milwaukee last Sunday to fill a theatrical engagement.

Tom Jenkins won the wrestling match in England with Jim Parr, the Englishman. Jenkins took the first and third falls in 21 and 12 minutes, while Parr won the second in 20 minutes. The Englishman was the hardest man Jenkins has ever met.

ATTACKS TWO YOUNG LADIES

Rev. Father Walsh, of Stratford, Creates a Startling Sensation

Stratford, Ont., March 18.— This city is much exercised over an occurrence which happened on Friday evening to two young ladies when going home from a friend's house. Miss Minnie Marks and Miss Jessie Mallion, when crossing the stone bridge over the Avon River, on Huron Street, passed Rev. Father Walsh, a curate of Dr. Kilroy, of St. Joseph Church, in this city, who was on his way apparently to the rectory, which adjoins the church on the Huron Road. The young ladies took no notice of him, but almost immediately afterwards Miss Mallion received a blow on her arm from a stout oaken cudgel in the hands of Father Walsh. Miss Marks was also struck, the rev. gentleman catching her by the arm and holding her against the handrail of the bridge. She entreated passionately to be released, the only reply being a blow on the head. Then Father Walsh shouted to them, "Go home, go home."

Screams from the young ladies were heard by Sheriff Hossie, John Idington, K.C., Police Magistrate O'Loane, William Buckingham, and Mayor Stamp, who were returning from a meeting up town.

Father Walsh left the city for the west this morning, otherwise he would have appeared in the Police Court on the information of Mr. Mallion, the father of one of the young ladies. Much sympathy is expressed for the young ladies, who are well-known members of Knox and St. Andrew's Presbyterian Churches. Dr. Kilroy attributes the affair to the fact that Father Walsh's mind has suddenly became unhinged. He has been sick for some time, and lately received news of bereavement in his family in Ireland, besides which he had recently taken up a peculiar idea regarding the time when young women should be at home and off the streets. The congregation noticed that he acted strangely all yesterday.

REFUSED TO SURRENDER AND WAS SHOT

Kitchener Sends Methuen's Account of Disaster

LIEUT. NESHAM'S BRAVERY.

The Mounted Troops Were the Cause of the Disaster

Methuen's Horse Was Killed — General Delarey Courteous and Considerate — Methuen was Isolated

London, March 18.— Lord Kitchener has sent to the War Office the following communication respecting the recent reverse of Lord Methuen.

"Lord Methuen has sent me a staff officer with a dictated despatch from which it appears that certain particulars previously given are inaccurate. The rear screen of mounted troops was rushed and overwhelmed at dawn. There was a gap of a mile between the ox and the mule convoys. The mounted supports to the rear screen, which Gen. Methuen immediately reinforced by all the available mounted troops and a section of the 38th Battery, maintained themselves for an hour, during which the convoys were closing up without disorder.

"In the meanwhile two hundred infantry were being disposed by Methuen to resist the Boer attack, which was outflanking the left of the rear-guard. The Boers pressed that attack hard, and the mounted troops attempted to fall back on the infantry, got completely out of hand, carrying away with them in the route the bulk of the mounted troops. Two guns of the 38th Battery were thus left unprotected, but continued in action until every man, with the exception of Lieut. Nesham was hit. Lieut. Nesham was called on to surrender, and, upon refusing to do so, was killed.

METHUEN ISOLATED

"Lord Methuen, with two hundred of the Northumberland Fusiliers and two guns of the 4th Battery, then found himself isolated, but held on for three hours. During this period the remaining infantry, namely, 100 mounted men, mostly Cape Police, who had occupied the kraal near the waggons, also continued to hold out against the repeated attacks of the Boers.

"By this time Lord Methuen was wounded, and the casualties were exceedingly heavy amongst his men. Their ammunition was mostly expended, and the surrender was made at about half-past nine in the morning.

"The party in the kraal still held out, and did not give in until two guns and a pom-pom were brought to bear upon them at about 10 o'clock, making their position untenable.

"It is confirmed that most of the Boers wore our khaki uniforms. Many also wore our badges. Even at close quarters they could not be distinguished from our own men.

"It is clear the infantry fought well, and the artillery kept up the traditions of their regiment. In addition to the forty members of the Cape Police already mentioned, a few parties of Imperial Yeomanry and Cape Police continued to hold their ground after the panic had swept the bulk of the mounted troops off the field."

From other despatches it appears that General Methuen was shot while riding to bring up the mounted troops, and that his horse was killed. After the surrender General Delarey rode up and treated General Methuen with the greatest courtesy and consideration. According to the Klerksdorp correspondent of The Daily Mail, the burghers were so angry at this that a party of them went out and brought General Methuen back. General Delarey, however, overruled the objections of the burghers.

It would not be surprising according to the statements current here to-day, if Delarey, Botha, and De Wet should come to Klerksdorp and talk over the situation with Lord Kitchener.

It is an open secret that these three leaders are now together. Peace, if it does grow out of the present situation, will have its inception to a great extent in Delarey's magnanimity in releasing Lord Methuen.

Any proposition that he might make at the present moment would receive the most friendly consideration from the British Government and people. He was politically opposed to Kruger, and was against the policy which led up to the present war. He is a sound statesman, as well as a great commander. He must realize that now is the opportunity to obtain the best possible terms for his countrymen; and it is a reasonable deduction, aside from direct reports on the subject, that he will not allow this opportunity of his own creation to pass without making use of it. His proposals, if they are now in the hands of the British Government, should be made known in a few days.

CHEERS FOR DELAREY.

Glasgow, March 18. —In the course of an address to a large gathering of Irishmen here, Mr. John Dillon, M.P., said that Lord Rosebery had joined the chorus of ruffianism against Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, the Liberal leader. He added that Lord Rosebery was in the same boat with the Government. He called for a ringing cheer for Gen. Delarey, and his audience responded with prolonged cheering.

TWO CANADIANS DEAD.

Ottawa, Ont., March 18.—The Casualty Department at Cape Town cables the Governor-General of the following casualties in the South African Constabulary: Deaths from enteric fever — James George Stephenson, father, Mr. Stephenson, Norwood, Ont., Edward Charles Baker, father, John D. Baker, Oak Lake, Man. Dangerously ill from enteric fever—William Pell, sister, Miss Emily Pell, 304 Hargrave Street, Winnipeg; John Duncan May, father, F. May, Stonewall, Man; Morgan E. Holmes, sister, Miss Maud Holmes, Brockville, Ont.

TREASON COURT ABANDONED.

Durban, Natal, March 18. — The civil treason court has been disbanded. Hereafter persons charged with treason will be tried by court martial. Of the estimated eight hundred rebels in Natal, five hundred have been tried. Their sentences ranged up to ten years' imprisonment, and the fines to which the convicted men were also sentenced amounted in some cases as high as £5,000.

MORE NEW ZEALANDERS TO FIGHT.

Wellington, N. Z., March 17.—The New Zealand Cabinet has resolved to send a tenth contingent of 1,000 men to South Africa.

BOER COMMANDANT CAPTURED.

London, March 18.—A despatch from Pretoria says that Commandant Celliers, of the Kroonstad commando of Boers, was among the prisoners captured by the British recently in the Heilbron district.

Growing Children
Thrive Best on
Malt Breakfast Food

Mothers truly interested in the nourishment and growth of their children, speak with great delight about Malt Breakfast Food and its health-promoting work for young children.

Malt Breakfast Food is a perfect morning and evening food for growing children; it truly nourishes their bodies and keeps the bowels in perfect condition. Owing to its predigested character, Malt Breakfast Food at all times quiets and soothes the stomach when irritated or inflamed; it is quickly absorbed by the system and keeps the blood cool and pure.

If you would keep your growing children in robust health, give them the Malt Breakfast Food morning and night. No other food is more economical; no other can keep them so well and vigorous. Your grocer will strongly recommend Malt Breakfast Food.

Weather Notes

Probs To-day—Fair and decidedly cold. The blizzard which set in over Manitoba on Friday last has now subsided, but extremely cold weather covers the northwestern portion of the continent, and a period of decidedly cold weather is indicated for Ontario and Quebec.

GERMANY'S DESIGN ON LITTLE HOLLAND

The War Lord Wants to Annex the Netherlands

EUROPE AROUSED OVER IT

A German Professor Professor Urges Emperor to Acquire Dutch Kingdom

Peaceably if Possible, and if This Won't Go, Then Take the Country by Force—Holland Will Fight

London, March 18 — Considerable excitement has been stirred up in Europe by the recently published book of the German Professor Von Halle, in which he urges Germany to annex Holland. He believes that the annexation should be accomplished by peaceable means, if possible; but, should these fail, he advises that Holland be taken by force. The despatch goes on to say that the publication of such brochures is, in Germany, one of the Government's commoner methods of moulding public opinion and foreshadowing public policy. The Dutch have never as yet showed any inclination to join Germany or any other nation. They have too well developed a nationalism to consent to become the junior partner in a big political concern. So, if William II seriously contemplates making the Netherlands and their colonies a part of his empire, he will have to follow, the Professor's advice, and try to "take" them. Of course, before he remotely contemplates such a step, he must have placated Russia by promising that country a free hand somewhere else — perhaps China. But even should Russia consent, the Dutch, unaided, could make things mighty interesting for the War Lord. They would fight on their own ground, and in defence of it. Their cousins, the Boers, are showing that these two considerations make of people of the Dutch blood mighty soldiers. The Hollanders have no mountains as national defences, but they have dikes which need only to be cut to drown an invading army. Furthermore, on Germany's flank is France, which would not be loath, if she saw a good opportunity, to seek that "revanche" which she still is dreaming about. William had better not try to "take" the Netherlands.

THE C. P. R.'S NEW HOTEL

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company's New Grand Hotel "Place Viger," at Montreal

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company's magnificent new hotel, the "Place Viger," at Montreal, the last one erected of this company's splendid system of hotels, which extend from Quebec to Vancouver, is the most elaborately decorated and handsomely furnished hotel in Montreal. The management has been successful in establishing a reputation for the Place Viger of a very high character, so much so that the many leaders in official and society life who now patronize this house voluntarily assert that it is the most exclusive, select and refined quarters in that city.

The splendid appearance of the Place Viger, together with its historic location, has made it one of the greatest points of interest in Montreal.

A NATIONAL SPIRIT

It is perhaps too much to expect that all our children should go to the common school, though that is the pledge of the national feeling and homogeneity, but we can provide a truly national literature, which shall be more magnanimous than parish prejudices, and we can make songs which every child can sing without regard to race and religion. Indeed, if we had only a national song which would sing itself into the common heart it would do more for love of country than all the histories and treatises in the world. The American is coming in with his capital, and as I say, we should welcome him. There may, in some minds, be the ulterior thought that one day this country shall form part of the United States. It should be ours to inculcate high patriotism — a patriotism which should knit together our scattered people, who miss the splendid contagion of contact, and who, dispersed over vast spaces, lack the national heart-beats which are so stimulating in other and more settled countries where men are massed together for comfort and ease. Once in a while we hear a threat from certain of our French Canadian friends that they will cast in their lot with the States. Of course this is quite irresponsible chatter, as the serious leaders of our French fellow citizens quite understand what such an attitude would mean to the majority in this province. The ancient usages to which appeal is now confidently and successfully made would be treated with disdain, the present status would be lost, and a people who have thriven almost miraculously under the British flag would be lost amid the nationalities which, in the crucible of the common school, are moulded into a composite type—a type which stands for alertness, aggressiveness and brilliancy.

A clause in the new School Act provides that in cases where pupils attend high schools in adjacent counties the counties must pay for their maintenance to the boards of the schools which such pupils attend. Another provision is to the effect that County Councils may make additional grants for the maintenance of one school, without making the same to all others in the county, the object being to aid weak schools. It was also provided that a clause should be added to the act providing that towns separate from counties must contribute for the maintenance of high schools within the county."

The results of Prince Henry's diplomatic visit to the United States are already becoming apparent. Already Miss Alice Roosevelt has decided not to attend the coronation of King Edward VII. Depression reigns at the court of St. James in view of this diplomatic coup and there is some talk of declaring the event off.

A Clergyman's Frank Statement

He and His Family Have Obtained Great Benefits From the Use of

Paine's Celery Compound

The Sick of His Parish Have Used the Wonderful Medicine With Happy Results

The Rev. J. F. Renaud, minister of St. Thomas Episcopal Church, Montreal, is one of the best known clergymen in Canada. He has personally used Paine's Celery Compound and tested its life-giving virtues. The members of his family have derived happy and cheering results from its use, and he has proof that many of his sick parishioners have been benefitted by it.

Paine's Celery Compound is, without doubt, the greatest of all spring medicines. It is vouched for by physicians, teachers and well read, well informed women in every part of the country. It is marvellously successful because it accomplishes in every instance exactly what is claimed for it.

Rev. Mr. Renaud writes as follows: "Having personally and in my own household benefitted by the use of your Paine's Celery Compound, and having from time to time used it with the same beneficial effect among my sick people, I deem it but right to acknowledge the great benefit it has proved wherever it has been faithfully tried, and if this acknowledgment of mine will make your well known compound still more widely known to the benefit of the needy and sick, you have my authority to use this letter in any way you think best."

To the Late G. W. Steevens

It is difficult to realise that already two years have passed since the sad news came out of beleaguered Ladysmith that the brilliant journalist and author, G. W. Steevens, had been carried off by fever, carried off in early manhood, long before he had reached the natural zenith of his fame. Figures move quickly across the stage of life and are soon forgotten. For a moment, however, Steevens is recalled by an affectionate tribute, printed on the second anniversary of his death, Jan. 15 last, in The Daily Mail, on the staff of which journal he was engaged as war correspondent. The lines are as follows, and written, doubtless, by a former colleague:—

In Memoriam.

George Warrington Steevens.
Died January 15, 1900.

Too soon, alas! life's little day was done.
Swift as a meteor flashing on the night,
He soared to fame, and, flaming in his flight,
Vanished a-sudden ere his course was run.
And we—we wonder if the Southern sun
Has gathered in the glory of his light;
But only know the havoc of the blight
Which slew him in the shadow of the gun.

So brave and strong! his every glowing word
Wearing an athlete's sinew. Dearest, best
To Mother England, as he tracked her sword,
With patriot-pride to bind him to her breast.
Thus do we love the records of the strong,
And miss them most, and mourn them doubly long.

—Bernard Malcolm Ramsay.

The American Press.

We hear so much of the pro-Boerism and anti-Britishism of the American press that it is worth while occasionally drawing attention to the fact that this element of the press across the border does not have all its own way. Some extremists in Chicago have suggested a burlesque of the coronation of the British Sovereign on the date on which the event takes place in London, and simultaneously a demonstration in favor of the Boers. It is not likely that such an ill-natured proposal would meet with much backing from the common sense of the people of Chicago, and it would doubtless in any event be confined to the lower classes. It may have been condemned by other newspapers, but one of the foremost in opposing such an unneighborly demonstration is The Chicago Israelite, which deals with the subject in the following trenchant fashion:—"The pro-Boers of Chicago, who invited ex-President Kruger to be in the city on the day that King Edward is to be crowned in England, have taken an unwarrantable liberty with their fellow-citizens. They have a perfect right to indulge in any amount of horseplay in attempting to burlesque the coronation, and if they like that sort of thing, then it is the sort of thing they like. But as they happen to be in a very small minority, and as there are a great many reputable persons in Chicago who have no desire to insult a friendly nation by making a display of hatred which is as puerile as it is coarse, and as impotent as it is vulgar, they have no right to refer to themselves, as they do in their resolutions, as, 'We, the citizens of Chicago . . . .' Now, I have no doubt that many of them are citizens of Chicago, most of them probably having taken out their naturalization papers—but they are not 'the' citizens of Chicago, not by a million and several hundred thousand. In consideration of this, and with the 'three tailors of Tooley street' in view, they might have spared the remaining million and several hundreds of thousands of Chicagoans the humiliation of being included among the promoters of their proposed spectacle, and as endorsers of their malignant utterances."

Almost simultaneously, The New York Independent, perhaps the most important religious journal on the American continent, shows that it also can view a great international question calmly and dispassionately, and that in the unfortunate South African war it has grasped the vital facts of the case. In the course of a reply to a correspondent The Independent says:—

"If we have seemed to any reader to convey the impression that we believe that the power to rule better gives the right of invasion and conquest, we have been greatly misunderstood. We believe that so long as they do not traverse the rights of foreigners the citizens of any nation should be allowed all the political education they can get by the self-rule of no matter how much bad government or how many revolutions. We have said that accordingly we ought to withdraw from Cuba and allow its people to rule or ruin themselves. We heartily accept the principles laid down by our correspondent.

"As to the Transvaal, Britain made no war on that republic; she was guilty of no invasion. It was the Transvaal that declared war on Britain, and invaded British Natal as soon as Britain began to gather troops to defend the border against what was the proclaimed plan, for which munitions of war had long been gathered, to expel the British from South Africa.

"We knew perfectly well that the Dutch and French Boers constitute the majority of the population of Cape Colony, as well of the Orange Free State, and that these two districts have been much better governed than the Transvaal. But certainly it is British rather than Boer influence that is to be credited with the superior legislation as to the rights of the native races which prevails in Cape Colony, and only Boer perversity is chargeable with the blunders of government which oppressed the great majority of the population of the Transvaal, whether Uitlanders or blacks."

Herr Meyer Lutz tells the following little story in "Mainly About People:" "Conducting once in Bradford, I noticed that the clarionet player, a young but clever and steady lad, jumped up a good deal during the progress of the opera. I found that his father, who played the trombone, sat just behind him, and every now and then he gave his son a kick, with the remark, 'Look out, Sammy! there be a flat a-comin'.'"

Anecdotal.

Some years ago when Bishop Potter, of New York, was traveling in Minnesota, a man approached him on the railway platform and scanned his features closely. "Excuse me," he said, finally, "but haven't I seen your picture in the papers?" He was compelled to confess that he had. "I thought so," continued the inquisitive one; "may I ask what you were cured of?"

Here is a new story of Paderewski. He recently lost his only son, and the effect on him has been to soften down the little eccentricities which used to charm his less artistic followers. He went to Dresden for the first performance of his own opera. Amid the enthusiastic demonstrations which greeted its success, he observed in Russian to a friend, "All this might be lust if I could have one smile from my child!"

At a seaside hotel the other day a new arrival, having made terms with the proprietor, proceeded to write his name in the hotel book. While he was so engaged a rather large flea hopped across the open page before him. "Well," he remarked, throwing down the pen, "I have been in hotels where there were fleas, but never before have I been in an hotel where the fleas search the register for the number of their rooms."

When the Transvaal war was at its height, Paul Kruger sent a commissioner to England to find out if there were any more men left there. The commissioner wired from London to say that there were four million men and women "knocking about the town," that there was no excitement, and that men were begging to be sent to fight the Boers. Kruger wired back, "Go north." The commissioner found himself in Newcastle eventually, and wired to Kruger: "For God's sake, stop that war! England is bringing up men from hell, eight at a time, in cages!" He had seen a coal mine.

A quotable story is told of a missionary who was spending a short holiday in Texas. After he had been at his hotel for some days he met with a very fierce-looking man of the cowboy type, who, he noticed, had anything but a sweet temper. "Do you know," he said to him one day, "that you should love your enemies?" "That's a thing I can't do, sir." "What! I am sure a man like you could do anything if you tried." "Anything but that, parson; it's impossible." "Impossible!" said the missionary, surprised and hurt. "How?" "I ain't got one to love. I shot the last this morning."

Julian Corbett may be said to have established himself as an authority on the history of the British navy. A while ago Mr. Corbett wrote to the admiralty to suggest that a new first-class battleship then building be christened "Drake." A formal intimation that his letter had been received and should have due attention was followed, after a decent interval, by a dignified reply from my lords, in which they expressed their regret at not being able to carry out Mr. Corbett's suggestion, and explained that it would be contrary to precedent to name a first-class battleship after a bird.

A Sunday School teacher who has a class of little girls makes it her custom to tell them each Sunday of some little incident that has happened during the week, and request the children to quote a verse of Scripture to illustrate the story. In this way she hopes to impress the usefulness of Biblical knowledge upon the little ones. Last Sunday she told her class of a cruel boy who would catch cats and cut their tails off. "Now, can any little girl tell me of an appropriate verse?" she asked. There was a pause for a few moments, when one little girl arose, and in a solemn voice said: "Whatsoever God has joined together let no man put asunder."

Sir Harry Poland, a British magistrate noted for his brilliancy, is careless in his dress. Once his family persuaded him to go to Poole and order a fashionably cut suit. To the chagrin of the household, Sir Harry looked more outlandish in the new clothes than in his old ones. His brother-in-law went to see Poole about it. "It is not my fault, sir," the tailor assured him. "Every care was taken, but how could we fit a gentleman who would insist upon being measured sitting down?" And the only satisfaction that could be obtained from Sir Harry Poland himself later on was the dry comment: "Well, it's my business, and not yours. I like to be comfortable. I spend three parts of my life sitting down, and I prefer to be measured so."

A Philadelphia paper tells of a bride and bridegroom who recently went to housekeeping and are blessed with a maid of all work who is fresh from the Emerald Isle. This is her first "place," and her ignorance of domestic affairs is only equalled by her adaptability and her cheerful willingness to learn. At first she didn't know the names of the ordinary household utensils, even mistaking on one occasion, when there was company at dinner, the ice pick for the carving steel. One day last week the bride had been doing some shopping, and among other things she bought an umbrella stand for the vestibule. It was late when she reached home. "Did any packages come?" she asked. "Yis, mum," was the reply. "The wagon cum wid th' cuspidore fer th' umbrellas."

A certain Scotch minister was very anxious that an old couple in his parish should become teetotalers, an anxiety they in no wise shared. After much pressing, however, they consented, laying down as a condition that they should be allowed to keep a bottle of "Auld Kirk" for medicinal purposes. About a fortnight after, John began to feel his resolution weakening; but he was determined not to be the first to give way. In another week, however, he collapsed entirely. "Jenny, woman," he said, "I've an awfu' pain in my heid; ye micht gie me a wee drappie, an' see gin it'll dae me ony guid." "Weel, gudeman," she replied, "ye're owre late o' askin', for ever sin' that bottle cam' into the hoose, I've been bothered sae wi' pains i' my heid, 'tis a' dune, an' there's nae drappie left."

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best!"

"If a ship," began the comedian with the rose tinted beard, "is 160 feet long and 40 feet wide, and its masts are 100 feet high, and the bo'sun is bowlegged, what does the captain weigh?" "It weighs the anchor!" hoarsely shouted the audience, as it grabbed the [illegible] to prevent itself [illegible] and doing violence to the [illegible].

One of Napoleon's Boasts.

We who know the last as well as the first of Napoleon, who have read about Moscow, Leipsic, Elba, Waterloo and St. Helena as studiously as about the campaigns in Italy, and Marengo, Jena and Austerlitz, cannot fully comprehend with what reverence some of his apophthegms were received by the French when he was still unbeaten and apparently unbeatable. One of his boasts was that he was not governed by circumstances; that he made circumstances and was superior to them. When someone hinted that destiny might compass his defeat he replied that destiny would not dare. Even Victor Hugo, half a century after Waterloo, was blinded by the light of Napoleon's genius, and treated him as a Titan, fit to contend, though vainly, with high heaven. It was not Wellington, not Blucher who defeated Napoleon, says Hugo in his beautiful rhapsody on Waterloo; it was God. Napoleon, he declares, with blasphemous brilliancy, embarrassed God. "Waterloo was a change of front on the part of the universe"—the quotation is from memory—"in the new series of facts there was no room for Napoleon. Therefore a second-class commander won a first-class battle."

A good many believe with Napoleon that genius rises above circumstances. Napoleon's boastful epigram has been declared a rule of faith by successful men, who scout the idea of village Hampdens and mute, inglorious Miltons. But the epigram is nothing but a boast. It is not true. We are held fast in the vise of circumstances and are not completely masters of our fate. Luck enters into every game, even the game of life. No man can arrange the cards in the game with destiny, for destiny always deals. It may rain some day when the best laid plans call for sunshine, and the plans may be pulverized. At Austerlitz, which was fought at dawn, Napoleon said: "We have a rendezvous with the sun and both parties are on time." The Sun of Austerlitz became a superstition in the Grand Army.

But at Waterloo there was another rendezvous with the sun and the sun was tardy. Waterloo is the convincing answer to Napoleon's boast and to the precept that great men are superior to circumstances. Hugo points out that accidents defeated Napoleon. His plan, as experts admit, was a masterpiece. But he reckoned without luck. The battle was to have commenced at dawn, but rain fell the previous night, and the ground became too muddy for the manoeuvres of artillery. Napoleon therefore delayed the assault nearly six hours, until the ground became firmer. That delay gave Blucher time to come up when he was needed and to turn the tide of the fray. The rainfall defeated Napoleon and drove him to St. Helena. A peasant guide led Blucher aright, and he chanced to debouch on the field from the point and at the moment where and when he was supremely effective. Another peasant guide led Grouchy astray and he did not arrive. Had it not rained before the battle, had Blucher had a bad guide and Grouchy a good one, history might have been different. Napoleon was conquered by circumstances.—San Francisco "Bulletin."

A Damaging Defence.

Mark Twain, says "Life," has got support from an unexpected quarter in his efforts to demonstrate the impropriety of some things done by missionaries in China. In the "Forum" a missionary named Gilbert Reid has defended looting by missionaries with so much candor and jauntiness, and has so gloried in such looting as he did himself, as not to leave the critics of the looting missionaries much to do to prove their case. Anyone who was sorry for the American missionaries in China, because our Brother Mark found fault with some things that some of them did, will be doubly sorry for them when he reads their defence by the Rev. Gilbert Reid. They may have justly incurred Mark's strictures, but they never deserved the Rev. Reid's defence.

Annexing New Languages.

In the new editions of the dictionaries many thousands of new words are announced. The English-speaking nations are the growing nations, comments an exchange, and the English language is the expanding language; it is annexing everything useful from every other language of the world. The difference between the comparatively modest volume which Noah Webster got out and the ponderous unabridged work of to-day, representing the toil and the knowledge and the research of hundreds of the ablest scholars of the world, shows the marvelous development. One interesting feature of this expansion is the gradual elimination of italicizing. Not many years ago it was the custom to put any word that had a foreign look about it in italics; now we use this as our own as coolly as we vote a naturalized immigrant in a close primary. The effect is rather curious. It has discouraged the use of foreign phrases, and the ambitious one who wants to display his smattering of French in an English article finds his importations supplanted by home products. The editor makes the change, unless there are special reasons why it should not be done. The gain to the average reader, who dislikes to stumble against such affectation without knowing what the strange words mean, is great. So marked, indeed, has been this change that the typesetting machines, by which the newspapers of the world are now set up, have no italic letters, except where they are especially required.

A cheap-Jack butcher brought his cart to a standstill in Petticoat Lane. A miserable old woman eyed closely the heap of bones and gristle which was referred to by the butcher as joints and steaks. She was evidently very poor indeed, as she hesitated to pay threepence for a scaleful of "selected bits." "'Ere, 'ave 'em for tuppence," growled the butcher. "Too much," said the woman. "'Ave 'em at a penny." Still the woman hesitated. There was a look of pity, mixed with disgust, on his face as he yelled: "Still too much? 'Ere, 'ang it! I'll turn me back while you sneak 'em!"—London "Spare Moments."

"Do you think that Miss Strong will make Jack a good wife?" McRounders inquired of Chubbey.

"I wouldn't say that, but you just bet your life she'll try to make him a good hubby."—Philadelphia Press.

The Happy Home.

Happiness must be founded on health. Where there is ill-health there will surely be unhappiness. The happiness of many a home has received its downfall at the table, spread with rich and dainty foods. The first symptoms of disease of the stomach are ignored as being disagreeable but not dangerous. Presently dyspepsia or some other form of disease fastens on the stomach.

At any stage Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. But the cure is quicker if the "Discovery" is used in the earlier stages of disease. If you have any symptoms of diseased stomach use "Golden Medical Discovery" and be cured.

"I feel that I would be doing an injustice to you if I did not send you a statement of my case," writes Mrs. David W. Guice, of Hamburg, Franklin Co., Miss. "I had liver complaint and indigestion. Everything that I ate disagreed with me. I suffered all the time with swimming in my head; heart beat too fast; my feet and hands were cold all the time. Did not sleep well at all. Was able to get about but very little. I commenced to use Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Pleasant Pellets' in May, 1897, and by December I could begin to get about very well. Have been doing my work ever since. Feel better than I have for several years."

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Curious Bits of News.

Few persons know that an ordinary gas jet will consume as much oxygen as four human beings. It is, therefore, well to remember when sitting long in a gas-lighted room to occasionally open a door or a window for a few moments and bring in some fresh air.

"Roughly speaking, the world's consumption of sugar in the last fifteen years has doubled, while in Great Britain it has trebled per head in forty years," says the "Medical Times." "The English and Americans stand easily at the head of the list as the sugar-eating nations."

Adding to his already long list of horticultural triumphs, Luther Burbank of Santa Rosa has produced a prune without a pit, says the San Francisco "Bulletin." Years of experience, of hard, patient work on the part of the Santa Rosa wizard were required to perfect this latest marvel. The hybrid is understood to be a cross between a plum and a prune. The pit of the ordinary prune has been a great drawback to the popular consumption of the fruit. Burbank's creation has no pit, but a tiny seed that is edible and in no way requires removal.

"American promoters must take a back seat," says the "Railway Age," "while a French mining engineer outlines his project of a trans-Alaskan-Siberian railway about 4,000 miles long, besides immense steam ferries across Behring Sea, and capitalized at $300,000,000. Circle City, a charming winter resort in the Arctic regions, on the Yukon River, a couple of thousand miles or so from its mouth, is to be the southern terminus of the road, and Vladivostock, in Russia, will be the always convenient Asian end."

It is generally understood that journalism, especially "yellow journalism," is expensive, but most people probably do not realise how very expensive it is. Dr. Parkhurst and other reformers have talked about the desirability of establishing endowed newspapers, which should be independent of popular patronage. If a paper like the "Journal" were living on the interest of an endowment fund without any business income to balance its outgo, the fund would have to be over $100,000,000. The pay-rolls of the great New York newspapers run from $30,000 to $80,000 a week, and that is only part of their expenses.

A German judge cites a rather remarkable case of lese majeste, which, he says, may be called "unintentional information." A peasant woman who had seen the Kaiser's consort as a slender girl in Prein Konau, gave blunt rustic expression to her astonishment as to how the figure looked after the birth of several children. Her outcry was mentioned in gossip at a village inn, when it struck the ear of a gendarme who happened to be present. This gendarme reported the matter. His superior prosecuted it, and the amazed and bewildered old woman was transported from her cottage to a cell.

Among the many uses to which the automobile is applied in military service is that of a new Austrian invention, called the Schweitzer Military Mill-Bakery Automobile. This will follow the regiments on the march and make fresh bread from the wheat obtained on the spot. There is mounted on an automobile car a mill with bolters and kneading-troughs, all run by the same motor which runs the automobile. The oven is drawn along in the rear. The bran obtained serves as food for the cavalry horses. By this method five thousand men can be fed daily. This mill-bakery can also render service in cases of large labor contracts which bring together numbers of workmen.

Australians have queer nicknames for different states and for one another. The Queenslanders are dubbed "banana-landers;" Western Australians, known as "sandgropers" or "gropers," now abbreviated into Westralians. The Westralians class the whole of the other states in one group, and call them "t'other side," and the inhabitants "t'other siders." Tasmania, so much like England in climate and other characteristics, is usually regarded as a little behind the times, and referred to as "the land of lots o' time," "the land of sleep a lot," and so on. Tasmanians are called Tassies, also "jameaters," jam being one of the chief productions of the "tight little island."

"During the progress of the construction of the reservoirs for the enlargement of the London water-supply, a splendid specimen of an ancient ship," says the "Scientific American," "has been discovered in the bed of the old River Lea, the course of which has been diverted in order to permit the excavations. The vessel was found at a depth of seven feet below the surface. It is about 50 feet long and is constructed of oak throughout, with the exception of the keel, which is of elm. The ribs of the boat are secured to the sides by treenails, while the timbers are secured with crude and primitive, though well-made, iron nails. The floor-boards are also fastened together with nails and the calking is done with felt. Many antiquarians, who have examined the relic, think that it constitutes a part of the fleet with which King Alfred the Great fought against the Danes. Another curious dugout boat, estimated to be about 2,500 years old, was also unearthed and is to be deposited in the British Museum.

Unconditional Surrender.

Wanted—A girl for general housework; union or non-union; any old kind; family of three adults and three children with nurse, and occupy small house at Sheridan Park, two blocks from N.W. Elevated; nice, large, airy room, with south-west breeze for girl; no washing or much of anything else to do; our girl quit yesterday because we invited some relatives to help us celebrate the Fourth; next Fourth, if the girl demands it, we will disown our relatives and renounce our country; wages, five dollars.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

"No young girl could gain the love of a worthier man," returned the old farmer, slowly. "I never dreamed you cared for either of my girls or that either one of 'em cared for you, but which of 'em is it, young man?"

"You speak as though you have but two daughters, sir," said Aleck, smiling confusedly.

"That's all I have— only two that would be likely to think of love or lovers," returned Farmer Gordon complacently.

"But Daisy," said the young man, drawing nearer.

"Little Daisy! why, she's only a child," broke in the farmer, with a cheery laugh, that rang out heartily over the waving cornfields.

"But it is Daisy whom I love," said Alexander Hamilton, in a low voice. "I love her with all my heart and soul. I have watched her and loved her from her cradle up. Life would not be worth living to me if I had not the hope of winning her. Oh, Mr. Gordon, if you could but realize how dearly I love Daisy."

"Have you said anything about this to little Daisy?" he asked, huskily.

"No, sir," returned Aleck, promptly. "I should not think of doing so without consulting you first."

"Quite right, lad, quite right," responded the farmer, in the same husky voice.

Then he stopped short, and a dead silence fell between them that seemed the length of eternity to the handsome, impatient young lover.

"What do you say, sir?" he asked, unable to bear the suspense any longer. "Can I speak to Daisy?"

"Listen to what I've got to say, lad," replied Farmer Gordon, earnestly. "I am older than you— I know the ways of the world— of women- folk. I have that to say which mebbe you won't like to hear, but you must defer to my judgment. Wait until you come back; you can speak to Daisy then— not before. She will be past seventeen then, and even that's too young for a man to think of a lover."

"But, sir, think of the many things which might happen that might part us!" cried Aleck, in dismay, "unless her promise was given to me before I went that she would be mine. To lose her would be death in life to me. Ah, sir, what if she should meet some one else in that year to whom she might give her heart— the future would be a wreck for me, and I would curse the hour in which I left her here without trying to win her for my own."

"Nothin' of that kind could happen," declared the farmer, positively. "A year passes quickly."

"Mark my words, Aleck, if the child should promise to marry you now, ten to one she would repent o' it afore you were out o' sight; a lass o' sixteen never knows her own mind. No, no, the love of a lass o' sixteen is but a fickle fancy— quick to light into a flame, and as quick to die out.

"Leave the child unfettered, fancy-free; come back in a year from now fortune or no fortune, and I will have a different answer for you. You must not tell Daisy one word of this, even when you bid her good- bye, nor shall I mention it, even to the girls."

Despite all Aleck's pleadings, Farmer Gordon was firm, and handsome Alexander Hamilton felt in honor and in duty bound to obey that stern decree.

There was a great flutter of excitement when he bade Hetty and Olive Gordon farewell.

In their dismay they did not notice how low he bowed his dark, handsome head over little Daisy's white hand, or how his mustached lips quivered and his hands trembled.

He turned suddenly, made his adieus quickly, and hurried away.

"One moment more, and I could not have left her so," he muttered. "If anything should come between us during the year I am forced to be away— heaven forgive me for saying so— I believe I should curse Farmer Gordon for keeping us asunder, by preventing me from telling her of my great love for her, and pleading with her— praying her to be mine."

Had a premonition of the future cast its dark, horrible shadow over him!

CHAPTER II.

Pretty Daisy in Peril.

Left to herself, Daisy walked slowly on, through the orchard, down to the rippling river that skirted the farm.

Her little boat, the Nixie, lay rocking on the waves, and mechanically Daisy sprung into it, picked up the white painted oars, and with two or three determined strokes from the slim, white arms, the skiff shot down the stream.

"Don't go far, Daisy," cried the farmer from the brow of the hill, as he saw the boat floating down the tide with its solitary occupant. "There'll be a storm."

The fickle wind carried the farmer's voice in quite an opposite direction, and pretty Daisy did not hear.

The golden sun climbed higher and higher in the blue sky and crossed the meridian ere Daisy recollected that it was time to turn back. Glancing about her, she gave a perceptible start.

"Good gracious!" she cried out, "why I'm almost abreast of Briar Hall. Who would have dreamed that I had come so far? Yes, that must be Briar Hall; I know it from the description."

She glanced up curiously and wistfully at the grim pile of granite, with its gables and towers half hidden from the sunshine by the heavy growth of ivy- vines and scarlet creepers at the magnificent grounds gleaming with rich, red roses in full bloom that surround it; at the fountain and the statuary gleaming amid the [illegible] foliage beyond.

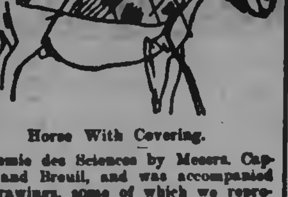
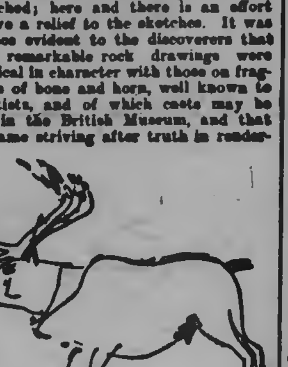
Among the most interesting of the discoveries made by the scientists who devote their time to researches into the Palaeolithic ages—thousands of years before recorded history begins—are those which prove that even in those dim and distant ages man, such as he was, held aesthetic yearnings. Few and far between are such discoveries; but when, once in a while, they are made, they cause a sympathetic thrill of interest in the bosoms of learned societies, and even of those who, not having time to be learned, feel the magnetic attraction of the "human document."

The Daily Graphic's illustrations, which are printed herewith, refer to one of the most important of such discoveries recently made in France, in the Grotto of Combarelles, near Eyzies, in Dordogne. "The discovery," says The Graphic, "was communicated to the Academie des Sciences by Messrs. Capitan and Breuil, and was accompanied by drawings, some of which we reproduce, of certain figures of animals engraved on the walls of the grotto on each side of its length. The drawings are in some places quite deeply engraved in the rock; in others they are only scratched; here and there is an effort to give a relief to the sketches. It was at once evident to the discoverers that these remarkable rock drawings were identical in character with those on fragments of bone and horn, well known to scientists, and of which casts may be seen in the British Museum, and that the same striving after truth in rendering the characteristics of the animals was to be seen in the Grotto of Combarelles, proving the familiarity of the artist with the appearance of the animals themselves. So that the artist was contemporary with the animal he drew. Now, one of these animals being a hairy mammoth, and the other a reindeer, it is evident that when those creatures roamed the hills and valleys of South Central France man was also there—that is to say, in the Palaeolithic or older stone age.

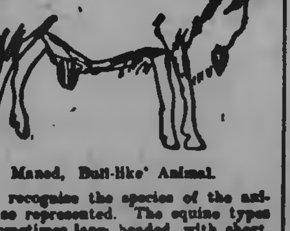


Horse With Covering.

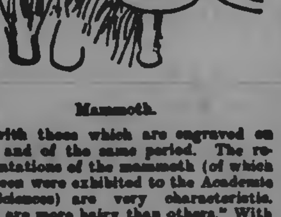


Running Reindeer.

"The precision with which the figures are drawn," say the discoverers, "allows us to recognise the species of the animals so represented. The equine types are sometimes large headed, with short, stiff manes—sometimes with flowing manes and tails. Some of the horses were domestic animals. One of them (shown in our sketch) has on its back a covering—a Palaeolithic horse cloth—others have traces of bits and halters. The bovine types are less frequent; one of them (also reproduced) has the character of certain African antelopes (such as the gnu), while another is much like our oxen of to-day. The running reindeer (see sketch) is identical in character with those which are engraved on bone and of the same period. The representations of the mammoth (of which fourteen were exhibited to the Academie des Sciences) are very characteristic. Some are more hairy than others." With these rock drawings are strange signs engraved in the rock: a circle with the semblance of human features, a double outlined lozenge on the middle of the body of one of the horses, others of M-like shape, semicircles, etc.,all of mysterious and unknown significance. Since the memorable day when the first piece of engraved bone was discovered, embedded in the stalagmite of the caverns once tenanted by human beings, there has been no discovery which has caused so great an interest as this one in the Stalagmite Cavern of Combarelles. We have in these rude and yet skilful efforts of the human race deeply interesting evidence that man once shared with mammoth and with reindeer the Arctic plains of southern France.



Maned, Bull-like' Animal.



Mammoth.

Piper Findlater, shot in both legs at Dargai, had his forerunner, nearly a century earlier, at Rolica, in the Peninsula, under Wellington:—"A piper of the 71st had his leg broken. Sitting down on his knapsack, the brave man cried out to his mates:—"I canna gang wi' ye, lads, but de'll tak' me if ye shall want music."

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

Greeley's Editorial When Lincoln Died.

"I have never seen in print Gay's story of that fearful night when Lincoln was killed. But one hears it freely repeated in conversation, and I see no reason why it should not be printed now.

"With the news of the murder of Lincoln, there came to New York every other terrible message. The office of the 'Tribune,' of course, received echoes of all the despatches which showed the alarm at Washington. There were orders for the arrest of this man, there were suspicions of the loyalty of that man. No one knew what the morrow might bring.

"In the midst of the anxiety of such hours, to Mr. Gay, the acting editor of that paper, there entered the foreman of the typesetting-room. He brought with him the proof of Mr. Greeley's leading article, as he had left it before leaving the city for the day. It was a brutal, bitter, sarcastic, personal attack on President Lincoln—the man who, when Gay read the article, was dying in Washington.

"Gay read the article, and asked the foreman if he had any private place where he could lock up the type, to which no one but himself had access. The foreman said he had. Gay bade him tie up the type, lock the galley with this article in his cupboard, and tell no one what he had told him. Of course no such article appeared in the 'Tribune' the next morning.

"But when Gay arrived the next day at the office, he was met with the news that 'the old man' wanted him, and the intimation that 'the old man' was very angry. Gay waited upon Greeley.

"'Are you there, Mr. Gay? I have been looking for you. They tell me you ordered my leader out of this morning's paper. Is it your paper or mine? I should like to know if I cannot print what I choose in my own newspaper!' This in a great rage.

"'The paper is yours, Mr. Greeley. The article is in type upstairs, and you can use it when you choose. Only this, Mr. Greeley: I know New York, and I hope and believe, before God, that there is so much virtue in New York that, if I had let the article go into this morning's paper, there would not be one brick upon another in the "Tribune" office now. Certainly, I should be sorry if there were.'

"Mr. Greeley was cowed. He said not a word, nor ever alluded to the subject again. I suppose the type is locked up in the cupboard of the 'Tribune' office at this hour.

"It was by this sort of service that Mr. Gay earned Mr. Wilson's praise that 'he kept Mr. Greeley up to the war.'"

A Boom Town.

Bridgewater, Ontario, once a boom town of note, was brought into existence by one of the strangest gold finds and crazes in the history of this continent. Nearly thirty years ago a farmer's wife was searching the woods near their farm for a sow that had strayed, and, becoming thirsty, stopped to get a drink from a spring. Slipping, she fell upon a small, loose rock, which rolled to her feet, and which proved to be a twenty-pound nugget of almost pure gold. Bridgewater at that time was nearly forty miles from the nearest railroad, and the present site of the town was nothing but a wilderness, but inside of six months what had been a burned-over, barren wilderness was converted into a substantial city of nearly five thousand people.

In digging a shaft about a mile south of the town site, an immense quarry of the purest white marble was found, and the town was practically built of marble, for it has to-day the only hotel, church school, court house, and private dwellings constructed entirely of white marble in the world, and a mile north of the town are an abandoned axe factory and grist mill, whose foundations are built of the same beautiful material. And now comes the strangest part of the story. During the building of the town thousands of men prospected the entire country, and shafts and tunnels were driven—some of them nearly one hundred feet deep—but, strange as it may seem, there was never enough gold found to pay the cost of a single shaft or tunnel sunk or run in the entire district.

A Sensible Bishop.

"1. In all churches, immediately after feast days on which there have been very large congregations, the floors must be disinfected by means of wood sawdust soaked in one-tenth per cent. solution of corrosive sublimate. On ordinary days they must be frequently swept, after sprinkling them with water so as to raise no dust.

"2. Every week, and even oftener, the pews and confessionals must be cleaned with sponges and cloths moistened with pure water.

"3. Every week, and oftener if necessary, the grills of the confessionals are to be washed and polished.

"4. The holy water receptacles must be emptied every week, or oftener if necessary, and washed with hot water or a solution of corrosive sublimate."

The same journal comments as follows:

"That the provisions of the circular may be carried out, the bishop has instituted a service of inspection, and requires the payment of fines into the diocesan treasury for transgression of any of these hygienic rules. It is to be desired that the Bishop of Fano's example should be imitated by church authorities in other countries."

Great Things Probable.

A Chicago professor is lecturing on "How to Lie When Sleeping." The politicians are much interested. In the heat of a campaign, much time has been lost because lying has been limited to waking hours. The effects of the learned professor's discovery upon the next campaign are [illegible] with interest.—[illegible]

Ivan Turgenev.

In the course of a very charming study of Ivan Turgenev, which is published in the February number of The North American Review, Mr. Charles Whibley strongly deprecates the tendency of some critics to regard the novels of that great literary artist as being political pamphlets. According to that school, Turgenev kept a constant hand upon the public pulse, and symbolized social or political movements in the characters he created. That is the spirit in which one of Turgenev's best known works has been characterized as "a poem of the youth of the Russian democracy," and one of his most attractive heroines as "foreshadowing and standing for the rise of young Russia in the sixties." Mr. Whibley insists that Turgenev preached neither for nor against the new ideas, and was in no way responsible for the political condition of his country. Russia was the material of his art, which he treated with a loftiness of purpose and a sincere impartiality which forbade him ever to play the part of advocate. Referring to the diverse pictures of contemporary Russia presented in the works of Tolstoi, Dostoievsky and Turgenev, Mr. Whibley says:—

"In the generation which is dying today, three masters have lived and worked, who belong not only to their own time and country, but to the literature of all countries and of all times. Turgenev, Dostoievsky, Tolstoi—all three have painted the Russia of their faith and enthusiasm, but in colors so diverse, with a sentiment so contradictory, that when we have read their books we are left with a tangle of hostile impressions. To find a formula which shall express the vision of the three is impossible. Their books are all strange to us—strange pictures of a strange land; the elemental man reveals himself at every turn under the polish of western refinement; but he reveals himself in so dissimilar an aspect that we can do no more than put him in the common class of humanity. If Raskolnikov be a distant cousin of Bazarov, can we regard him even as a vague kinsman to Litvinov, Lepine or Prince Andry? Impossible though it seems, we must accept in a single act of faith the high authority of Turgenev, Dostoievsky and Tolstoi; we must believe that their pictures are the truth seen through the eyes of a various temperament, remembering that in fifty years, when the unessential differences of politics are forgotten, the work of all three may appear harmonious even to the stranger."

Is it a New Dynasty.

If the authorities in England are unable to determine whether or not a new dynasty has been started with the advent to the throne of King Edward VII., it is hardly to be expected that we should speak with authority on the subject in Canada. But if we can throw light on the question, it is our duty to speak out. The London Daily Chronicle is quite unable to come to any conclusion in the matter. That journal, in its interesting daily causerie, says:—

"It would be interesting to know what warrant the new editions of Peerages and other books of reference have for the statement that a change of dynasty has taken place. Debrett says: 'Upon the death of her Majesty Queen Victoria, which terminated the Hanoverian dynasty, a new one, that of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha (or perhaps better, of Saxony), commenced.' His Majesty sits on the throne not by any right derived from Saxe-Coburg-Gotha or Saxony, but as the direct representative of the House of Hanover, which has reigned over us since 1714. Where, then, the ordinary man asks, is the change of dynasty? Perhaps the learned ones will say."

On this very topic a letter reaches me from a correspondent in Belleville, Mr. W. R. Bigg, who has gone to some trouble to show why the Debrett view of the question is the correct one. It may be added that Debrett's view is also that of that very reliable publication, Whitaker's Almanack in its 1902 issue, and that The Globe recently expressed a doubt whether the King's title did not as a matter of fact derive from his mother, and not from his father, causing him to rank in the House of Brunswick. It is in reply to this point that Mr. Bigg writes. He says:—

"It is through the very fact you mention, 'that the title comes through the female side,' that constitutes the name of the House on the father's side, and each and every precedent in English history confirms it, as the following synopsis will show:—House of Normandy, William the Conqueror, claimed by conquest—House named from the male line. House of Blois, Stephen, claimed through Adela, daughter of William I.—House named from the male line. House of Plantagenet, Henry II., claimed through the mother, Matilda, daughter of Henry I.—House named from the male line. House of Lancaster, Henry IV., claimed through Edward III.—House named from the male side, 'time-honored Lancaster.' House of York, Edward IV., claimed through his great-grandmother, Ann, great-great-granddaughter of Edward III.—House named from the male line. House of Tudor, Henry VII., claimed through Margaret, great-great-granddaughter of Edward III.—House named from the male line, 'Owen Tudor.' House of Stuart, James I., claimed through Margaret, great-granddaughter of Henry VII.—House named from Henry Stuart, third husband of Margaret Tudor. House of Orange, William III., claimed through his mother, Mary, granddaughter of James I.—House named from male line. House of Brunswick, George I., claimed through the mother, Sophia, granddaughter of James I.—House named from male line, Duke of Brunswick and Elector of Hanover. House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, Edward VII., claimed through the mother, Victoria, granddaughter of George III.—House named from the male side. The English are great sticklers for 'from precedent to precedent,' on Tennyson's authority, hence to rank Edward VII. as of the House of Brunswick would violate every precedent in English history."

Mr. Bigg's reasoning appears unanswerable to me, and I hope our London contemporary will have its doubts on this question removed as effectually.

The question should be disposed of finally before coronation, as it would never do to have a Sovereign whose second name we are not sure of.

It came to us, so white and pure,
A visitor we rarely see,
It stayed with us, to play with us—
'Twas welcomed by us royally.
It stuck to us, it would not go,
But gradually its paleness left
Until it scarcely seemed the same—
Of all its beauty 'twas bereft.
And now, as black as soot, it strews
The streets and pavements where we go.
We tramp it under foot and kick—

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

How He Got Left

A travelling salesman for a Toronto firm bought recently in Chicago a pair of tan shoes for $6. He liked them very well, but when he got back home to Peterborough, it struck him that they were not so fashionable as black shoes and so being rather "ultra" he said to one of his chums: "What will you give me, Frank, for my tan shoes that I paid $6 for in Chicago?" Frank answered "Only a quarter, for tan is not being much worn now." "For a half-dollar you may have them," the other said, woefully; and Frank thereupon took the shoes. He bought for them that night at his local dealer's a bottle of some strong sort of blacking, and thus turned them to the color of calfskin. Then he wore them next morning, and the man who had sold them to him said: "Those are nice shoes. How much were they?" "Only a half-dollar," Frank replied, and laughed. Then our friend gave a sickly smile and passed on.

IRISH AT HOME

And Entertainment in St. Andrews Lecture Hall Last Night

The members of Mrs. Waddell's Sunday School class gave a very pleasing entertainment and "Irish At Home" to their friends in St. Andrews Hall last evening. The large lecture hall was comfortably filled by a very attentive and enthusiastic audience. After the At Home a very delightful entertainment consisting of vocal and instrumental music, reading recitations and dialogues was presented.

One of the features was a representation of Mrs. Jarley's wax works. This amusing part was taken by a number of boys and girls who performed their parts in excellent style. Following this a number of very choice selections were rendered in a very pleasing and highly acceptable manner. At the conclusion of the programme refreshments were served.

Rev. J. G. Potter performed the duties of chairman in a most pleasing and acceptable manner.

TOOK THE HINT

Friend Told Him to Change His Food

Once in a while one can serve a friend and win a life-long obligation by a little food advice. This is worth while. "Very thankful I was to a friend for his advice when he told me about Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food at the time I was suffering. My stomach trouble originally came from neglect of colds which caused catarrh of the stomach, then followed misery from dyspepsia, headache, loss of vitality and flesh.

Last August a friend in discussing my health said that if I would change my food and take Grape-Nuts instead of any other food or medicine for one week he would guarantee that I would be greatly improved and feel like a new man.

He was so positive that I concluded to try it and, as I said, I am exceedingly thankful to him. In a week's time I lost the heavy, dull feeling in my head, nausea had ceased and the action of my general syst m had greatly improved.

I have stuck fast to Grape-Nuts. Now I weigh nine pounds more and am steadily improving. Grape-Nuts has a most exhilarating effect on the system and makes one feel bright and alive, as though they were well nourished as a healthy man should be.

The price of Grape-Nuts is within reach of all, but I consider it worth its weight in gold." John Hayward, 2616 Aspen street, Philadelphia, Pa.

"KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN"

Concert Under the Auspices of the T. A. S. Last Night

Bradburn's opera house was packed to the doors last night by a large and very appreciative audience, at the presentation of the Irish play, "Kathleen Mavourneen," which was put on under the auspices of St. Peter's T. A. S. The play was first-class in every particular, and though many were unable to procure seats, not one could be found dissatisfied.

Miss Nellie McCabe, as Kathleen Mavourneen could not be excelled, while Mr. George Lynch seemed quite in his element as Terrance O'Moore, and made a great hit with the audience. Mr. T. J. Begley, under whose management the play was put on, surpassed himself as Father Cassidy and David O'Connor. The other characters were as follows: Mr. John McCabe, as Bernard Kavanagh; Miss Ethel Primeau, as Dorothy Kavanagh; Mr. Jas. O'Brien, as Dennis McCarthy and Darby Doyle; Miss Fannie Holmes, as Meg Marslogh and Kittie O'Lavery; Mr. Jos. Begley, as Larry Blake; Miss Nellie Hallihan, as Eily O'Neil; Mr. James Hickey, as Capt. Clearfield and Turnkey McCubbin.

Irish solos were rendered during the evening by Messrs. Geo. Lynch and T. J. Begley, and Miss Levina Hallihan and little Nellie Hallihan. Several Irish selections were also rendered by the orchestra.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Of the Retail Merchant's Association Last Night—Officers Elected

The annual meeting of the Retail Merchant's Association of Peterborough, was held last night in the Y.M.C.A. hall. The attendance was not very large but was very enthusiastic.

Mr. Robert Fair, president, occupied the chair. In his report he dealt with a number of very important subjects. He was very pleased to see the very satisfactory advancement the association had made during the past year. One very important thing he considered was the trying to secure from the wholesale houses a concession inasmuch as that they should place the goods purchased free on board the cars at the point of shipment. At the present time the cartage bills are entered on the freight bills. Another concession he thought might be asked was that the merchants should not be charged such exhorbitant prices for packing cases. The merchants were paying a dollar and more for a box that did not cost more than sixty or sixty-five cents. The wholesalers were making a good profit on this article alone. The merchant could not get more than 10 or 15 cents for these empty boxes. When the retail merchant received a case of imported goods he was charged a certain sum for the case. This cost the wholesaler nothing and he, of course, made a clear profit on these boxes. In conclusion he referred to other matters of importance to the retailers. On motion the report was adopted.

SECRETARY'S REPORT

In presenting his report the secretary reviewed some of the concessions granted by the council to the merchants last year. Among other things the council had confirmed an agreement between the merchants to close at a certain hour during the summer months. Another thing asked for by the association was that the council pass a by-law in accordance with the act passed by the Ontario Legislature abolishing the giving of Trading Stamps. The request was granted and as a result the trading stamps have been discontinued since Jan 2nd. He recommended that the association ask the council to change the hour for merchants to purchase goods on the market from the present hour 11 a.m. to 10 a.m. This would be a very great help to the merchants and would allow the people to leave the market at an earlier hour. The report was adopted as read.

RETURN VISIT OF

Acknowledged by most intelligent and prominent people. His methods were approved of by judge and jury in the General Session, March 14th, 1901, which fact proves that scientific palmistry as practised by him has no connection with the vulgar fortune telling under the heading of astrology, tea cup tossing, card cutting, and the gipsies palm reading, who do not know the first principle of the theory.

Professor O'Brien's reputation is far and wide. People from every part of the world consult him. His patrons rank among judges M.P.'s, lawyers, clergymen, of every denomination, intelligent priests doctors, bankers, students, mechanics, etc., etc.

Those who never had their head or hand delineated, should call at once on Prof. O'Brien. His delineations are graphic and instructive, and he always makes it a point to give the young people good and sound advice. Don't forget there is only one Prof. O'Brien.

In phrenology he is at the head of his profession, in palmistry he has no equal. Call for circular and see what the Catholic Register, News, Mail and Empire Globe, etc., all the leading Toronto papers say.

During his first visit in Peterborough 268 people were examined by him, and still they come as fast as ever, for they all know what Prof. O'Brien's abilities are.

Those wishing to consult him please come early and avoid disappointments as Prof. O'Brien can only remain in Peterborough a few days longer. A photo read free to patrons. Private office at 263 Hunter st. terrace. Hours 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Why Catarrhozone Cures Catarrh

It goes to every affected part and kills the germs that keep up the diseased condition. Catarrhozone never irritates, but stimulates the mucous lining of the nose, throat and lungs to normal action, and keeps the nasal passages free from offensive discharges. Catarrhozone contains no dangerous drugs or opiates, and is delightfully simple and pleasant to use. Catarrhozone is an absolutely certain cure for any form of catarrh and sells for $1.00 at druggists, small size 25c. By mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Indigestion, that menace to human happiness, pitiless in its assaults, and no respector of persons, has met its conqueror in South American Nervine. This great stomach and nerve remedy stimulates digestion, tones the nerves, aids circulation, drives out impurities, dispels emaciation, and brings back the glow of perfect health. Cures hundreds of "chronics" that have baffled physicians.—60

In the Negotiations with China They Were Opposed by all the Other Powers

THE AMBITION OF JAPAN IN THE FAR EAST.

Tokio Correspondent of the Times Says She Wishes to Secure the Carrying Trade of Chinese Inland Waters

London, March 19.—Coincident with the news of alarming rebellions in three provinces of China, the Foreign Office here to-day issued a voluminous blue book dealing with the protracted negotiations between China and the powers from March 26, 1901, to September 7, 1901, when the final protocol was signed. In its 275 pages of diplomatic despatches, edicts and digests of China's financial capabilities there is ample evidence that the negotiations formed one of the most intricate webs of international differences in the history of the world.

STRIKING QUOTATION.

One striking quotation, peculiarly apt to the present Far Eastern situation, can be extracted from a despatch of the British ambassador at St. Petersburg, Sir Charles S. Scott, to Lord Lansdowne, the British Foreign Secretary, in which Count Lamsdorf, the Russian Foreign Minister, is quoted as saying he was pleased at the fact that the British Government was desirous of hastening a return to normal conditions in China, but he dreaded the possibility of fresh outbreaks of anti-foreign fanaticism.

Throughout the extended negotiations on the subject of the amount, division, and method of payment of the Chinese indemnity, Great Britain and the United States appear from the blue book to have worked hand in hand though opposed by all the other powers.

LIBERAL CATHOLIC'S SOLEMN WARNING.

London, March 19.—The Vienna correspondent of The Times notes signs of the beginning of a new intellectual uprising in Austria against aggressive ultramontanism. He says that a recent striking address by Leopold Wahrmund, Professor of Canonical Law in Innsbruck University, has found an echo in the Reichsrath. Prof. Wahrmund is a Liberal Catholic savant who protests against ultramontane objections to scientific investigation. In the address referred to he declared that the blindness of the Conservative leaders were destroying the vitality of the Catholic Church in Austria. Conservative Catholicism was becoming more dependent on the support of the lower classes. It was "a religion of rustics" like the declining paganism in the ancient world. At the same time indifference and radical socialism were destroying the very basis of the Christian faith in the middle classes. In the Reichsrath yesterday the Minister of Education said that Prof. Wahrmund's speech was political, and out of place in a university, but declined to issue a prohibition.

COUNT MATSUKATA'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

London, March 19.—A despatch from Tokio to The Times, says that though the visit to England of Count Matsukata is declared to have no financial purpose, reports from French and Russian sources are to the effect that the Count intends to arrange a loan, which was secretly promised by Great Britain, in order to equalize the advantages of the British-Japanese alliance.

THE AMBITION OF JAPAN.

London, March 19.—The Tokio correspondent of The Times says there is evidence of Japanese ambition to take a prominent place in the carrying trade on Chinese inland waters. This is shown in the formation of the Kunan Steamship Company, with a capital of about $750,000. The company will employ three steamers. The Government guarantees a profit of six per cent. on the paid up capital.

WAR WILL NOT BE PROLONGED, SAYS ROBERTS

There is no Cause for Uneasiness as Result of Recent Events and Draw Backs in South Africa

London, March 19.—Replying to an enquiry by a correspondent at Gainsborough, Lord Roberts, commander-in-chief of the forces, writes that there is not the slightest cause for uneasiness over affairs in South Africa, nor any reason to suppose that the war will be prolonged by recent events.

SULLEN AND DEFIANT.

London, March 19.—The majority of the Boer prisoners at Ambala have refused to sign the parole promising not to attempt to escape, in connection with the proposed move to the Simla hills for the hot weather. Several of their privileges have therefore been docked.

The prisoners recently asked for the opening of a school for youths in the camp, but a Dutch newspaper, which quoted Mr. Brodrick as having alluded in an offensive manner to the eagerness of the young Boers to learn English, came into their hands, and they held an excited meeting, at which they declined the proposed school.

The Boers are described as sullen and defiant.

HOW THE LINES ARE RUSHED.

London, March 18.—Futher evidence of the ability of the Boers to penetrate the blockhouse lines is contained in a despatch from Heilbron, Orange River Colony, which describes how Commandant Mentz, on the night of March 16, crossed the Heilbron-Wolvehoek Railroad line at Gottenburg. One Boer advanced, firing his rifle. Two pickets between the blockhouses returned the fire and killed the Boer and his horse. The Boers then cut the wire fence and drove in a mob of loose horses, which knocked down 300 yards of the fence. Commandant Mentz then rushed through with over three hundred Boers, the pickets being powerless to stop the overwhelming rush.

Food for Athletes

Rebuilds Brain and Muscle

A young athlete, commenting on the need of well selected food to build up a man after over-study says. "Two years ago I returned home from the university with my health quite run down from over-study and severe athletic training. I needed a good rest to put me right; but instead of taking it went to work in an office with very confining duties.

"My health grew no better; I felt unfit for work and at night would lie awake several hours before sleep would come. The appetite was gone entirely. One morning a new dish appeared on the table, Grape-Nuts with cream. We all thought it an excellent food, and I not only enjoyed breakfast that day, but dinner and supper as well.

"This rather surprised me. Since that I have made the food a regular article of diet. I keep a box on hand at the office and often lunch on Grape-Nuts and cream instead of going home to dinner.

"Although it was in the summer when I started the use of the food it was not long before I had gained 15 pounds, and I know it is from the use of this food that I can stand so well the indoor work. My health is now perfect; sleep sound and enjoy my meals, but do not need to eat so much volume of other food while eating Grape-Nuts.

"A short time ago I thought Grape-Nuts were commencing to disagree with me, but found it was because I was eating more than you recommend. I simply ate too much at a time and more than the system required. When I returned to the regular 'feed' of four heaping teaspoons, the old zest for the food returned."

This young man is a member of quite a famous family. He requests that his name be omitted, but the same can be furnished by application to the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

MANY NEW SETTLERS COMING TO CANADA

Over 12,000 Emigrants From Britain Already Booked

YANKEES BECOME JEALOUS

How a Leading American Paper Regards the Progress of Canada

Remarkable Falling off of Emigration From Britain to the United States—Canada Being Built up With Sturdy Stock

After the trouble in the Transvaal shall be ended there will be an active demand in the United Kingdom for emigrants to South Africa. A vast area of fertile country will have been practically depopulated; the frontier of civilization moved far to the northward in Rhodesia, and railroads and other public works of importance will divide with mining and farming the attention of wage-workers. The British Government is anxious that intending emigrants should consider South Africa first of all when selecting a future abiding place, and as soon as possible organized efforts will be made in Great Britain to this end.

What the British authorities merely propose, however, is being actually done at the present time by agents of the Dominion of Canada. These missionaries of "Our Lady of the Snows" have been gathering parties of colonists in England for several months past, and as a result of their efforts about 12,000 emigrants will leave British ports for the Dominion within the ensuing three months. Emigrants are sent from Liverpool to Winnipeg at a rate of $40, being "specially conducted" by Government agents. The Dominion Government also builds homes for the newcomers, in which they may live at nominal cost until firmly established in their new life. Inducements of this sort attract a high class of agricultural labor, without offering strong inducements to the scum of British cities. If continued persistently, the Dominion should reap decided and conspicuous advantages from the practice.

This innovation in Canadian conservative methods is a mere straw, but it shows how the wind blows in that quarter. There are untold riches lying hidden in the Dominion's vast and almost untrodden Northwest, and only an industrious and enterprising population of Anglo-Saxon lineage can wrest this wealth from its hiding places. Iron, gold, silver, copper, lead, coal, mineral oil, products of the forest — these and their cognate materials of commerce await revelation in Northern America during the twentieth century. In going directly to the mother country for strong arms and stout sinues to fight the battle with nature the Dominion authorities have taken a distinct step in advance. Immigration, once almost forced and compulsory, is now largely a matter of persuasion by shrewd and eloquent missionaries, and the Canadian emissaries in Great Britain seem to have made an excellent beginning.

As the independent British colonies draw from year to year more largely upon the old country the share of the United States in this class of emigration declines. Last year there came to this country about 45,000 emigrants from Great Britain, only 12,000 of whom were credited to England. Ten years ago the immigration from England to the United States exceeded 60,000 with a still larger number from the remainder of the United Kingdom. This is the sturdy stock that builds up new nations and assures free institutions wherever it settles and remains. To lose it is like losing the best and richest life blood of a nation.

Cecil Rhodes Illness.

Cape Town, March 18.—Cecil Rhodes is weaker. He is now hardly able to speak. The weather is warm, and not favorable to the sick man.

He dozed considerably, and took some nourishment during last night, but this morning he was decidedly weaker.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon his condition was unchanged.

The condition of Cecil Rhodes was unchanged at a quarter to six this evening.

SUFFERS FROM CANCER ALSO.

London, March 18.—The British South Africa Company has received the following despatch from Cape Town to-day: "Dr. Stevenson late last night considered Mr. Rhodes' condition critical. He passed a restless night. The attacks of heart failure continue."

Oxygen is being used frequently. Dr. Stevenson is in constant cable communication with Dr. Fowler, a heart specialist.

The critical condition of Cecil Rhodes is closely watched here. A report is published this evening that, apart from his heart trouble, he is suffering from cancer.

KRUGER SEES GOD'S HAND.

London, March 18.—News has been received here that President Kruger, on being informed of the critical condition of Cecil Rhodes, read a passage from the Bible, indicating that the Lord, in the opinion of the venerable President, was on the side of the Boers, and would punish their enemies.

RUSSIAN REVOLUTION NOW SEEMS PROBABLE

THE REBELLION GROWING

It Looks as Though the Great Northern Power had its Hands Full

The Present Revolutions is the Work of the Students—The Disaffection is Said to be Widespread

London, March 18 — The London Daily News asserts that there are authentic reports that the revolutionary movement in Russia has assumed serious proportions and is spreading in all directions, that the unrest has reached many parts of Siberia, and that the Governor of Tomsk has felt impelled to prohibit meetings of citizens in the towns and villages. Such a movement was predicted as a result of the student troubles. That the Czar is out of sympathy with the oppressive rule which has made personal liberty and life insecure, and taxation capricious, but always burdensome and almost intolerable, is well known; but it is also well known that the "Little Father" is powerless to apply a remedy.

This virtual enslavement of a people who are capable of producing writers and painters and musicians of the first rank and of powerful originality is the great anomaly of the twentieth century. That the Russians would, under a more popular form of government, or even if relieved of the terrible espionage of a tyrannical police, raise up able statesmen and jurists it is fair to infer. Probably the Czar is not ignorant of the possibilities of his people under favoring conditions, but he is impotent to advance the cause of a constitutional government. He is surrounded by a selfish aristocracy, an unscrupulous cabal of nobles, who would not hesitate at assassination should he display any practical sympathy with the doctrine of popular rights. Romances which are based on reality — the work of the school of writers who were inspired by the terrible realism of Gogol — show the tyranny not only of the crown tax gatherers, but also of the village despots who virtually exercise the power to consign men and women to death or to life imprisonment without show of justice. Those who control the destinies of the millions of Russia make no pretense of service for the people. There is no popular tribunal to impose a check on extravagance and brutal injustice, but in spite of the gentle spirit of the present Czar, the power of the Court, which is as absolute as in the days of Peter the Great, is used for oppression. Every class is still under the surveillance of the police, the tyranny of which is unrestrained.

For a long time the Nihilists have been inactive, and it cannot be known how far the alleged revolutionary movement affects the peasants, who have hitherto refused to take part in opposition to the existing order. It is reasonable to suppose that virtually all the students have become propagandists of constitutional doctrines.

AN IMPORTANT CONFERENCE

Will the Miners Bring on a Gigantic Strike in April or Not?

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

Shamokin, P. A., March 18.—Important results attach to the mine workers' conference, which opened here to-day, as upon its deliberations depends the question of a gigantic strike next month. The convention is composed of nearly 800 delegates representing the three largest anthracite districts. District Presidents Fahey, Duffy and Nicholls are in attendance, as is also President John Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers' of America. The wage agreement secured after the big strike of 1900, expires April 1, and it is for the purpose of discussing a new agreement to become effective on that date that the convention is held. Officials and prominent members of the mineral organizations, while not disposed to discuss the situation at any length, affect to believe that a satisfactory agreement will be reached without the necessity of resorting to extreme measures. It is regarded as curious, however, that the anthracite operators have refused to participate in a joint conference, and that the same position has been assumed by the officials of the coal carrying roads.

No statement was issued by the miners to-day for publication. The formal opening of the convention was in public session, but the proceedings were of a purely routine nature, consisting of an address of welcome by Chief Burgess William Thomas and responses by the district presidents. At the conclusion of these formalities, the delegates went into executive session to take up the real business before the convention. It is regarded as probable that the proceedings will continue through the entire week.

HALF A MILLION FOR THE POPE.

The Holy Father Gets Tremendous Sums From Rich People

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

Rome, March 18.—It is stated that during the year 1901 the Pope figured as legatee in over 700 wills throughout the Catholic world, the aggregate amount thus left to him being $500,000. The largest single legacy to his Holiness was $30,000, bequeathed to him by a wealthy Italian manufacturer, and the second largest $20,000, said to have been left to him by an American woman.

SEIZED WITH A BLIND PANIC THE UNSEASONED TROOPS STAMPEDED.

London, March 19.—The war correspondent of The Daily Mail, Mr. Edgar Wallace, reports from Heilbron, Orange River Colony:—There can be little doubt that the murdering of British prisoners by the Boers is becoming more frequent than ever. At Col. Wilson's fight near Frankfort there were three cases of attempted murder, concerning which sworn evidence has been taken. All the cases were similar. The Boers covered their prisoners with rifles and ordered them to hand over their arms and valuables. Upon the men disarming, and with their hands still above their heads, they were deliberately shot, luckily, none of them fatally.

There were other authentic cases, upon which evidence will be sworn, of some of the prisoners being brutally murdered, one man having his skull smashed in.

The women who are on the farms in the back country, or who accompany the main commandoes, are very bitter, and urge the men on to acts of villiany, and a prisoner taken recently by the Boers said that as he passed a farm some women came out and shouted to the men in Dutch, "Cut their throats—don't take them prisoners."

Others Fought on Unshrinkingly Until Resistance was Hopeless

Graphic Details of One of the Most Stubborn Battles in History

London. Tuesday. March 18.—The correspondent of the Standard at Pretoria sends a detailed description of the disaster to Gen. Methuen's column, which was in the main composed of colonial troops. It coincides in all essentials with Gen. Kitchener's latest tributes to the dashing bravery of the Boers, who, in opening their charge on the rear guard, bore themselves with the utmost courage and determination, many of them riding right into the midst of the screen covering the march of the column.

After a temporary check they went on again with a gallantry which it would be churlish not to extol, heedless of the hot fire poured into their lines.

The correspondent also praises the courage and steadfastness of the British artillery, the regular infantry, the Cape Mounted Police, the Fifth Imperial Yeomanry, and the details who were not stampeded. They held their ground, and fought with splendid courage. The attack on the right flank was met by the infantry and 4th Battery with such firmness that the Boers, with all their gallantry, were unable to get nearer than 600 yards. Between eight and nine o'clock, Gen. Methuen, fully realizing the gravity of affairs, gave orders for the convoy's troops to be retired towards a kraal, where he had already collected a portion of the baggage. He also attempted to get the mounted men once more together, but failed. They had gone too far for rallying.

METHUEN THEIR TARGET.

Placing Major Paris in command at the kraal, Gen. Methuen galloped back to the guns on the right. He encouraged the men by voice and gesture, and at once became a conspicuous figure to the Boers, and an obvious target for them. The Boer marksmen concentrated their fire on him as he rode from point to point. At length his horse fell dead, shot in three places, while he himself received a bullet through the thigh. His loss caused regret, but not dismay.

Though their general was down, and the day was to all appearances lost, the Yeomanry, Cape Police, and the few details still left, who had sustained without shrinking the brunt of the struggle, fought on with unabated coolness and determination, keeping the Boers off their flanks and rear until 9.30. At that hour, the Boers, thanks to their greatly superior numbers and the encouragement given them by General Delarey in person, resumed the offensive, and began to envelop the position. A half-hour later, the Boers were circling around the force and the kraal.

Celliers unmasked two 15-pounders and began shelling the kraal. The British guns had been silenced, and the infantry and mounted troops were forced to retire slowly on the kraal. There was therefore nothing to prevent the Boers from closing in on the position, which was soon untenable. There was but one means of preventin further and unavailing loss of life, namely, surrender.

The correspondent says regarding the rear-guard who bolted, that they were quite unnerved by the desperate dash of the Boer veterans. They fairly stampeded under the influence of that blind panic which has in the history of war fastened at times upon infinitely more seasoned troops.

MOSTLY COLONIALS.

In reply to questions asked in the House of Commons this afternoon Secretary of War Brodrick enumerated the mounted troops that were comprised in Gen. Methuen's column as follows: The Royal Field Artillery, the the Diamond Field Artillery, Ashburner's Light Horse Dennison's Scouts, the Diamond Field Horse, detachments of the Cape Police, the Fifth Yeomanry, the Eighty-sixth Yeomanry, detachments of the British South Africa Police, and Cullinan's Horse. All these, with the exception of the Royal Field Artillery and the Imperial Yeomanry, are local South African corps.

Speaker's Sore Throat

Public speakers and singers know how useless and sickening are cough mixtures, sprays, lozenges, etc., for irritable or sore throat, and state that the most satisfactory remedy is Catarrhozone, the advantage of which is that it acts quickly and is convenient to use in public places. Catarrhozone relieves congestion, allays inflammation, and is a protection to the membrane. As a safeguard against colds and catarrh it has no equal. Rev. Mr. McKay, Goderich, says, "Catarrhozone is an excellent remedy for trouble arising from throat irritation." Physicians, ministers and singers recommend Catarrhozone, druggists sell it for $1. Small size 25c. By mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Weather Notes

Cold weather now prevails in all parts of Canada, except in the Maritime Provinces. Milder conditions are indicated for the Territories and Manitoba, but elsewhere continued cold.

FENIANS ARE ORGANIZED FOR A RISING IN IRELAND

London, March 19.—A despatch from Rome to the Chronicle says that confidential news has reached the Vatican that the Fenians for months past have been carrying on a most active propaganda in Ireland, and organizing for a general rising. It is believed that the Vatican will instruct the Irish clergy to hold themselves aloof from revolutionary agitation.

PRINCESS LOUISE'S BIRTHDAY

The Former Occupant of Rideau Hall was Fifty-Four Yesterday

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

London, March 18.—To-day being the fifty-fourth anniversary of the birth of Princess Louise (Duchess of Argyll) the bells of St. George's Chapel, Windsor Castle, and St. John's church, pealed merrily in honor of the event. In the afternoon a royal salute was fired in the Longwalk. Princess Louise was born at Buckingham Palace March 18, 1848.

SMALLPOX SAVES A LIFE

A Murderer Whose Sentence is Reprieved Because Scourge Broke Out

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

Mount Holly, N. J., March 18.—Thanks to the prevalence of smallpox in the county jail, John Young, convicted of the murder of Washington Hunter, was not hanged to-day, the date set by the court for the execution. Upon learning of the existence of smallpox among the inmates, the jurors appointed to witness the execution refused to enter the jail. This gives the condemned murderer a new lease of life and it is not improbable that his counsel will take advantage of the peculiar facts in the case and endeavour to prevent the sentence being carried out now that the date fixed for the execution has passed.

Princeton, N.J., March 18.—Congratulatory telegrams in abundance were received by former President Cleveland to-day on the occasion of his sixty-fifth birthday. The ex-president spent the day at home with Mrs. Cleveland and their children. Mr. Cleveland was born in Caldwell, Essex county, New Jersey, March 18, 1837.

NOTABLE SALE OF CATTLE

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

Kansas City, Mo., March 18.—One of the most notable sales of shorthorns in the history of cattle breeding in the West will begin here to-day. The cattle to be disposed of comprise the entire herd of W. R. Nelson, who is retiring from business. In the lot are three cows bred by Queen Victoria and cattle from the most noted herds of England, Scotland and Canada. Nearly every state and territory of the Union is represented among the buyers.

He will Mount the Scaffold This Morning Unless He is Reprieved

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

Aberdeen, Miss., March 18.—Unless he manages to make another of his celebrated escapes in the meantime, or some of the higher powers intercede in his behalf, Will Lanier, the Monroe county outlaw and murderer, will be hanged here to-morrow.

Lanier was convicted nearly two years ago of the murder of the Biddle brothers, being assisted in the crime by two other members of his family, who are now in the penitentiary serving sentences. The crime was peculiarly atrocious. Just a few days prior to the date set by the supreme court for the hanging Lanier escaped and remained at large several months. He was captured in Georgia and returned to the county jail here. While awaiting re-sentence he again escaped and remained at large several days, being finally recaptured near his old home. Another appeal was then taken to the supreme court, which tribunal reaffirmed the decision of the lower court and fixed to-morrow as the date of execution.

MRS. CONGER GIVES A TIFFIN

Pekin, March 18 — Mrs. Conger, wife of the American Minister and senior woman of the Diplomatic Corps, gave a tiffin to-day to nine Chinese Princesses and two women of the Court. Some of these had never before seen a foreigner.

The Princess Imperial Yung Shou, daughter of Prince Kung and adopted daughter of the Dowager-Empress, in responding to a toast, presented the Dowager-Empress' greetings and her prayer for a continuance of happy relations between the hostess and herself. The Chinese Consort Shun and two of the wives of Prince Ching and three of his daughters were present.

The party also included the women of the American Legation and four women from the American missions and an interpreter. The event is altogether unprecedented.

Items of Interest

London, March 17.—A report is current in Downing street that Lord Kitchener has gone to Klerksdorp to have a talk with Lord Methuen and this is probably true, as Lord Kitchener is naturally anxious to obtain the fullest information of the recent disaster. He would also want to hear what Commandant Delarey had to say to his distinguished prisoner during the week that Lord Methuen remained in the hands of the Boers.

The impression caused in this country by the chivalrous magnanimity of Commandant Delarey in releasing a British general whom he might have exchanged with advantage is remarkably deep and widespread, and is, according to all appearances, destined to have practical results of the highest importance. The belief prevails in responsible quarters that Commandant Delarey communicated fully to Lord Methuen the views, aspirations and demands of the Boer leaders in the field, and that they are moderate. More than that, it is believed that Lord Kitchener will advise that the British Government accept them.

Hong Kong, March 18.— General Ma has been defeated by the Kwang-Si rebels, who have taken possession of Fang-Chung. They have killed or captured all the Mandarins, and have looted the town.

General Ma attacked the rebel strongholds, but after an engagement lasting two days was forced to retreat. The rebels then established their headquarters at Feng-Chung. The rebellion is spreading rapidly in the Provinces of Kwang-Si, Kwang-Tung and Yun-Nan. A letter received here from Tien-Pai, fifty miles from Kwang-Chou, says all business is suspended there owing to fear of the rebels. Marshal Su is at LianChou, and General Ma is at Hae-Chau. Both of these commanders are awaiting reinforcements. They wish to join their forces, but the rebels are holding all the intervening passes and prevent a junction of the Government troops. Many of the Imperial soldiers are joining the rebels, owing to the superior pay offered them, and the opportunity for looting. The rebel leader is Hung-Ming, a relative of the celebrated Hung-Sou-Chuen, leader of the Tai-Ping rebellion.

Brunsbuttel, Prussia, March 19—Emperor William left this port at 8.15 this morning on board the battleship Kaiser Wilhelm II., in order to meet Admiral Prince Henry of Prussia at Cuxhaven.

Pekin, March.—A conference of the Ministers of the powers to-day decided on the principal of restoring the Chinese Government at Tien-Tsin, thus reversing the decision of the military commanders. No time for the transfer has as yet been fixed.

London, March 18.—The Globe's naval correspondent reports that on her recent cruise along the Irish coast, the British battleship Revenge was fitted with a wireless telegraph apparatus, and received a number of private Marconigrams passing between mail steamers and the shore. The correspondent understands that the Admiralty proposes to make an attempt to intercept Marconigrams from an experimental station across the Atlantic, with the view of determining whether Signor Marconi has perfected his syntonic system.

It was moved by Messrs. Madill and Smith that, owing to the disappearance of order No. 7, of 1901, that an order be reissued for the sum of $2.50 in favor of I. Fowler, for wood for the town hall, and that the treasurer be instructed to cancel original order.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Smith and Dobbin that the accounts, as read, be passed and paid.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. May and Smith that the Auditors' Report be received and adopted, and that the same be published according to law, and that orders be drawn in favor of W. G. Yelland and J. R. Bell for the sum of $5.00 each as salary.—Carried.

Moved by Messrs. Madill and May that the whole council meet at the washout on the 10th concession, near Riverdale, on Thursday next at 10.00 a.m., for the purpose of making arrangements to repair the break in the road.—Carried.

A proposition was made to alter Road Divisions Nos. 1 and 4, so that the gravel road would all be placed in Road Division No. 1. This was referred to the clerk to investigate the amount of commutation tax that such alteration would deduct from Road Division No. 4.

The Reeve, Mr. Bradburn, reported having attended the session of the county council and of having succeeded in getting a grant of the sum of $100 towards the repair of Lockie's bridge.

The committee that waited upon the county council re cattle guards reported the willingness of the county council to send a memorial to the Dominion Government, asking for the erection of more suitable guards at the highway crossings.

The clerk was then instructed to prepare by-laws for the appointment of a collector and road commissioners, fence viewers and pound keepers, for consideration at next meeting.

Council then adjourned until the second Monday in April at 1.30 p.m.

Dooley on Athletics For Women.

MR. HENNESSY having ventured to say that athletic exercise is a splendid thing for women, "Is it, faith?" said Mr. Dooley. "Well, it may be, but it's no good f'r th' women f'r th' men. I don't know annything that cud be more demoralizin' thin to be marrid to a woman that cud give me a sthroke a shtick at goluf. 'Tis goin' to be th' roon iv fam'ly life. 'Twill break up th' happy home. I'm a man, we'll say, that's down town fr'm th' arly mornin' bendin' over a ledger an' thryin' to thrap a dollar or two to keep th' landlord fr'm th' dure. I dispise athletes. I see that all th' men that have a metallic rattle whin they get on a moovin' sthreet car are pounds overweight, an' wud blow up if they jogged around th' corner.

"Well, I come home at night, an' no matther how I've been 'Here-you-d' all day, I feel in me heart that I'm th' big thing there. What makes me feel that way, says ye? 'Tis th' sinse iv physical supeeryority. Me wife is smarter thin I am. She's had nawthin' to do all day but th' housewurrk an' puttin' in th' coal an' studyin' how she can make me do something I don't want to do that I wud want to do if she didn't want me to do it. She's thrained to th' minyit in havin' her own way. Her mind's clearer, mine bein' full iv bills iv ladin'; she can talk betther an' more frequent; she can throw me fam'ly in me face, an' whin har-rd put to it, her starry eyes can gleam with tears that I think ar-re grief, but she knows diff'rent. An' I give in. But I've won, just th' same.

"But now, how is it? I go home at night an' I'm met at th' dure be a female joynt. Me wife's th' champeen lady golufess iv th' Ivy Leaf Goluf Club; th' finest oarslady on th' canal; a tinnis player that none can raysist without injury. She can ride a horse, an' I cuddn't stay on a merry-go-round without clothespins. She can box a good welterweight, an' she's got medals f'r th' broad jump. Th' on'y spoorts she isn't good at is cookin' an' washin'. This large lady, a little peevish because she's off her dhrive, meets me at th' dure an' begins issuin' ordhers befure I have me shoes off. 'Tis jut th' same as if I was back on th' hoist. She doesn't argy, she doesn't weep. She jus' says, 'Say, you,' an' I'm off on th' bound. I look her over, an' say I to meself, 'What's th' good? I cuddn't cross that guard,' an' me reign is ended. I'm back to th' ranks iv th' prollitory.

(Paris Correspondent of London "Truth.")

THE Earl-Marshal's notification to the peers and peeresses of Great Britain is thought vastly amusing. It strikes us here as might an attempt to go back with pride to the ancestral missing link, whose skeleton it appears has been found in the farthest East. There was something grand and handsome in the distinctive costumes that Louis the Fourteenth invented. The tabouret and the pliant, or folding seat, had their manifest raison d'etre in the crowded saloons and galleries at Versailles. But the notification of the Earl-Marshal strikes us as the triumph of smallness, the exaltation of pettiness. Could Swift have been thinking of a similar notification in his time when he wrote about the war between the Big-Endians and the Little-Endians? A consequence of the notification will be to make American heiresses scorn offers of marriage from noblemen less high than dukes. They will know now that dukes only have strawberry leaves on their coronets and four rows of black snips of fur on their miniver capes. Barons who can only wear two rows of the black snips will be held of small account in the heiress preserves of the United States, and so, we may expect, will be earls who have half a row less than the marquis, and a whole row less than a duke. What American lady could bear to appear as a baron's wife in a mantle with a train three feet on the ground when the viscountess immediately preceding her had one a quarter of a yard longer, the countess preceding her half a yard, the marchioness three-quarters of a yard, and the duchess a whole yard? The English easily grasp the inferiority of their "proper stations" in or out of the Peerage. But the Americans do not. Their motto is "tout ou rien." They must have a front seat, or they leave the room. Mr. Jesse Grant, though not of the ornamental sex, declined to dine at Windsor with the lords' gentlemen-in-waiting. "If I do not dine with father (the ex-President of the United States) and mother at the Queen's table I go home." A court official with fear and trembling conveyed this intimation to her late Majesty, who reluctantly yielded, for Big-Endian and Little-Endian questions came within the compass of her brain, and she attached great importance to them. Mr. Jesse Grant did not know that the smallest of the court officials with whom he scorned to dine took precedence of the grand old Gladstone, and that without shocking any Englishman. The aristocratic nobody who waited on the Queen was supposed to absorb some of her sacred virtue. So far as precedence went, the Prime Minister, who was the representative of the nation, was of inferior standing. But I dare say this did not matter to the Grand Old Man.

I had some years ago one of her Majesty's judges (Sir Henry Keating) dining with me. Another guest was an English Honorable, who might have been, in regard to age, his son. It seemed to me absurd that the place of honor should not be given to the judge. To make things pleasant to him, I consulted him before the dinner came off on the subject of precedence. "If," he said, "it is a Franco-English dinner, adopt French rules, since you are in France; if it is an English one, adopt English, in which case I go behind the Honorable. Any earl's son old enough to wear a swallow-tailed coat and a white cravat is entitled to take the pas of me. I know that an American judge, accustomed to be looked up to, would not like to walk behind a young sprig of nobility. I remember Evarts, the great American lawyer who pleaded on the side of the United States at the Geneva Arbitral Court, being visibly annoyed at an earl's son who had just left Eton being placed above him at table."

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the boy's paper, and there was "have gone" fifty times. On the other side was written "I have went home."

Honesty in business pays in the long run. The Americans exported in 1880 127,553,907 pounds of cheese. Owing to adulteration, skim and filled cheese, the United States output to foreign countries decreased last year to 39,813,517 pounds. On the other hand, Canadian cheese, which has a name for reliability, has grown in exports from 40,368,000 in 1880 to 190,926,327 pounds in 1901.

The amount of carbonic acid gas given off by a few plants is so small that one hundred plants in a room would not give as much as one man during a night, and they make many volumes of oxygen during the day more than sufficient to compensate for their presence. Rooms in which plants are kept have, moreover, a fresh odor about them, owing to the fact that they absorb nitrogen, and it is this in part that makes a room stuffy, because nitrogen occurs in most of the secretions emanating from man or animals.

Choice of Grain for Seed.

By instructions of the Minister of Agriculture another distribution will be made this season of samples of the most productive sorts of grain to Canadian farmers for the improvement of seed. The stock for distribution is of the very best and has been secured by the Director of the Experimental Farms from the record-breaking crops recently had in the Canadian Northwest. It will be worth while for farmers generally to renew their seed of oats when varieties which have produced more than 100 bushels per acre can be had. The distribution this spring will consist of samples of oats, spring wheat, barley, field pease, Indian corn and potatoes. Every farmer may apply, but only one sample can be sent to each applicant, hence if an individual receives a sample of oats he cannot also receive one of wheat, barley or potatoes, and applications for more than one sample for one household cannot be entertained. These samples will be sent free of charge through the mail. Applications should be addressed to the Director of Experimental Farms, Ottawa, and may be sent in any time before the 15th of March, after which the lists will be closed, so that all the samples asked for may be sent out in good time for sowing. Parties writing should mention the sort of variety they would prefer, and should the available stock of the kind asked for be exhausted some other good sort will be sent in its place.

Winter Washing of Fruit Tree.

The winter season offers the fruit-grower his opportunity for wreaking vengeance on the insect enemies which play such incalculable havoc with the fruit trees in the summer months. The insects are practically at his mercy in the dead season, for they cannot flee from the deadly poison he may with safety apply for their destruction, and if the owners of orchards care to exercise their powers of quelling infestation at the proper time and in the proper way they can largely diminish, if not entirely remove, the risk of harmful insect attacks. The Board of Agriculture has prepared, and is circulating free of charge, a leaflet dealing with this subject which is deserving of thoughtful attention.

As is well known, the insects hibernate in the broken bark of the trees, and the course of treatment proposed is the washing of the trees with caustic alkali wash, the use of which has been found effectual in removing the rough decaying bark under which the insects shelter, and at the same time in destroying the eggs of noxious insects. The directions given for the preparation of the wash are:—First dissolve one pound of commercial caustic soda in water; then one pound of crude potash in water. When both have been dissolved mix the two well together; then add three-quarter pound of agricultural treacle, stir well, and add sufficient water to make up ten gallons. The best time to apply is about the middle of February, when the eggs are in a more susceptible state and the trees still safe from injury.—London Post.

It Pays to Keep Hogs.

It is a mistake for any farmer not to keep live stock of some kind. Almost all farmers appreciate the profit there is in cows, and the fact that they maintain the good condition of the soil and tend to add wealth in more ways than one.

But how is it about hogs? They go well with the dairy. It was a mistake to get scared at the time when hog cholera prevailed—at least to get so scared as to give up hogs altogether. We know a great many farmers who made money out of hogs the last year. Hog cholera has not prevailed so extensively as in some years in the past.

But it seems to be the fact that on many farms not a single hog is to be found. As some one has said, these farmers are throwing away enough milk and refuse from the table to keep a good sow or two, and besides raising their own meat have a nice little bunch to sell each year. "The idea seems to prevail among a great many," says this writer, "that unless you own or are operating a large farm there is no place for the hog. This is a very mistaken idea. There can be just as much made in proportion with hogs upon a small farm as upon a large one.

"Few are the farms (it matters not the size) that will not support a brood sow or two and do it well, with scarcely any other feed than the milk, parings and refuse from the table and a liberal supply of grass. Sows kept in this manner will, as a rule, have more pigs, and they will also be healthier and stronger. After the sows have their pigs, push them along and do not let them become stunted, because a pig stunted when it is little will never make the hog it would have made had it been kept continually growing. After the pigs will weigh from 60 to 10 0pounds, if they are nice, growthy, attractive fellows, there is always a market for them. There is scarcely a neighborhood where you will not find men that are always on the lookout for shoats of this kind, to follow cattle or feed out, and this is the small farmer's opportunity to dispose of them at a good profit, too."—Farm, Field and Fireside.

"Do you think that Miss Strong will make Jack a good wife?" McBrandon inquired of Chabbey.

"I wouldn't say that, but you just bet your life she'll try to make him a good hubby."—Philadelphia Press.

Yeast—Don't you think arbitration is the safest way to settle disputes?

Crimsonbeak—No, I must say that I do not. We had some trouble with our cook and I went to the kitchen to arbitrate the matter with her. Come up to the house some time and I'll show you what remains of the suit of clothes I wore that day.—Yonkers Statesman.

Curious Bits of News.

A Boston woman will agitate for a law prohibiting the boiling or roasting of chestnuts, on the ground that it involves painful death of worms "whose right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness is no less than that of the most highly dowered man."

Last summer Doctor Berson, the German aeronaut, accompanied by Doctor Suering, made a balloon ascent from Berlin, and attained the enormous altitude of about 33,000 feet, or six and a quarter miles. Then they lost consciousness, so that, although they descended safely, they have no record to show what the maximum height attained may have been.

The laurels have been stripped from Byron's brow and also from Leander's by two plucky women who have just succeeded in swimming across the Hellespont at its widest part—which is about two miles. They are Miss Wood, daughter of Vice-Admiral Wood of the English navy, and the wife of the German military attache at Constantinople.

One New York hotel that suffered severely from the souvenir spoon and salt-cellar mania adopted the plan of notifying guests that each waiter was responsible individually for all articles on his table, and would have to make good any loss. This reduced the taking of spoons to a robbery of the waiter instead of the hotel, and even the souvenir hunter has some conscience about such a theft.

The postal savings bank building in Amsterdam, Holland, is being constructed by the "Monier system," a new method of construction. A steel framework, like a bird-cage in appearance, is enveloped in Portland cement, which prevents the steel from rusting, while the cement itself is rendered elastic. This construction is said to be strong, fireproof and waterproof, and to be growing in favor in Europe for government buildings and factories.

The moment a man ceases to grow he begins to diminish. Such is the conclusion at which a German physician has arrived, after several months' careful study of the subject of human height. Men, so it is asserted, begin to grow smaller in their thirty-fifth year, and women a little before they are forty. Men, however, stop growing when they are thirty, and for five or six years their stature remains stationary. Then it decreases, at first very slowly, but afterwards more rapidly.

The Presidents that Ohio has given to the United States have been pursued by a curious and most lamentable fatality. Of the four, only President Hayes survived office. Garfield and McKinley were assassinated, and William Henry Harrison served but one month of his term. Ohio men have been elected to five terms in office, but succeeded in serving only nine years and one month of the twenty years—Harrison one month, Garfield six months, Hayes four years, and McKinley four years and six months.

Had not King Edward issued a decree to the effect that widows of peers who have contracted marriages with commoners had forfeited thereby their prerogatives as peeresses of the realm, there might have appeared among the latter at Westminster Abbey on the day of the coronation a coal black negress of the Hottentot type, arrayed in the ermine trimmed red velvet robes and the gold coronet of her rank as a countess. For the dusky widow of the late Earl of Stamford has since his death married a Boer named Pieter Pieterse, and has made her home in South Africa since her unsuccessful attempt to prove the rights of her son to his father's earldom.

Dr. Drummond's Chinese Dinner.

DR. W. H. DRUMMOND, the author of those fascinating delineations of the habitants' life, underwent a novel experience at Vancouver the other day when he was entertained to dinner in Chinatown. Dr. Drummond, it appears, is intensely interested in the conditions surrounding the life of the Chinese, and it was with a view to aiding him in his observations that the Chinese dinner was arranged for him by a few friends. It was held at the Quang Fong Low restaurant, in Dupont street. The front of the restaurant was gaily lit with lanterns in honor of the distinguished guest. Eight others sat down with Dr. Drummond at the round table, which had been decorated in customary Chinese fashion. The array of preliminary sweetmeats having been sampled, the dinner proper began. The time of the commencement was 10 o'clock and the meal lasted until 2 in the morning; no time was wasted, however, as the bill of fare was a formidable one, consisting of no less than 15 courses. They were as follows: 1. Stewed shark fins. 2. Pigeon with mushrooms. 3. Birdsnest soup. 4. Stewed chicken. 5. Boiled fish tripe. 6. Duck and tomato sauce. 7. Hairy mushrooms. 8. Duck and shellfish sauce. 9. Chicken with green peppers. 10. Sliced chicken. 11. Shrimps. 12. Pigeons. 13. Duck cooked in melon. 14. Sliced chicken and pineapple. 15. Ground almond gruel.

There were one or two extras, as to the composition of which the bravest did not dare enquire. The viands were handled more or less clumsily with ivory chopsticks and were washed down with many a "yum poy" of orange wine and the inevitable tea. After the usual toasts the doctor thanked his entertainers in a characteristic speech, stating that the evening had been one of the most enjoyable in his experience, and one of which he would ever retain a happy remembrance. All one can say is that the doctor must have a peculiarly good digestion.

A Prophecy.

Some eight or nine months ago a self-appointed prophet, residing, as his fellows generally do, on the Continent, predicted that in about two centuries the lunatic asylums all over the world would be empty. Lest, however, the actual generations should rejoice in anticipation of the happy condition of their posterity, he proceeded to explain, and the explanation, though short, was to the point, and did not lack a substratum of far-seeing philosophy. The madhouses would be untenanted not because there would not be any demented people, but because there would not be a sufficient number of sane folk to conduct them thither and to sequestrate them.

A father, in consoling his daughter who had lost her husband, said: "I don't wonder you grieve for him, my child; you'll never find his equal." "I don't know as I can," responded the sobbing widow; "but I'll do my best."

"If a ship," began the comedian with the rose tinted beard, "is 100 feet long and 40 feet wide, and its masts are 150 feet high, and the bo'sun is bowlegged, what does the captain weigh?"

"It weighs the anchor!" hoarsely shouted the audience, as it grabbed the benches to prevent itself rising en masse and doing violence to the comedian.

LOVE

Lives only in the present. Nature throws a glamor around youth and maiden, so that although they saw misery and marriage walking hand in hand in every home in the world they would fondly believe that they could marry and defy misery.

Young women should be taught to prepare for marriage. They should understand how to preserve their womanly health through the functional changes of maternity. Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the most effective medicine for the preservation of womanly health and the cure of womanly diseases. It regulates the periods, dries enfeebling drains, heals inflammation and ulceration, and cures female weakness. It prepares the womanly organism for maternity and makes the birth hour practically painless.

"My wife was afflicted with uterine trouble for several years," writes Mr. J. C. Day, of Little Britain, Lancaster Co., Pa., "and in November, 1898, the doctor said she had a miscarriage. He treated her for about two months or so, but there was but little improvement. I wrote you after she had commenced to take 'Favorite Prescription' and you told us to get 'Golden Medical Discovery' also. She took six or seven bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and two of 'Golden Medical Discovery' and got out of bed and was able to attend to her household work."

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realize our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows, all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really knew the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

Coats of mail are now being manufactured from papier-mache that cannot be distinguished from real antique armor. According to the wishes of the customer, the armor can be turned out bright steel, silver and gold inlay, hammered brass, rusty iron or malachite. As described by the New York "Evening Post," the new goods are calculated to deceive the best critics, and to give all the satisfaction of the genuine coat of mail. They are warranted not to break easily or to cut any unfortunate guest upon whom they may happen to fall. All descriptions of armor can be had. The new invention has aroused the anger of the dealers in antique armor, who declare that it is intended to ruin their trade.

A well-known English firm of tobacconists are giving away in their packets of cigarettes a small map of the Klondike district. It is colored red, and the words "British Territory" are printed upon it in large letters. On the back is found the following little history of the gold fields: "There is no doubt that the Klondike district is the richest gold field yet discovered. It comprises some 192,000 square miles, mostly in British territory, and although mining has been going on steadily for the past ten years, it was only in August, 1896, that the extraordinary richness of the diggings was discovered." We have been accustomed to portraits of fat women and popular heroes for so long that the novelty is as pleasant as it is instructive.

Where He Failed.

The young man drew himself up to his full height.

"I have," he cried, "an unsullied character, an ardent heart, a versatile mind and strenuous biceps."

The young girl yawned and seemed interested. He was quick to push his advantage.

"I am the possessor of a town and country house, a yacht, a stable of thoroughbreds and a box at the opera."

She hesitated, and a slight flush betrayed that she was listening.

"I have got," he continued with a certain fierceness, "thirty servants, forty pairs of trousers, fifty ancestors, three automobiles, six prize bull pups and an army commission."

"And how many golf medals?" she lisped.

The young man shuddered.

He felt that he had lost. He had played nervily and high, but she was above his limit.—"Waverley Magazine."

Mrs. Fitz-Candle—Ah, me! There was a time when you always called me "Daisy;" now it's "Mrs. Fitz-Candle," as if I were the merest stranger to you. Fitz-Candle—Found out my mistake, my dear. Daisies shut up at night. You don't.—"Tit-Bits."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

"A grand old place," murmurs Daisy. "Oh, how dearly I would love to go through the grounds and gather some of those roses! I love flowers so." She threw back her yellow curls with a mischievous laugh. "I will!" she cried; "there's no one at the Hall yet; the place has been shut up for years. Who is there to care?"

Suiting the action to the word, Daisy sprung from her boat, secured it to a slender sapling, ran nimbly up the steep, mossy bank, and through the high, arched gateway into the grounds.

The wilderness of bloom seemed like a veritable paradise to Daisy. She was loath to leave it, even though an hour had passed. She stood in the arched gateway looking back at the grounds, her arms full of roses, trying to imagine what the scene would be like on the night of the grand lawn-fete.

The sight of that bright, laughing young girl with her arms full of crimson passion roses, standing just within the arched, vine-wreathed gate would have startled any one.

It startled the tall, dark-eyed young man hurrying past. He stopped suddenly in the path, his eyes met hers—those dark, laughing, magnetic eyes that few women ever yet had the power of resisting. He raised his hat; then, as though some subtle force drew him toward her, he left the path and came quickly over the long, green grass toward the gate.

A rabbit darted across the thicket, a bird flew away from its nest in an over-arching beech-tree with a startled cry. The breeze seemed to die out over the water with a low wail, but neither the bird nor the breeze could warn Daisy to beware of the handsome stranger.

She might have had a happy enough life of it if her path had never been crossed by this young man.

The instant his eyes had rested upon her standing within those arched gates, he had started violently back.

"The heiress!" he muttered under his dark, curling mustache. "Yes, of course that must be Miss Ruthven, the heiress to three millions," and he drew his breath hard as his quick eyes took in the first rapid glance every lineament of that pretty, dimpled, girlish face.

All in an instant his conversation with the landlord of the tavern at the village below occurred to him. One week before he had come in on the midnight train, and the name he had signed on the hotel register was, Harold St. John.

His handsome guest seemed nervous and ill at ease, the landlord might have noticed, but he did not; but he did notice the he inquired particularly about the arrival and departure of all trains that stopped at the cross-roads, which were two miles below, and if many strangers stopped off there generally.

As he paid liberally, the landlord was loath to lose so generous a guest.

"I'm afraid it will be a little dull just now," the landlord had replied apologetically; "but within the next fortnight the village will be busy enough. Colonel Ruthven and his wife have just returned to Briar Hall after a five years' absence, and a jolly party of young folks is invited there to meet the colonel's niece, Lillian Ruthven, who is expected on every train. A most fortunate girl, she is, sir; heiress to three millions of money, and she's young and pretty, too, they say."

Harold St. John had caught his breath sharply; he had been most anxious to get away on the first outgoing train; now he changed his mind suddenly, and during the week that followed he fairly haunted the vicinity of Briar Hall.

Quite unexpectedly, in one of his ramblings, he had chanced upon the lovely maiden coming out of the arched gate, and he jumped to the conclusion at once that this was Lillian Ruthven the heiress.

"I beg your pardon," he said. "I have been unfortunate enough to lose my way. Will you tell me which road I must take for Briarvale?"

"If you follow the river road, just the way you were going, you cannot miss it," she answered.

One glance of admiration, full of fire, full of passion, seemed to flash from the depths of his eyes to hers.

He saw the pretty, dimpled face grow crimson, and then he dared not trust himself to look again. But that one glance had sufficed to trouble the calm, still depths of Daisy's young heart.

The stranger was wise enough to know that another word would have been an impertinence. He bowed low and passed on, but he left the memory of his handsome face and dark eyes behind him.

The roses fell unheeded from Daisy's hand at the gate as she watched the tall form receding down the serpentine road.

"Such nice gentlemen as he will be at the lawn-fete," she murmured. "Oh, it was cruel of Colonel Ruthven's wife to invite Olive and Hetty and not ask me!"

She hurried down the green slope, and into her little boat again, a cry escaping her lips as she noticed how low the sun was dipping in the western horizon.

"It will be dark before I get home," she gasped—"yes, quite dark, and by the looks of those clouds there might be a storm."

Jack Frost, Artist.

One of the small wonders of the winter season is the abundant and beautiful tracery which Jack Frost has a habit of writing on the pane, usually overnight, in the hours of sleeping, when the fires burn low and the house has lost something of the cheery warmth of day. Everyone has seen and admired the mysterious fungus-like growth which is often the thing which greets him in his first look at the world of a biting winter morning perhaps without knowing that its formation, in all its multiform and delicate variations, is one of the most incomprehensible of phenomena. In Cosmos recently a writer gave some of the theories that have been advanced from time to time to explain it. The Literary Digest translates from the article as follows:—

"The least arrangements of these tiny interlacing ice-crystals furnish decorative designs of incontestable originality and of unequalled delicacy. The observer asks, not without surprise, how in these marvellous formations of ice one and the same design is often rigorously and mathematically reproduced in a certain space, while its character differs totally only a few inches away. There is in this fact alone a real mystery that no one can explain plausibly, at least at present.

"In one place appear very distinctly almost recognizable plants with long, thick leaves. Palms and ferns abound, forming mimic forests. By their side stretch out fine fringes bordering the angles of fantastic sheets. Further away seem to rise the serried trunks of a lofty grove in the midst of a carpet of verdure.

"Then the scene changes completely. On all sides appear the light feathers and plumes of birds. . . .

"What are the physical phenomena that control the formation of these tree-like frost pictures, so remarkable and so varied? Most of our scientists answer these questions by hypotheses, more or less valuable. Almost all give abundant explanations of the deposition of frost along the branches of trees. As to the causes that determine the appearance of such delicate and beautiful ornamentation of this same frost on the panes of our windows, most of them remain silent.

"They tell us that the most probable method of frost-formation is as follows: Every tiny droplet of water, if it is produced by condensation of vapor below the freezing-point, is necessarily in a state of 'superfusion.' In this condition when it meets a rough surface it is deposited thereon as a microscopic crystal of ice impregnated or covered with a thin layer of liquid water at the freezing-point.

"This latter, being in continual contact with air that is colder than itself, must finally freeze. As the motion of the air brings up new masses, the thickness of the frost increases.

"Other physicists, we are told, give a somewhat different explanation. According to them, when the vapor of water in the air is deposited as ice, without passing through the liquid state at all, it constitutes frost. That the vapor does not really pass through the liquid state is abundantly shown by the fact that frost has not the structure of frozen dew. It presents, on the contrary, a layer of spongy, opaque ice in which we can detect the prismatic crystals lying side by side. There are still other scientific men who explain the feathery frost formations on the branches of trees by the congelation of a thick mist that comes in contact with a body of lower temperature than the freezing-point or by the solidification of a fog in superfusion, determined by contact with a solid body. The French writer says further:

"We will leave the reader to take his choice of these opinions. So far as the deposit of frost on our window-panes is concerned, we must suppose that the infinite variety of design presented by the crystals is due to the nature of the glass. This substance is, in fact, a very bad and very irregular conductor of heat; it also offers a certain resistance to the physical action of crystallization. These causes are sufficient, when vapor is congealed on the surface, to bring about the formation of these designs, which are as varied as they are remarkable."

Not so Sick as Supposed.

Judging from an opinion expressed recently in The London Spectator, Turkey's sobriquet of the "Sick Man" is being maintained under false pretences. "A strong Sultan," says the writer, "could still place in the field an army of 600,000 of the bravest soldiers in the world, defend his coasts and ports with torpedo boats, and even in defeat inflict terrible blows upon his conqueror. It is true that the advent of a strong Sultan is most improbable, the race of Othman appearing at last to be worn out, but a Sultan weak as a Merovingian is quite probable, and a strong Mayor of the Palace or Grand Vizier would be even more dangerous, because replaceable. A ruler of Turkey who threw all caution to the winds, summoned every Osmanli to his standard, stopped all payments except for munitions of war, and fought as the Mahdi fought at Omdurman, would, to begin with, shatter all European alliances, might hold in check for three years any single European power, and might while being defeated cause an explosion such as Europe has not had to face since the Spahis threatened Vienna. The Sick Man will bequeath nothing, and the whole western world desires his heritage. The catastrophe may not come just yet, for the strange being who now occupies the throne of Turkey, and who will neither yield nor fight, seems irremovable; but it cannot be put off forever, and every blow such as the one M. Delcasse has just delivered brings us nearer to its occurrence. If history affords us any guidance, the Turk will die biting hard."

"I once won a case with one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems," says Congressman Brick of Indiana, who is a lawyer, "and so I stand for him. I was defending a man charged with stealing silk, and it looked so bad for him that I decided on an appeal to the jury. I did the best I could to win with the evidence; but I banked most on the fact that the defendant was a young man with a wife and child, and that it would go hard for all of them to have him go to the penitentiary for a term of years. My whole argument led up to the point where I closed with Riley's little poem, 'Back From a Two Years' Sentence.' When I finished, the jury was in tears, and even the Judge and the Attorney for the prosecution were affected. The jury took just one ballot, and returned a verdict of not guilty."—New York Tribune.

Might be Worse.

One day, Mackintosh, having vexed him by calling O'Grigly "a rascal," Parr immediately rejoined, "Yes, Jemie, he was a bad man, but he might have been worse; he was an Irishman, but he might have been a Scotchman; he was a priest, but he might have been a lawyer; he was a [illegible], but he might have been an apostate."

A Scene in Nassau.

The following delightful sketch of the outlook from a window in Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands, is a portion of a letter which a correspondent sends me:—

I am now going to try and make you envy me. I wonder if I can succeed. I am sitting at brother Percy's bedroom window, which commands a magnificent view of the harbor and of several small islands and a sweep of the blue, blue sea. In the foreground, between our house and the beach, which is about a quarter of a mile away, I get a view of hundreds of palm trees, banana trees and other foliage peculiar only to the tropics. I might go on for an hour describing the other objects that are included in this picture, but should still leave the picture in such a state that it could not be said to give the faintest idea of what box of paints, containing all the colors of the rainbow, and still I should fail. Why? Simply because the colors defy the artist in all his attempts at reproduction. Likewise the poet finds himself beggared for words in which to express the beauty of the scene. The foliage is of such rich and varied colors that we northerners cannot form the slightest conception of it; only they who have visited the tropics can realize what it is like. But now I have come to the climax of coloring, the harbor. Take in your hand a lovely piece of mother-of-pearl and trace in it the rich, fiery flashes of green and blue, yes, a lovely opal ring like mine would be better, and it is not the slightest exaggeration to say that they would faintly give you an idea of the colors of that harbor. It is simply magnificent—rich blues of all shades, light and dark greens, heliotrope shading to deep purples, strange to say all blending together, blaze out brilliantly. Tourists who have visited nearly every corner of the entire globe agree in saying they never saw anything to compare with it. The bottom of the water is of pure white coral, white as snow, and in 75 to 100 feet you can see the bottom quite clearly through the most beautiful crystal-like water. I think probably the snow-white bottom has a prismatic effect on the light passing through it, thus showing all these brilliant colors. However, I am going too much into detail, though if you could see it yourself you would scarcely blame me. Dotted here and there are sailing vessels, their sails reflecting the bright sunshine, scarcely moving on the quiet waters of the ocean. The sky is of a rich, deep blue, with a few fleecy clouds floating idly about. The sun is shining brightly, although not at all oppressive, as the temperature is only 74 degrees. The surface of the ocean is as quiet and smooth as glass, scarcely a ruffle disturbing its surface. I think, in a disjointed way, I have gone over most of the scene. Don't you envy me now? And now, dear, the dinner bell is ringing, and I will tell you all about the delicious oranges from 24 cents to 48 cents per hundred in my next letter.

Wireless Signalling.

While Marconi, with his wireless telegraphy, holds the field as the last nine days' wonder of science, Waldon Fawcett, in the current Harper's Magazine, shows that telephony is keeping almost equal pace with her sister invention in perfecting ways and methods. He writes:—

The very acme of achievement in the transmission of messages would seem to have been reached in the wireless telephone system, which has recently been developed by Professor A. Frederick Collins, an electrical engineer residing in Philadelphia. Spoken words are transmitted great distances through the ground without the use of a connecting wire, and in accordance with a plan totally different from that of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy.

The Collins system simply takes advantage of the fact that there are natural electrical currents in evidence slightly below the surface of the earth at any point that may be selected, and by this invention currents of this character are utilized to cause a flow of electricity between two instruments stationed above the surface of the earth. The only underground mechanism employed consists of small zinc-wire screens, which are buried in shallow holes, one at the sending station and the other at the receiving station. Above these are tripods supporting transmitting and receiving apparatus, such as is employed in ordinary telephony, a wire affording connection in each case with the buried screen. When the electricity from a storage battery is turned on, sounds of all kinds may be sent through the transmitter, and heard, in many instances, even more distinctly than were a regular overhead telephone employed.

The Collins invention in its simplest form is adapted to sending a message but one way—that is, it is not possible to utilize a receiver as a transmitter and reply to a message received, but the transmitter and receiver are each equipped with an annex for performing the opposite function, so that to all intents and purposes this new telephone is not different from the instrument already in use.

Of the improvements of the telephone in its uses at sea, Mr. Fawcett also adds:—

Unique methods of telephony are working wonders in the field of marine signalling, and when this phase of the new achievements has been fully developed it is believed that the danger of collisions and other disasters at sea will be very materially lessened. One of the most important of these systems of telephone signals for ships was invented by the late Dr. Gray. By this plan the water of a lake, ocean, or river is made to act as the medium for conveying sounds, as, for instance, the strokes of a bell tolled below the surface of the water. The sounds thus transmitted are heard distinctly at great distances by means of exceptionally sensitive telephonic receivers designed especially for such service. Inasmuch as any number of different signals may be arranged by the introduction of various combinations of strokes given in quick succession or at long intervals, it will be seen that the possibilities of the system for signalling purposes are virtually limitless. The practical application of this invention has already been carried so far that ships have been fitted with apparatus which causes gongs to ring automatically when the vessel comes "within hail" of one of these submerged bells.

For the Farmer.

Ducks Against Mites.

One of my neighbors told me a few years ago that ducks would rid our premises of mites. As we had old buildings infested with mites, which kept me overworked in summer in order to raise any poultry at all, I concluded to try the plan. Accordingly I bought 170 duck eggs, hatched 147 of them and raised 140 ducks, which I drove into the henhouse every night as soon as they were well feathered, and I never saw a mite that year. The following year I raised thirty-five and housed them the same way until they were ready to pick, and I did not have any mites until late in the fall. As soon as I discovered some I drove the ducks into the poultry house to sleep, and in a short time I could not find a mite.

I often caught some of the ducks in the morning to examine them, and found their beautiful white feathers covered with the little pests of all sizes and colors, which made me feel guilty of cruelty to animals at first, but when I looked deeper into the thick, creamy down not one of the insects could be seen near the body, and when they came up at night with no mites to be seen I was convinced that the down and feathers were too thick and oily for mites to penetrate, and that they were very soon bathed off the outer plumage.

I am so pleased with my success that I expect to try ducks again, for I found a few mites last summer, and it requires no more labor to raise them than to battle against the mites, and it certainly is much pleasanter and is profitable. I am not prepared to keep them through the winter, so I buy eggs of neighbors and get them off early enough to pick them twice and sell them in full feather the last of October. The first year I sold them for five times the amount I paid for both eggs and feed, but did not do so well the next year because the eggs were higher and did not hatch so well.—Mrs. Shannon Staten, in Poultry Farmer.

Clean Sleeping Places.

At this season of the year the swine need careful watching that their sleeping quarters are in good condition. It will not do to turn the herd to straw stacks, thinking that by so doing they will be comfortably and properly provided by a bed that will keep them warm and comfortable, with no bad results following.

The main feature in the hog bedding is to have it dry and free from manure or heating filth. The hog nest or sleeping apartment should be free from draughts or currents of air. There should be no air blowing in on the hogs while sleeping. This does not imply that the sleeping apartments should be close, low from roof to roof or poorly ventilated; on the contrary, they should be airy, plenty of space for circulation of fresh air. It is a bad plan to have hogs sleep in low, close quarters, where there is a tendency to create a steam or dampness that will settle over the hogs. A clean hog-house, with tight walls, moderate ventilation above to carry off the damp air is the basis of good sleeping accommodation for the swine.

The kind of bedding is a matter that may admit of some difference of opinion. The swine should not be left to the bare floor, without any warm, soft material for bedding. The hog, while indifferent in many ways about its comfort, enjoys a good, soft bed. The hog is also very sensitive to cold, and will always busy itself in carrying straw, leaves and soft materials to make a big, soft bed to sleep in, if left to its own inclinations. This manifestation of instinct should teach every hog-owner the need of supplying the hog with plenty of good, dry material for its nest.

Corn stalks are considered one of the very best bedding materials. Wheat straw is also good, but requires more frequent changing. Give the hogs good, clean bedding, change the bedding frequently and keep the hogs clean and comfortable through the cold season. It will pay. Hogs are worth too much money to handle carelessly in these times of high prices.—Nebraska Farmer.

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realize our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows, all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really knew the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 22.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

NOTE—The Times requests its readers to contribute items of news to its columns. Anything that is phoned or sent in writing to the office, of a nature suitable for publication, will be received and published.—Ed. Times.]

—We have to thank Mr. J. J. Turner for copies of English papers.

—The Board of Works met last night to discuss business.

—There is a great deal of sickness in town at present.

—A son of Erin was up before the magistrate yesterday, charged with being drunk on Monday. He pleaded guilty and was discharged.

—Mr. Wm. Cornell, of Renboro, has purchased a house in Peterborough and taken up his residence here. Previous to his departure for Renboro he was entertained by the members of the C. O.O.F., of which he was a member, and presented with a gift.

Grand Island Purchased

Messrs. McDougall, Brandon & Austin, of Fenelon Falls, have purchased Grand Island in Balsam Lake from the executors of the R. C. Smith estate. The island contains 1200 acres, 300 of which is totally cleared, the remainder being a good hardwood and hemlock bush. The land will all be cleared and the ground, which is a good quality soil, will be kept for a cattle ranch. It is estimated that the land has seven or eight thousand dollars' worth of timber on it, also a sawmill, barn and house. It is said the purchase money was in the neighborhood of $8,000.

GOLF CLUB BALL

Is Being Arranged to Take Place on Tuesday Evening April 1st

At a meeting of the Golf Club it was decided to give a grand ball in the Opera House on Tuesday, April 1st. A committee composed of Messrs. J. Crane, C. B. McAllister, H. C. Comphin, A. H. Stratton, D. Davidson, A. Turrill, A. A. Hollingshead, Dr. Greer and Dr. Neil, have been appointed to make all the arrangements. A slight change will be made this year. The refreshments will be served by a caterer. The prices of the tickets will be Ladies 60c, Gentlemen $1.50. It is the intention to engage the Glionna Orchestra, of Toronto, to furnish the music for dancing &c.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

St. John's Woman's Auxiliary Had a Most Successful Year

The annual meeting of the Womens' Auxiliary of St. John's church was held in the Guild Rooms on Monday afternoon. Mrs. Errett, president, occupied the chair.

The opening exercises were conducted by Rev. J. C. Davidson. The report of the Treasurer was taken up first. The receipts for the year amounted to $468.14, and from the Mission Board work $63.31 The report of the secretary was presented, and proved to be very satisfactory and interesting. A large amount of work had been done by the Auxiliary during the past year. The membership was now 62, which was a decrease from 1901. This fact was on account of people leaving the town. The number of leaflet subscribers was 66. In April last, a bale of goods was forwarded to the Indian hospital, Lytton, B.C. A number of articles in this bale were for sale, and the receipts to go toward the hospital fund. At the present time the ladies were sewing for a bale to be sent to Emmanuel College, Prince Albert, N. W. T., where there were a number of boys and girls aged from eight to eighteen years. In February, a high tea was held. A formal resolution had been passed in November, offering to assist the wardens and church officers in any efforts towards securing a rectory for the parish. This has been forwarded to the wardens with the suggestion that part of the Easter offering be used for that purpose.

The President made a short address, after which the election of officers took place, the result being as follows:

Hon. President—Mrs. Vernon.
President—Mrs. Burnell.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. J. C. Davidson.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Hammond.
3rd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Best.
Secretary—Mrs. John Manning.
Ass't Sec.—Miss English.
Treasurer—Miss Clark.
Sup't of Mission Band—Mrs. R. M. Dennistoun.
Assistants—Mrs. Stone, Miss Mearke, Mrs. Fessenden.

Refreshments were served, after which the meeting closed with devotional exercises.

GO AS YOU PLEASE RACE

Syracuse, N.Y., March 18.—When the gong sounds at 8 o'clock to-night a dozen of the foremost pedestrians in the United States will take to the track in Taylor's Hall and begin a forty-five hour "go as you please" race. The affair is under the auspices of the Courtland Pedestrian Club and judging from the interest manifested in the arrangements the attendance will be large.

GOOD FIGHT PROGRAM

Chicago, Ill., March 19.—The Wabash Club has arranged a good programme for its boxing show to-night. Frank Erne is scheduled to go against Gus Gardner, and a heavyweight bout will be furnished by Jack McCormick and Fred Russell. McCormick was seen here in several bouts two years ago. His most sensational performance was a one-round knock-out of "Kid" McCoy, while he lost point decisions to Joe Choynski and Gus Ruhlin.

GOLDEN BROWN

The Color Sought in Coffee

When a person has been shown that a change in food and drink can make and keep one well it is a thing not likely to be forgotten.

Coffee is a "killer" for many people, and, of course, when left off, the user will probably regain a degree of health without any outside help but when Postum Food Coffee is used the return to health is much more rapid, for Postum is a distinct and well defined health builder with a delicious coffee flavor and a beautiful deep brown color that changes to golden brown when cream is added.

A Chicago man, Peter G. Holst, at 315 Englewood Ave., writes, "Reading in the paper the other day something about Postum Cereal, it awoke in me a reminiscent vein.

About five years ago, when I was a miserable dyspeptic, I first heard of Postum Cereal Coffee, and put it to a careful test.

I had been afflicted for years with chronic dyspepsia and all the medicines I had tried were in vain. One by one I had to leave them off and was in despair as to what I should do for relief.

My first taste of Postum was about ten o'clock one morning. I did not dare to take cream with it, for I knew what the result would be with my stomach. That is, I thought I did. I have since learned that cream can be taken in Postum even by bad dyspeptics, but I had my first taste with only hot water in it and a little sugar. The second cup followed the first and a third followed the second. I took my departure munching some of the Postum as I was determined to investigate its effects thoroughly.

That day I had no dinner and experienced no distressing sensations, on the contrary felt as though my appetite had been appeased.

The next day I began to use Postum regularly, and before the first package had been entirely used I discovered the most encouraging symptoms. The dyspepsia and headaches which I had been subject to daily, entirely disappeared, also the distressing vomiting spells. The bowels improved steadily and regularly.

I ate cautiously but was sustained by the Postum Coffee. After the first package I tried it with milk, then with cream, without experiencing the least inconvenience. Of course I was delighted and the future looked bright. From that first experience up to date my health has been splendid. I have increased in weight from 129 to 187 pounds, and can digest anything I desire. I can say honestly and cheerfully that I would recommend Postum to anyone suffering the tortures of dyspepsia."

HOW UNCLE SAM HELPS GREAT BRITAIN

The Success Against the Boers has Been a Question of Horses

WHICH AMERICA HAS SUPPLIED

Now Over 250,000 Horses in South Africa How the British Supply the Boers

New York, March 18.—The World says, "If Great Britain really rendered us great service in the Spanish war, we are certainly paying our debt with usury in helping her to chase down the unfortunate Boers. It may be said without exaggeration that the British could not have made even the small headway they have but for American aid. This aid has been rendered unobtrusively, and in the true commercial spirit, but it has been effective and probably indispensable. It has been given without open violation of international law, and has provoked no serious protest from the Boer republics, though it is doubtful if we could give such important aid to one European power against another without getting into serious trouble.

Success of the war against the Boers has been almost altogether a question of horses. The British army was absolutely helpless until it was mounted, and its continued efficiency has depended upon a continual supply of remounts. The British wear out horses as fast as they expend ammunition, and they have been obliged to draw upon the whole world to meet their requirements. There are now nearly 250,000 animals in service in South Africa, and the war does not seem much nearer an end than it was two years ago. If in any way the supply of horses should be stopped, the Boer chance of regaining independence would be very bright. In that case they would play with Kitchener as they played with Buller and Methuen.

Now the best horses and mules the British have been able to get anywhere have come from the United States. They are more effective and have more endurance. Some time ago reports showed that over 70,000 American animals had been purchased. These are not only better than others, but the supply seems unfailing, while other horse breeding countries are being drained. It is easy to understand why individual Boer sympathizers are so distressed by the shipment of horses from the lower Mississippi and threaten to attack the "British camp" there. Without the material furnished from this camp the prosecution of the war in South Africa would be seriously hampered.

It may be considered that we are dealing impartially with the Boers and Britons after all, because it is probable that a large number of the horses we sell to the British Government finally get into possession of the Boers. They must have got some thousands of horses and mules in the two raids of last week, and these four-legged prisoners are not released. It is well understood that the British supply the Boers liberally with arms, ammunition and supplies. It appears that they are supplying them with horses as well.

Princes Visit a Bluff

New York, March 19.—In spite of the frown which general comment upon the voyage of Prince Henry brings down upon any paper there appears, says the Berlin correspondent of The Herald, to be a growing tendency to refer to it, and to ask what practical result it has accomplished.

The hip-hip-hoorahing has been done and the handshaking is over. The practical German is asking, "Well what are we going to get out of it?"

Agrarians storm away the harder. They say "Germany has done enough for America; now it is the turn of America to do something for Germany."

The sober Tagliche Rundschau breaks ground, and writes about Americans thinking Prince Henry was, to use the Yankee's favorite term, a "Democratic Prince." To this that paper replies:

"The American, it is well known, prides himself in a very remarkable degree on the fact that he does not allow himself to be bluffed by any one or at any time. As a member of a poker nation he bluffs naturally. But to-day it is an open secret that Prince Henry bluffed his friends and hosts in quite an extraordinary way."

The Rheinische Westphalische takes the view that Germany is making herself ridiculous in pursuing this sort of a "pic-nic policy," which does not come within the realm of seriousness.

RETURN VISIT OF

PROF. O'BRIEN

Acknowledged by most intelligent and prominent people. His methods were approved of by judge and jury in the General Session, March 14th, 1901, which fact proves that scientific palmistry as practised by him has no connection with the vulgar fortune telling under the heading of astrology, tea cup tossing, card cutting, and the gipsies palm reading, who do not know the first principle of the theory.

Professor O'Brien's reputation is far and wide. People from every part of the world consult him. His patrons rank among judges M.P.'s, lawyers, clergymen of every denomination, intelligent priests doctors, bankers, students, mechanics, etc., etc.

Those who never had their head or hand delineated, should call at once on Prof. O'Brien. His delineations are graphic and instructive, and he always makes it a point to give the young people good and sound advice. Don't forget there is only one Prof. O'Brien.

In phrenology he is at the head of his profession, in palmistry he has no equal. Call for circular and see what the Catholic Register, News, Mail and Empire Globe, etc., all the leading Toronto papers say.

During his first visit in Peterborough [illegible] people were examined by him, and still they come as fast as ever, for they all know what Prof. O'Brien's abilities are.

Those wishing to consult him please come early and avoid disappointments as Prof. O'Brien can only remain in Peterborough a few days longer. A photo read free to patrons. Private office at [illegible] Hunter st. terrace. Hours 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Ailing Women in Springtime Need the Strengthening and Nourishing Virtues of Paine's Celery Compound

A Case Where The Great Medicine Bestowed Vigor and Health After Months of Weakness and Suffering

Observing and intelligent women who have used Paine's Celery Compound have noted well the fact that as a spring medicine it quickly regulates the bowels, clears the whites of the eyes of that common jaundiced look and gives a bloom of health to the face that it never possessed before. Another important proof of the invigorating power of Paine's Celery Compound, is its effect on the pulse, which becomes full, firm and regular. Weak, exhausted, nervous, irritable and worried women find Paine's Celery Compound counteracts the exhausting strain of work and worry by its strong inducement to the delicate tissues to take more nourishment; it induces the nerves and brain to feed themselves more liberally, and it enriches the blood and regulates its flow. Mrs. A. R. Parsons, Sutton, P.Q., writes thus:

"Some time ago I had grip, which left me so lame and weak that for six months I could not get up without help. I told my husband that nothing else but Paine's Celery Compound could help me, after other medicines and the doctors had failed. After taking several bottles of Paine's Celery Compound I feel that I am cured. I can now walk and go up and down stairs with ease, and do all my housework. Under the blessing of God and your Paine's Celery Compound I am now well."

GENERAL FRENCH'S DRIVE NOW IN FULL SWING.

Cape Colony Expected to be Free of Boers in Less Than a Month

THE BOER SUCCESSES ARE NOW UNIMPORTANT.

Delarey's Recent Captures Too Late to Have any Effect—The Situation Never So Bright from a British Point of View

London, March 20.—General French is now driving the commandoes to the westward in the Cape Colony. The blockhouse system has been extended to Beaufort West, and a few weeks will probably see Cape Colony cleared of the invaders. Although it is clear that each district must be laboriously and systematically clear, which will necessarily involve much time, yet the rate of progress promises to be much more rapid than might have been supposed.

The War Office announces that the various British columns in South Africa have accounted for 302 Boers since March 10, of whom 11 were killed and 155 made prisoners, and 136 surrendered.

Commandant Christian De Wet was recently at Fary's Drift, on the Vaal River, to the west of the line to Johannesburg.

Gen. Bruce Hamilton reports that he surprised Emmet's commando and captured Emmet (Cherry Emmet). His sister is the wife of Commander-in-Chief Louis Botha. They are descendants of the Irish leader, Robert Emmet.

Commandant Dubren has been captured, and Commandant Celliers, who unmasked a couple of 15-pounders and turned them on the British during a critical part of the fight between Methuen and Delarey, is reported wounded.

In the House of Commons to-day Secretary of War Brodrick stated that Field-Marshal Lord Wolseley had gone to South Africa entirely as a private citizen, and that he had made no communication to the War Office as to his intentions.

SITUATION NEVER BETTER.

London, March 20. — The correspondent of the Daily Mail wires: — "Although I am unable to give, for obvious reasons, exact details regarding the general operations of the troops in the field, I am glad to say that the situation is now more hopeful than it ever was before.

"With a thoroughness and zeal which are most admirable, the columns operating north-east of the Orange River are systematically clearing the country of some of the strongest centres of Boer resistance.

"Such operations, however, require an enormous number of troops, and it is a tribute to Lord Kitchener's strength that in spite of General Delarey's recent successes, the columns operating against General De Wet have not been weakened by a single man.

"It must be remembered that in conducting a war within so vast an area the number of troops has never been sufficient, a fact which few people at home realize. An army of a million men would not be excessive. Nor must the fact be lost sight of that our recent successes in Orange Colony, while owing much to the dash, zeal, and wisdom of the driving columns, are the result of long, hard, and patient work, which has now been strikingly rewarded. The capture of guns by General Delarey is unimportant at this stage of the war. The Boers seldom find use for captured guns — witness General De Wet's captures at Zwefontein, General Botha's at Brakenlaagte, and the seizure near the Bloemfontein water works last September. A battery of guns would be less useful to the Boer than a few thousand round of ammunition.

"The heavy rains which have recently fallen indicate an early and severe winter, which is always a factor, and local farmers say that the veldt fires, which will destroy the only available Boer forage, must, owing to the present condition of the veldt, be severe."

FEARS PRO-BOER ASSAULT

New Orleans, March 20.— The British Consul here, fearing an attack from the pro-Boer element, has applied to the authorities for police protection.

SPAIN'S NEW CABINET

Madrid, March 20.— The new Cabinet formed by Senor Sagasta includes the Duke of Almodovar del Rio, General Weyler, the Duke of Veragua and Count de Romanones, who were, respectively, Ministers of Foreign Affairs, War, Marine, and Public Instruction in the last Ministry. The new members are Senor Canalejas, Minister of Agriculture; Senor Moret, Minister of the Interior; Senor Rodriganez, Minister of Finance, and Senor Montilla, Minister of Justice.

QUEEN EXPRESSING HER SYMPATHY

Cape Town, March 20. — Queen Alexandra has telegraphed to Mr. Cecil Rhodes expressing her sympathy for him in his illness. Her despatch concludes:— "I pray that God will restore your health."

King Edward, Lord Rosebery, and Gen. Kitchener, as well as many others, have also sent telegrams of sympathy.

Mr. Rhodes rallied slightly this evening. He takes nourishment well. He slept fairly during the day, and was rather better at eleven o'clock.

ARTILLERYMEN REBEL

London, March 20.— Something in the nature of a mutiny occurred yesterday in N Battery of the Royal Horse Artillery, at Aldershot. The greater part of the harness and saddlery was cut up and destroyed. A number of arrests were made. The trouble is alleged to have been due to a grievance against the non-commissioned officers of the battery.

Paine's Celery Compound Has the Approval of the Best Physicians

AS A SPRING MEDICINE IT HAS NO EQUAL

IT CURES THE MOST DESPERATE CASES AFTER FAILURES WITH OTHER REMEDIES

The indorsation of Paine's Celery Compound by men high in the medical profession is not a hasty conclusion. Medical approval was only announced after severe tests and proofs of remarkable cures. Paine's Celery Compound has always succeeded in the work of life saving after other medicines and prescriptions failed; it has cured diseases and troubles of long standing, and faithfully carried out all that it claimed to do. Medical evidence freely given by unbiased and honest physicians is sufficient to place Paine's Celery Compound far ahead of all other medicines as an unfailing cure for nervousness, prostration, mental exhaustion, sleeplessness, rheumatism, neuralgia, headache, dyspepsia, and all troubles arising from a sluggish and impure condition of the blood.

As a spring medicine, Paine's Celery Compound has no worthy competitor. The old "cures" one by one have dropped by the way, while Paine's Celery Compound has continued to gain in popularity, so that its present sales exceed all combined sales of other medicines.

If you are despondent, fretful, without appetite, bothered with kidney or liver troubles, we honestly urge the use of Paine's Celery Compound which is fully indorsed by America's best physicians.

Weather Notes

Probs. To-day,—Fair and turning milder.

PRINCE OF WALES OFFICIATES

The Formal Opening of the Physical Laboratory by the Prince

London, March 19.—In the presence of a large and representative gathering of scientific men, the Prince of Wales to-day performed the ceremony of opening the buildings of the National Physical Laboratory at Bushy House, Hampton Court. In an able and interesting address, his Royal Highness spoke of the high standing of the institution and of the world-wide importance of its scientific research.

The National Physical Laboratory, vested in the control of the Royal Society, and of which Lord Rayleigh is chairman, was established for the purpose of standardizing and verifying scientific instruments, for testing materials, and for carrying out chemical and physical investigations of practical value, the scheme of work being in a great measure based upon that adopted by the famous Physikalisch-Technische Reichsanstalt, at Charlottenburg.

MUTUAL LIFE OF CANADA

A Splendid Report Submitted at the Thirty-second Annual Meeting

We call the attention of our readers to the annual report of the Mutual Life of Canada, which appears in to-day's issue. The result of the year's operations reveals an excellent state of affairs. It is safe to say that none of our most progressive institutions have made greater strides than the Mutual Life, a purely Canadian institution. In the year 1900 the total insurance written in Canada was $68,000,000, of which Canadian companies secured $38,000,000 and foreign companies $30,000,000. It is gratifying therefore, to find that Canadians are patronizing the home companies more largely, with the result that the growing wealth of our people remains here and helps to build up our own country.

The Mutual Life is, as its name implies, a purely mutual company, having no shareholders. It is now in its thirty-third year, thus having the advantage to be gained by long experience and stability through its large and well-invested funds. The insurance written last year was $4,071,869, all of which, except a trifling amount, was purely Canadian business, being exceeded by but one other company. The insurance in force now reaches the large sum of $31,718,031, while the assets are $5,757,822. The surplus over all liabilities, on the company's standard, is $379,970, and on the Government standard $605,470. A point worthy of special notice is the fact that the interest income exceeded the death claims last year by $67,307, and in the past five years by $185,609.

The large amount paid to policy-holders, $193,632, including $305,021 paid to living policy-holders for profits, endowments, etc., is perhaps the best proof that this is essentially a policyholders' company. Its progress can be most readily seen by the following items of gain over the previous year:—

Insurance in force	$2,190,605
Assets	675,897
Income	165,741
Surplus	69,620

The President, Mr. Robert Melvin, in pointing out these features, dwelt especially upon the fact that, notwithstanding the large transactions of the year, the expenses were $23,951 less than in 1900, being only 16 per cent. of the total income. This is the lowest expense ratio of all the companies doing business in Canada, and shows that, while the company made rapid and substantial progress, its affairs are prudently and economically administered.

The company is ably represented in Peterborough district by Mr. W. Kelsey Hall, No. 370 George street, who will be pleased to afford information to intending insurers.

PASTEURIZING MACHINE

A Machine from Denmark to Revolutionize Butter Making

St. Paul. Minn., March 20.—As a result of experiments recently conducted at the State Agricultural School, the pasteurizing machine recently imported from Denmark is pronounced a great success. The pasteurizer was brought to test in a broad and comprehensive way the efficiency of pasteurized cream in the manufacture of butter, both as to its flavor and its keeping qualities. Before the tests are completed practical experiments will be made in leading creameries of Minnesota, Iowa and the Dakotas. A close record will be kept of the work at each place, and when the records are completed, a comparison will be made of pasteurized cream, and that made in the ordinary way.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN'S BIRTHDAY

The Man Who Twice Ran for President now 42 Years Old

Lincoln, Neb., March 19.—William J. Bryan was the recipient of numerous congratulatory messages to-day, the occasion being the forty-second anniversary of his birth. The congratulations came from admirers in nearly every state and territory.

Malt Breakfast Food Comforts and Soothes the Weak Stomach

Malt Breakfast Food is always tolerated and retained by the weakest stomachs. Invalids and convalescents live on it after rejecting all other forms of food. The weak and delicate stomach easily assimilates it, as by the action of the Malt it is partially predigested, and ready to be taken up by the natural process of absorption.

Invalids and weak people are pleased to note that after a few meals of Malt Breakfast Food every function of the system is energized and invigorated. This great health food is unequalled to-day as a builder and strengthener for the weak and rundown. Medical men are daily prescribing Malt Breakfast Food for invalids and convalescents. Buy a package from your grocer and try it.

THE SESSION'S CLOSING HOURS

The session in Toronto—the last before election day—has brought out a clear distinction between the two parties. Whitney has no sympathy whatever with prohibition; Ross and his men in the last days of the session came down flat for it. No one man or two men of that party or cabinet can forestall or prevent the ultimate result. The Liberals have given a straight pledge to bring in and enforce prohibition if it is carried at the polls, and they will do it. We all know now what we have to expect. There is one feature of the contest which will develop later on; we refer to the going to the polls in November of the life-long professionals in the temperance line, who would gladly sacrifice temperance to party if they were able. If they do not vote they will be in an unpleasant situation, and if they do they must for once vote according to their professions. It is all like a dream to us. We find it hard to recognise some of our old friends in their new prohibition clothes. They do not seem to fit. But they will do to masquerade in—anything usually does for carnival purposes. Will the local liquor men stand by, as of work; or are they, too, in a perplexed condition? Judging by appearances, Hon. Mr. Stratton will get the temperance vote, and if, as we believe, the government goes in with a majority founded on "teetotal votes," it will naturally cling to the friends who put them in power, since what these friends did once they will be able to do again, and Power is the chief end of the politician, whiskey or no whiskey.

General - Sports.

The Peterborough ladies' hockey team journeyed to Lindsay yesterday to play a game with the young ladies of that town. A large crowd attended the match, and saw the Peterborough ladies defeat the home team by a score of 17 goals to 1. The success of the local team is marvellous, but what else can be expected, when of late, our sporting organizations have landed every championship they went out after.

THE RING.

New York, March 20.—The postponed bout between Johnny Burns of this city, and "Billy" Ryan, of Syracuse, is slated to come off to-night before the National Athletic club at New London, Conn. The two have signed to go 20 rounds at 126 pounds.

Items of Interest

London, March 20.—It will be possible to "ring-up Brussels" and to "speak with Antwerp" about two months hence.

The telephonic cable which is to make this possible is to be delivered by the cable-makers in a few days, and the authorities at the General Post Office, who are working in conjunction with the Belgian Government hope to lay it in about six weeks, if the weather is not too rough.

The cable, which will be the longest telephone cable in existence, will run from St. Margaret's Bay, near Dover, to La Panne, a point near Ostend, a distance of fifty-six miles.

The promoters believe that when the cable is completed it will be as easy for a person in London to converse with a friend or business acquaintance in Brussels or Antwerp as it now is to talk with a correspondent in Paris.

Except on rare occasions, when there is heavy weather in the Channel or some other cause of defect, persons, talking over the wire between London and Paris can hear one another as distinctly as if they were in one room together, and the authorities state that there is no reason why it should not be the same in the case of Antwerp and Brussels.

Telephone experts say that many other parts of the Continent could easily be linked to London by telephone, but the Post Office authorities prefer to wait until the Brussels and Antwerp scheme is an accomplished fact before discussing further openings.

BOER ESCAPED IN A BOX

London, March 20.— A despatch from St. Helena says,—"The prisoner of war—Commandant Smorenbery—who escaped in a box, and was put ashore by the steamer at Ascension, was brought back to the island by the flagship Gibraltar, and was lodged in the civil goal. A military court of inquiry, lasting two days, at which the prisoner was present and heard all the evidence given, was held into the matter, but nothing definite is known of the result, as everything is kept strictly private and the prisoner returned to Dead wood Camp. Any way, it has leaked out that he was released by the court because, although as an officer he had parole on certain days of the week, he was not on parole when he attempted to escape, but got into the box inside of the camp, and was sent away."

ENGINEERS DEVISING PLANS

London, March 20.—British engineers are busy devising plans to defeat foreign competition, especially American, and much is expected from the deliberations of the Engineering Standards Committee, which commenced its sitting yesterday at the Institution of Civil Engineers. The conference was attended by many of the leading consulting engineers locomotive manufacturers, and representatives of the Indian and Colonial Governments, and the chief points under consideration were (1) the desirability of the standardisation of locomotives; and (2) granted that, should the standardisation be of general design or only of component parts? The practicability of defining the quantity of the materials used in locomotive construction was also discussed.

DEFENCE OF THE COAST.

London, March 20.—A new branch of home defence will shortly be opened for the volunteers of the country by the formation of a new Special Service Volunteer Corps for Coast Defence. The corps will probably be formed in the first instance from men of the Volunteer, Engineer, and Infantry corps, and their duties will be to man the defences of the home ports, especially with a view to the repelling of torpedo-boat attacks. They will be taught the construction of booms and how to deal with submarine mines Brennan torpedoes and other means of defence of shipping and harbors By these orders the present military districts will be merged in six army corps commands, but for administrative purposes in peace time will be retained as subdivisions of their respective army corps.

Berlin, March 19. — The crusade against the Spiritists has begun. Frau Rothe, her impresario, a certain Jentsch, and two other persons, all leading lights in Berlin Spiritist circles, have been arrested on the charge of deception at a seance yesterday. Two policemen managed to smuggle themselves into the meeting at which Frau Rothe was announced to communicate with the spirit world. After several experiments, during which Frau Rothe communicated several ridiculous messages from departed persons, white narcissus and other flowers began to rain on those present. This was the moment chosen by the police for laying sacrilegious hands on Frau Rothe. On her person were found flowers, oranges, apples, and an ingenious mechanism. There was an excited scene, but Rothe and her fellow-conspirators had to proceed to the police offices. The police evidently mean to proceed to extremities against these people. It is expected that a raid will be shortly made on Christian Scientists.

London, March 19.—The death is announced of the oldest peer of the realm, the Earl of Perth and Melfort. He was born on May 6, 1807, and would therefore in two months' time have celebrated his 95th birthday. He had lived in five reigns, and for many years had been engaged in litigation, without success, to recover the old family estates. He was educated in France and Scotland, and served in the 93rd Sutherland Highlanders, of which he was captain at the early age of eighteen.

TWO LARGE DEPUTATIONS

Waited on the Committee of the Whole Council Last Night

The Council met in Committee of the Whole Council last night, and received two very large deputations, one from the Retail Merchants' Association, and the other from the Federation of Labor.

The first deputation to interview the committee was that of the Merchants Association, which was composed of about twenty merchants, representing the different lines of business. The speakers were Messrs. Robt. Fair, D. W. Dumble and A. W. Cressman. The object of the deputation was to ask the council to alter the hour the market would be open to the merchants. At the present time, the merchants are not allowed to go on the market and buy produce for their stores until after 11 o'clock. This leaves the hour for the market to be over until a time when many of the clerks have gone home to lunch. At this hour the stores are generally crowded with shoppers, and business is very congested. The association asked that the hour be changed to 10 o'clock, claiming this would allow the market to be over earlier, and allow the shoppers to get the rush of their business over before lunch hour. In corresponding with other towns in Ontario, Mr. Cressman stated that he found that the markets were opened much earlier than here. In some cases it was as early as 8.30 or 9 o'clock, and in very few cases later than 9.30.

After fully considering the arguments put forth, the Council in Committee decided to grant the request of the deputation, and as a result, merchants will be allowed to go on market and purchase whatever they wish after ten o'clock.

LABOR DELEGATION.

A large delegation of labor men waited on the committee in support of the communication sent to the council by the Labor Union, relating to the scale of wages they would ask for laborers employed by the town. Messrs. Wm. Henry, Geo. Bull, and other prominent labor men spoke in support of the scale asked. The council listened to the arguments, and at times different members asked questions which were answered by the speakers. It is not likely that much opposition will be raised to the demands, as the members of the council fully realize that it is almost impossible to secure non-union labor at the present time, owing to the popularity and rapid growth of the union. The matter will receive the careful consideration of the council, and the result will be made known at the next meeting of the council

BOER LOSSES OVER 300 IN ATTACK ON METHUEN

Enemy's First Attack Made in a Storm of Bullet and Shell--Glad to be Captured

DECLARES HIS LIFE IN DANGER IN NEW ORLEANS

George Van Sittart Asks for Protection Against Designing Pro-Boers Who are Hovering About His Premises Day and Night

London, Wednesday, March 19.— The Standard's Pretoria correspondent, supplementing his despatch of yesterday, again testifies to the courage of the Boers who routed Gen. Methuen's column. He says that their first charge was made in open face of a storm of bullets and shell, which hardly caused a single falter in their rapid advance. The best disciplined troops could have done nothing better. He adds that General Delarey allowed General Methuen to keep all his papers.

The losses of the Boers were very heavy. Only 11 dead were seen near the British lines, but it has transpired from a Boer source that they lost 300 killed or wounded.

GLAD TO BE CAPTURED

London, March 20.— A despatch from Harrismith, Orange Colony, says:— The 560 Boers who surrendered at the end of the great drive belonged to Meyer's commando, and were mostly Transvaalers who had been driven south from the neighborhood of Heidelberg.

What was most noticeable about the prisoners was the cheerfulness, almost the gaiety, of the rank and file. Only some of the leaders appeared sad and depressed.

A NOTED CAPTURE.

London, March 19.—Cooper, the chief telegraphist of General Botha, who was recently reported captured, was one of the most dangerous men in the field on the Boer side. His specialty was "wire-tapping." In the last edition of the Transvaal official almanac he was described as "Under-Director" of the Telegraph Department.

DECLARES LIFE IN DANGER

New Orleans, La., March 20 George Van Sittart, British Consul at New Orleans, declares his life and property are in danger from the Boers and Boer sympathizers in the city, and has appealed to the Mayor and police for protection. He says anonymous letters have grown much more numerous and threatening of late, and that dangerous and suspicious men constantly stand around his consular office, as well as his house, contemplating, he believes, an attack on him. He asked, therefore, that a police force be stationed at both places. Chief of Police Journee promised to investigate and if there are any good grounds for Mr. Van Sittart's fear the request for protection will be granted. Police protection has been recently granted the British mule stations here, at the request of Stave Hay.

He is a Cape Colonist by birth and an Englishman by blood, but he became a naturalized burgher many years ago on joining the Transvaal service, and speedily obtained promotion. Violently anti-British in sentiment, he was one of the first officials to leave for the front. Surrendered burghers brought into Pretoria state that Cooper was regarded by Gen. Delarey as one of the most useful men in the field, and the success of many of this general's achievements is to be attributed in great measure to his skill and daring.

London, March 20.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that King Edward may be congratulated on his decision not to visit France. The parties opposing the Government are in paroxysms of mad ambition to win in the approaching general election and are ready to do anything to embarrass the Government. The situation is the same as when the King of Spain was insulted in 1883, King Edward is wise to avoid any chance of a disagreeable incident.

GENERAL GALLIENI AND HIS LINE

London, March 20.—A despatch to The Times says that General Gallieni is actively pushing his railroad toward the east coast of Madagascar. The locomotives, carriages, and rails have been landed at Tamatave.

FRENCH MONKS WERE FINED.

London, March 20.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that at Montbrison two fathers of the Hermitage community, which did not apply for authorization under the law of associations, were fined seventy-five francs each. The community has been dissolved.

BRITISH OFFICERS BEGUILED BY A FAIR SPY SENT BY BOERS BEFORE BATTLE

Military Paper in London Calls for an Inquiry--Enemy Knew the Plans of the British--A Straight Charge Made

A story reaches us as to the real reason for General Sir Redvers Buller's repulse at Colenso that, if it did not come from a usually well-informed source, and was absolutely vouched for in every particular by our informant, we should hesitate to publish. As it is, we give it under all reserve, neither accepting it nor rejecting it, in the hope that something authoritative may be given in reply which shall either disprove its correctness, as we hope and trust, or else place its correctness beyond the possibility of doubt.

A CHARMING LADY.

It is stated by our informant that a week or two prior to General Buller's ill-fated attempt to force a passage of the Colenso, and so leave the way clear for a speedy relief of the gallant but sorely-tried garrison of Ladysmith, a lady—not exactly young, but undeniably charming in person and manner, well educated, and accustomed to moving in the highest society—arrived in the British headquarter camp, where she proceeded to install herself, and introduce her self to the higher-placed officers from the General commanding downwards. Her name she gave as Mrs.—— but where she came from and what her business was she did not state, nor—astonishing as it may sound — did it dawn on anyone to ask her. Being practically the only representative of the fair sex in the camp, with the exception of a few wives of some of the officers, she was made heartily welcome, and she soon ingratiated herself among the officers. She was a fearless rider, and evidently possessed an intimate knowledge of the surrounding country. Incidentally she was able to give the Intelligence Department much information, on which they were not slow to act.

A SOCIAL LIONESS.

To say that this fascinating lady became a universal favorite is to put the case very mildly. Morning, noon, and night she was riding or walking with members of the Headquarters Staff, while invitations to luncheon, tea, and dinner were literally showered upon her. Things went on in this fashion until active preparations in the camp told that the general move forward to assault the Boer position was at length beginning. Then, one fine morning, Mrs. —— was missing: she had vanished as mysteriously as she had come, taking with her the amount of information which the too-trusting British officers had imparted to her, with the result that when General Buller reached the banks of the river he found that his every move was known to the enemy, who were waiting for him at every part selected for attack. Information gained some time after Lord Roberts had entered Pretoria shows that Mrs. — — was seen conversing with the leaders the night before Colenso, and on the morning of the battle. Incidentally it has been found out that she was one of the best trusted and most skilful spies in the service of the Transvaal. Certain it is that she completely deceived the members of General Buller's staff, and wormed out of them all they knew of their leaders' plans.

Such is the story as it reaches us. As we have said, we cannot bring ourselves to believe that British officers could so far forget their duty to the army and their country as to babble secrets to an unknown visitor to the camp, but certainly the matter ought to be cleared up one way or the other. We have been able from independent sources to confirm the above narrative, so far as the presence of a mysterious lady of undeniable charms in the British camp is concerned.

FROM A STRONG SOURCE.

The statement we are enabled to publish, however, is so circumstantial, that it cannot be lightly passed over, and the fullest enquiry into the affair should at once be made. At present the reputation of every officer who was with General Buller in the British camp lies under a stain, and in their interest alone the story should be either authoritatively denied or confirmed. For ourselves, our position is that of suspended judgment. That there was at times lamentable slackness among the Headquarters staff of the Natal army has long been known, and, indeed, has been more or less common knowledge. Several unpleasant stories of staff officers idling away their time tea-drinking and card playing when the situation demanded that they should be in the field have reached us, and we fear that in some quarters we have incurred some amount of disfavor by refusing to publish these.

Things are altogether different in the present case, however. Here the writer of the information not only volunteered to sign his account, but gave us such a wealth of detail and corroborative evidence that we did not feel any longer justified in withholding the story from publication. Our informant, who, by the way, bears a very well-known name both in and out the service, is even prepared, if challenged, to produce the names of the staff officers eagerly in the company of this alluring spy from the Boer lines.

BIG SHIP'S TRIAL TRIP

Largest Vessel Ever Built in America to Sail To-Day

Newport News, Va., March 20.—This is the date set for the trial trip of the mammoth steamship Korea, recently completed by the Newport News shipbuilding company. The Korea was built for the Pacific Mail Line and, with the single exception of the American Line's steamship Kroonland, launched a few weeks ago at Cramps, it is the largest vessel ever built in America.

FOOD CURE

The True Way to Get Well

The tales told of how food will make people well are nearly always interesting. A young lady in Cleveland, O., says: "I had an attack of nervous prostration and finally had to give up and go to bed. Did not know what was the matter with me. My physician told me that I should take a trip, and a favorite auntie, who was at that time a visitor at my home, urged me to return with her. The doctor said I might get out of bed in a few days, and so, although I was still very weak, I made the journey, which was a short one, to Cleveland.

There I gave out again and had neuralgia badly in addition to my other nervous troubles. While in this condition I was urged to change my food and try Grape-Nuts. I had tried Grape-Nuts at home, but did not like them because I did not use them right, having put hot water on them, but under the advice of a friend I started in on Grape-Nuts and cream or very rich milk. That was a different story and I enjoyed the food greatly.

In a few days I began to get strong and lost the desire to lie down. I forgot to tell you that I had been suffering also from dyspepsia. This gradually left when I had Grape-Nuts Food for breakfast and supper.

Shortly after, I began to put on flesh and went up from 115 pounds to 120 1-2 in about six weeks. When I returned home all my friends remarked on my improved appearance, and the vigor and strength I had regained paid me well for my food experiment.

In addition to strength of body I noticed a remarkable improvement in my mental strength. It was a pleasure to me to read and think and great big worries that would have put me to bed in my former condition slipped off as easily without oppressing me at all. The disaster to Lord Methuen's force is a very unfortunate affair, but it will have no more effect on the ultimate result in South Africa than a bad railway accident would have.

It begins to look as if the municipalities had some rights the Bell Telephone monopoly is bound to respect.

• • • •

In connection with municipal telephone systems, which are being established at Tunbridge Wells, Rushden, Cardiff, Aberdeen, Wellingboro and many other cities and towns in Great Britain the Government has a regulation that when the number of local subscribers reaches half the number of those of the National Telephone Company the latter shall be obliged to let the municipal company use its long-distance lines. This provision, or one similar to it, might with advantage be incorporated in the new government bill in Canada, provided there is no danger of making the bill "too good to pass parliament."

Items of Interest

Compton, March 18.—Some days since there appeared from this place a fictitious news item in the city papers stating that a suicide club had been organized in the Tar Ridge neighborhood of this county, and that W. P. Pelfrey, of this place, was the president of the club, and as a result Pelfrey has received a warm letter from Miss Claudia Beam, of Nashville, Tenn., requesting him to abandon the presidency of the club and go to Tennessee to get a wife if he was unable to find a Kentucky belle to suit him.

Pelfrey is well known here. He is a single man, of middle age, and is a carpenter by trade. When seen by The Evening Post correspondent he said he had written Miss Beam the following letter as a response:—

"Dear Miss Beam,—Your letter advising me to abandon the presidency of the Suicide Club and go to Tennessee to get a wife has been received. I am convinced that your advice is very timely, and every impulse of my nature demands that I now ask you to fix a date when you and I may be united in the holy bonds of matrimony. You are the very girl I am after, and do please fix a time not far distant when our hearts may beat as one."

Pelfrey says if he gets a favorable answer he stands able, ready and willing to carry the proposition into immediate effect.

CAPTURED THE TOWN

Port of Spain, Trinidad, March 18. — A force of Venezuelan insurgents, supported by the revolutionary steamer Bolivar (also referred to as the Libertador), captured the town of Juan Griego, on the island of Margarita, yesterday morning, and afterwards moved on the town of Asuncion, capital of the island, which forms the State of Nueva Esparta. The Venezuelan Government troops were defeated, and there was every indication that the insurgents would soon be masters of the whole island.

A clause in the new School Act provides that in cases where pupils attend high schools in adjacent counties the counties must pay for their maintenance to the boards of the schools which such pupils attend. Another provision is to the effect that County Councils may make additional grants for the maintenance of one school, without making the same to all others in the county, the object being to aid weak schools. It was also provided that a clause should be added to the act providing that "towns separate from counties must contribute for the maintenance of high schools within the county."

Information For the Farmer.

Fifty Fowls Enough.

On nearly all farms, except where special attention is given to poultry culture, I would say, keep fifty fowls of one variety, and no more. See that these are good ones, and try each year to improve on them by bringing in some fresh blood from a good strain, and by keeping over only the best of what you have raised yourself. After following this plan for a few years, I am sure you will not return to the old way of over-stocking the place with scrub fowls. The same careful attention should be given to the feeding and care of the poultry as to other stock on the farm, and to insure such attention and make this branch a success, some one of the family should take the matter in hand and see to it that the poultry-house is kept clean, the hens fed regularly, and as far as possible all the waste of the family table, the dairy and the field is turned into eggs and meat.—Poultry Monthly.

Do Poultry Spread Diphtheria?

Do poultry spread diphtheria? is a question which has been raised in one of the Provincial papers, says The Sanitary Record. The possibility of infection from this source, when the filthy conditions under which fowls are often kept are considered, is by no means remote. As every poultry-keeper knows, fowls are peculiarly subject to a disease which is analogous to diphtheria in man, known as diphtheritic croup or "canker." This is produced by filthy surroundings, and is so infectious that, once it gets thoroughly hold of a pen of birds, it kills them off in scores, and there is the utmost difficulty in stamping it out. Children, as we know, are particularly fond of playing in the vicinity of poultry runs, and it is to be feared that poultry-keepers are not as careful as they might be in isolating birds that are sick. It has been suggested that fowl-runs should be placed under sanitary control, and that when disease breaks out the authorities should be notified; but the necessity for going as far as this might, we think, be obviated if the poultry papers would only impress upon their readers the necessity for observing better sanitary conditions and isolation in all cases of sickness.

Breeds Which do not Make Headway

There are a few most excellent breeds which never seem to make any headway in this country, for the simple reason that their good qualities, sometimes even their very name, are unknown to the great majority of poultry-breeders; and that they are, and generally have been, in the hands of only a few breeders in this country. A notable example of this kind is the Creve Coeur. Now, there is nothing really against the Creve at all. At one time it was supposed to be a soft fowl, but as a breed this was not correct. It, indeed, possesses sufficient hardness to lay very well in winter, and any breed which can number this among its characteristics is not entitled to be called soft. As a matter of fact, Creves are very good layers, and they produce extra large eggs, too, quite as large as any that may be generally found. They are non-sitters also; very rarely does any specimen show signs of broodiness. They are large, square built birds, short in leg and neck, lustrous black in plumage and crest, dark legs, long, deep breast bones, and quality and quantity of flesh of extra high order. A well fed Creve makes a most substantial as well as a dainty dish on the table. Few breeds possess whiter flesh, or that of more deliciously juicy quality.

For crossing purposes I like Creves specially well. If it is table birds you want, then mate up with Dorking, Buff Orpington, or Indian Game hens, or half-bred hens of these varieties. Even barn-door mongrels of no particular parentage, if short on leg, square-bodied and long-keeled, will make very good all-round crosses with Creve Coeurs. Good all-round birds are produced when crossed with Langshan, Wyandotte, or Scotch Grey hens. The Creve is really worthy of a better cultivation.—R. G., in Farmer and Stockbreeder.

Sheep Scab.

Among the acts of the last session of the Indiana Legislature was one making it compulsory to dip all scabby sheep. The object is to stamp out this expensive but unnecessary disease.

Scab is produced by an itch mite, that causes itching, rubbing, pulling and shedding the wool, causing a bare and scabby skin. The parasite cannot live for any great length of time off the skin, and does not thrive on any other animal. It is therefore possible to stamp out the disease by killing all mites by dipping. Solutions of tobacco, lime and sulphur and arsenic are effective for this purpose. The tobacco solutions have preference. They may be made by taking from twenty to twenty-five pounds of tobacco leaves and stems and soaking for one day in sufficient water to cover. Then boil for an hour and draw off after six hours. Dilute to one hundred gallons. Add twenty pounds of sulphur and use while warm. The lime and sulphur dip may be made by slacking eight pounds of lime in some water, adding twenty-four pounds of sulphur and diluting to one hundred gallons. It is troublesome to prepare the tobacco solution, and is about as cheap to buy the extract ready for use. The lime and sulphur dip is injurious to the wool. It requires on an average one and a half gallons of dip solution per head for more than twenty-five head. The second dipping is necessary at the tenth day, so that the cost for material must be reckoned at about five cents to seven cents per head. The coal tar or creolin dips are excellent for ticks, but not as effective as they should be for scab.—New England Farmer.

One of the London, England, dailies had a French despatch the other day which may have an interest for financiers at the City Hall. Under date line of Dunkirk, Jan. 12, it read:—

At the meeting of the Municipal Council on Friday the accounts for the fetes in connection with the Czar's recent visit to Dunkirk were submitted.

A provisional credit of £2,000 had been unanimously voted; but the amount expended was £5,000, and it was announced that the State has refused to allow anything towards these expenses.

There remained, therefore, nothing but to vote the balance of £3,000, the Secretary of the council remarking that in the interests of the finances of the town it was to be hoped that the Czar would not come to Dunkirk again.

Curious Bits of News.

A train of twelve refrigerator cars, carrying nothing but eggs—about two millions of them—recently made the run from Newton, Kansas, to San Francisco.

One of the most remarkable clubs of modern times has its headquarters in Almeda, California. It is known as the "Old Men's Singing Club," no one being admitted to it who has not the gift of song and who has not passed at least his sixty-fifth birthday. The club has 161 members, with an aggregate age of 6,000 years.

The great Simplon tunnel under the Alps from the valley of the Rhone into Italy is about half finished, and it is now believed that it will be ready for traffic within two and a half years. Its cost will be $14,000,000, and this enormous expense has been incurred to shorten the road between Paris and Milan only 50 miles and to save grades of fifteen hundred feet. The length of the completed tunnel will exceed twelve miles.

An editorial writer with a taste for statistics has given to this waiting world a statement in which women may feel some interest. He declares that he recently stood in a crowded thoroughfare of a large city and listened to "scraps of conversation" of fifty women who passed him. Of these fifty women, four were talking about cooking and recipes; seven, about babies; twelve were discussing men and love affairs; and from the lips of twenty-seven rippled remarks about clothes.

Miss Eliene Jaqua, a well-known vocalist of Brooklyn, N.Y., is the first person to possess a glass gown which can actually be worn and not once only. It is of spun glass, made in Dresden, Germany, and was modelled and cut in Paris. At the Chicago Exposition in '93 there was a glass dress exhibited, which became the property of the Infanta Eulalie, but it was only for show and could not be worn. A full description of Miss Jaqua's glass gown is given in the "Strand Magazine" for February.

The Chicago "Tribune's" record of legal executions and lynchings in the United States in 1901 shows that 118 persons were executed and 135 were lynched. Of those executed 71 were negroes, and of those lynched, 107. The executions were one fewer than in 1900, and the lynchings were 20 more. It is noticeable that of the lynchings only 39 were for murder and 19 for criminal assault, leaving a remainder of 77 persons lynched for minor crimes. It is noticeable also that the number of lynchings in the Northern States increased from 8 in 1900 to 14 in 1901.

Chief Engineer Emil Prinwitz of the North German Lloyd steamship "Kronprins Wilhelm," is experimenting with a new arrangement which he has placed in the ship for use in case of a collision. A small wheel abaft the pilot-house is turned, and instantly hydraulic pressure closes twenty water-tight doors in the lower part of the ship, making sixteen water-tight compartments. The fact that all the doors are closed is instantly shown on an electric dial, on which the numbers of the doors and their location are printed. The sixteen water-tight rooms are more than enough to float the vessel in case any part of her hull is punctured. The experiments show that not more than two minutes is required to render the "Kronprins Wilhelm" unsinkable.

Anticipated the Permission.

MINISTERS have many interesting and amusing experiences.

A clergyman of Duluth, Minn., was engaged in conversation with a number of friends the other day, when each started telling stories of weddings he had performed. One of the party had this to offer:

Some time ago a great big fellow, roughly dressed, and a wee mite of a young woman came to him. They had no witnesses, and, in fact, did not care to have any. Nevertheless, a bridesmaid and groomsman were selected from the household and the ceremony began. They had promised to love and obey and all the rest of the service, when the preacher announced: "Kiss the bride."

The bridegroom, on bended knee, hesitated a little, tried to say something and couldn't.

"Kiss the bride," said the pastor.

"Why, parson, I did, afore I come here at all," replied the bridegroom, whose face had taken the color of a June rose.

The witnesses burst forth in laughter, while the minister had all he could do to retain the serious expression which he always wore when wedding people.

Old Age.

PROFESSOR JOWETT, the great master of Balliol College, had wise words to speak on the crucial topic of growing old. He wrote to a friend:

"The later years of life appear to me, from a certain point of view, to be the best. They are less disturbed by care and the world; we begin to understand that things really never did matter so much as we supposed, and we are able to see them more in their true proportion, instead of being overwhelmed by them. We are more resigned to the will of God, neither afraid to depart nor overanxious to stay. We cannot see into another life, but we believe, with an inextinguishable hope, that there is something still reserved for us."

It is worth while to remember his hints for old age, full, as they are, of a practical wisdom:

Beware of the coming on of age, for it will not be defied.

He should collect the young about him.

He should set other men to work.

He ought, at sixty, to have acquired authority, reticence and freedom from personality.

He may truly think of the last years of life as being the best, and every year as better than the last, if he knows how to use it.

Mrs. McVicars—Aye, my Jennie's wee Johnny went wi' the Sabbath-skill's picnic, and he got awa doon by the water-side and fell in, and they havena found his body yet. Mrs. Paterson—Oh, lost me! And he'd have his best claes on, too.—"Moonshine."

Belle—You look worried, dear. Do something to occupy your mind. Why not read a little fiction?

Violet—I do, dear; I get a letter from my husband every day.—Moonshine.

"We shall have to try again," said the photographer, inspecting the result of the first sitting. "You seem to have had one eye shut."

"You told me to wink naturally," said the sitter, "and that's what I was trying to do."—Chicago Tribune.

A Contrast.

IN an article in the "Arena" for February, Eltweed Pomeroy writes of English and French national traits as shown in their deliberative assemblies—the House of Commons and the Chamber of Deputies respectively. Describing a visit to the latter, Mr. Pomeroy writes:

"The hands of the two big clocks—there must be one on each side to balance—approach two. A minute later the ushers, in full dress, each with a metal chain around his neck, arrange themselves in a row; the head usher announces in a loud voice to the few Deputies already there: 'Monsieur le President!' and the elegant Paul Deschanel enters and ascends to his seat on the third platform. The hall fills with Deputies. The audience quiets down. Without any roll-call, reading of minutes, or other preliminary, the President announces that Deputy Berry will speak.

"A stocky, businesslike Frenchman ascends the tribune. At first he speaks calmly, but, soon warming up, he expostulates, implores, entreats, commands, exhorts. Gestures are frequent and emphatic. It is an oration. A sharp remark starts a question from one side. M. Berry answers it. Another and another follow in rapid succession. A member stops walking in front and begins an excited explanation. Twelve or fifteen Deputies are talking at once. M. Berry shrugs his shoulders with an eloquent gesture of despair—as only a Frenchman can shrug. The President raps hard on the table; he rings his bell again and again, rises, and calls out: 'Attention, gentlemen!' The hubbub subsides and then renews. The President pleads with them: 'It is Monsieur Berry who speaks, gentlemen! Hear him!' His hands are extended in entreaty. His voice has tears in it. He assumes the most graceful, nonchalant, and pleading attitude. The speaker below him has stopped with a most patient and resigned air. A stalwart usher comes to the front and shouts 'Silence!' In the lull that follows, M. Berry makes the mistake of saying he could sing something that would convince them. At once the shout, 'Chantant! Chantant!' ('Sing! Sing!') goes up all over the house. Nothing can be heard in the din till M. Berry begins to talk in stentorian tones and gesticulates wildly and ends in an eloquent climax, which brings silence out of mere curiosity to hear him. A vote is taken and his motion is carried. Despite the noise, oratory, and hubbub, the body moves and action is taken. An Englishman is bewildered and scandalized by the tumult. He does not understand the French love of a sensational effect and of display.

"President Deschanel has just been married. A little later, a witty Deputy in the course of his speech said, 'I am a benedick,' with a significant wave of his hand backward. At once a fusillade of questions were fired at him—why was he a benedick? how long would he stay a benedick? was it good to be a benedick? The President arose, explained, pleaded, expostulated in a most pathetic and heart-rending manner. The orator talked below. The witty questions, bon-mots, and laughter scintillated across the floor. The audience in the boxes applauded and watched the actors through their opera-glasses. Ushers came out and shouted, 'Silence! Silence!' but no one paid any attention to them. It was as good as a circus. They were all actors, and acting with a verve, grace, and effectiveness utterly alien to the Anglo-Saxon."

Turning to the British House of Commons, Mr. Pomeroy says that a policeman points the visitor through a magnificent hall into an equally magnificent octagonal lobby without any seats in it. Halls leading out of it have seats, but a policeman tells you visitors are not allowed to sit on them. Policemen are everywhere, and they act as if they were the chief ornaments of the building. Even a member of the House must get a special permit to take a lady with the visiting party into the House restaurant. "While we are discussing the Parliament-toasted buns and tea, we notice a sentry pacing up and down on the outside terrace. On enquiry we find he was put there years ago, when the dynamite outrages stirred parliamentary sloth. The idea was that dynamite might be thrown from a boat on the river and destroy the buildings. He still paces."

Illustrating this characteristic worship of precedent, the writer says that his friend, Mr. Corrie Grant, member for Leicester, cited a couple of interesting facts. On entering the chamber, every member bows three times. At first Mr. Grant thought they were bowing to the Speaker, as representing the dignity of the House. But one day he noticed the Speaker himself bowed three times on entering. He enquired, but no one seemed to know the reason for this rule. The English in him became aroused and he went digging to find out. After a good deal of antiquarian research, he found that centuries ago, in the time of Henry VIII., the House of Commons met in St. Stephen's chapel, which of course was Roman Catholic, as that was then the State and all-prevailing religion. At the upper end was an altar, and everyone coming in bowed three times to the Holy Trinity—to the Father, to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. They no longer meet in St. Stephen's chapel; the religion is gone; the altar is gone; the real reason for the rule is gone—but they still bow three times on entering.

Again, "in the House of Commons the members sit on benches without any desks. These benches run up and down the hall, and an aisle runs up the center. The Government members sit on one side and the Opposition on the other. They thus face each other. There are only enough seats for about a third of the members. That also is English. The arrangement of seats is awkward for speaking, but it is 'old.' Down each side of the aisle runs a narrow strip of red carpet. Should a member in talking overstep this red carpet, he is called to order and moves back. The two strips of red carpet are just a little farther apart than the length of a sword and the sword arm. They are a relic of the time when the armed knights sat on either side of the house and a member was forbidden to overstep this red carpet lest in the heat of debate he should draw his sword and injure or be injured. The swords have gone ages ago, and the violence of that mediaeval debate, but the red carpet and the rule without reason remains."

No laborer who puts thought into his work need have any fear of ever being displaced by a machine.

THE GHOST

Of our boyhood resolved itself to an old tree when we had courage to examine it. Manhood has its ghosts, which, to the man who has courage to confront them, prove to be as harmless as the ghosts of boyhood.

One of the ghosts which scare a great many people is the ghost of lung disease. But experience shows this ghost to be very harmless. In cases almost innumerable "weak" lungs have been made strong, obstinate coughs stopped, and bronchial affections cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. And these cures have been wrought in many cases after the doctor had said—"There is no help for you." Don't give in to the superstition of a past age. Give the "Golden Medical Discovery" a fair and faithful trial. It always helps. It almost always cures.

"When I commenced taking your medicine eighteen months ago, my health was completely broken down," writes Mrs. Cora L. Sunderland, of Chaneyville, Calvert Co., Md. "At times I could not even walk across the room without pains in my chest. The doctor who attended me said I had lung trouble, and that I would never be well again. At last I concluded to try Dr. Pierce's medicines. I bought a bottle of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' took it, and soon commenced to feel a little better; then you directed me to take both the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and the 'Favorite Prescription,' which I did. Altogether I have taken eighteen bottles of 'Golden Medical Discovery,' twelve of the 'Favorite Prescription,' and five vials of 'Pellets.' I am now almost entirely well, and do all my work without any pain whatever, and can run with more ease than I could formerly walk."

Anecdotal.

As a preface to his attack upon the recent army appointments in England, Rudyard Kipling tells a story of a man who was carrying a bag, and of whom a fellow-traveler asked what it was that the bag contained. "Mongooses," was the answer; "my brother sees snakes, and I'm taking the mongooses up to kill them." "But your brother doesn't see real snakes." "No; but these aren't real mongooses."

Hans Jensen, a Dane, who appeared before a Kansas judge in order to take out naturalization papers, very easily demonstrated his fitness for the privilege. "Hans," said the judge, "are you satisfied with the general conditions of the country? Does this government suit you?" "Yaas, yaas," replied the Dane, "only I vould like to see more rain." "Swear him!" exclaimed the judge. "I see that he already has the Kansas idea."

On one occasion Hans Richter was present at a concert given by a brother composer, at which the latter performed a long and not particularly interesting work of his own. When the composition came to an end Richter expressed his criticism in a very few words. "Well," he said, "I too haf written compositions to make a pile so high," raising his hand three feet from the ground; "but I haf burned them!"

A story is being told in the London clubs about King Edward. A discussion once arose among a circle of his intimate friends as to how they would each meet a sudden reverse of fortune. One of them turned to the Prince—it was before his accession—and said: "If the monarchy was overthrown here, sir, what would you do?" The Prince of Wales thought for a moment, and then replied: "Well, I think I might support my family by lecturing in the United States upon how it feels to be Prince of Wales."

When Mark Twain lived in Buffalo he made the acquaintance of some neighbors under peculiar circumstances. Emerging from his house one morning, he saw something which made him run across the street, and remark to the people who were gathered on the veranda: "My name is Clemens; my wife and I have been intending to call on you and make your acquaintance. We owe you an apology for not doing it before now. I beg your pardon for intruding on you in this informal manner, and at this time of day, but your house is on fire!"

While Charles A. Towne was senator from Minnesota for about thirty days last winter he made a speech on the Philippines in the Senate Chamber of Congress, and it was pronounced a great effort. At the conclusion of his speech, Senator Chauncey Depew was among the first to take Mr. Towne by the hand and congratulate him. "Senator Towne," he is said to have remarked, "your delivery was splendid, your rhetoric unsurpassed, but your argument was damnable." This left-handed compliment was no doubt intended to embarrass Senator Towne, but it didn't. He bowed politely to Mr. Depew, and said: "Senator Depew, I am glad you compliment the only features of my speech you are capable of understanding."

Nebuchadnezzar's Throne Room.

(Berlin correspondence of the London "News.")

The German Oriental Society confirms the reports in American papers to the effect that Dr. Koldewey has succeeded in discovering Nebuchadnezzar's throne room at Babylon. It is a gigantic building, about 60 feet wide by 160 feet long. Exactly opposite the door is the niche in which once the royal throne stood, and on both sides and on the northern front of the hall are richly colored ornaments, in good preservation, which will doubtless prove of the highest historical and artistic importance. The German expedition has also begun excavations in the City of Babylon, near the present village of Jumjuma, and has already discovered a goodly number of inscribed clay tablets, which, according to the testimony of Dr. Weissbach, the Assyriologist of the expedition, contain letters, psalms and vocabularies. They are, therefore, all documents of the deepest interest, and are specially calculated to further the study of the Old Testament.

With the help of new railway material, the work on the hill of Amran-ibn Ali is shortly to be resumed, and the excavations of this unique Pantheon of the Babylonian metropolis, hidden deep down in the earth, promise rich and varied discoveries.

The German Oriental Society does not confine its activity to Babylon. It has secured two other hills, named Fara and Abu Hatab, which are believed to contain particularly fine monuments dating from 4000 B.C. The two hills are not far from Nuffar, where the American excavations are being made, and the Sultan has already issued an irade permitting the excavations.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

She took the oars in her little, slim hands, and struck out with a will, but pulling against the tide was quite another thing from floating down with the stream.

Time seemed to fly swift-winged. Almost before she was aware of it, the sun had sunk and the darkness of night crept on, and to add to the peril of Daisy's situation, the storm which she had dreaded so much set in with great force; great rain-drops splashed on her terrified face. The wind roared like a banshee, and the little boat was whirled about like an egg-shell in the swirling, white-capped waves.

Daisy was brave of heart, but in the face of such appalling danger as lay before her —the intense darkness and the fear of drifting into the outlet that widened into the lake beyond —the stoutest heart would have quailed.

With might and main Daisy plied the oars until at last one of them bent like a reed and broke in her frantic grasp. Was it the lightning flashing so luridly red, or the red danger signal of the eight o'clock steamer coming down the river? Daisy asked herself in terror.

Nearer and nearer came the red light, and in the white radiant light that blazed for an instant over the curling waters, Daisy beheld the welcome sight of the old farmhouse on the opposite shore; but shutting it out of view, even in that instantaneous light was something huge and dark, and suddenly her little boat spun round and round. She realized what that meant. It was the steamer —she was in its path, in an instant of time it would be upon her. With a wild cry for help that echoed faintly over the waters, Daisy threw up her hands and fell back senseless in the boat.

Leaning over the railing, evidently unmindful of the fury of the storm, stood a young man, gazing abstractedly over the wild dashing waves. A dark smile played about the corners of his mouth, and his restless eyes wore a pleased expression, as though his thoughts were not troubled by the wild warring of the elements.

Suddenly through the terrible roar of the storm he heard a piteous appeal for help, and the voice seemed to die away over the angry muttering waves.

He leaned over the railing breathless with excitement.

The thunder crashed almost incessantly, and there came a blinding flash of lightning. In that one instant he had seen a white lovely face framed in a mass of floating golden hair turned toward him.

"Great God!" shrieked Harold St. John, hoarsely.

His life might not have been blameless, but the handsome stranger was no coward. He had faced graver perils than most young men. In an instant he had torn off his coat, sprung from the dark —down —down in the horrible darkness into the mad waves.

It was a daring venture; but Harold St. John was an expert swimmer. He caught Daisy just as he struck the water, and in that blinding flash of lightning recognized her.

He did not strike out for the steamer again, but for the opposite shore, and she went on her way, her captain and crew all unmindful of the tragedy that had been averted.

Harold St. John soon struck terra firma with his lovely burden, and as he laid her down under one of the tall beech trees, Daisy regained consciousness.

"Is it a dream?" she muttered, "the mad water and the steamer?"

Then her startled glance fell upon the face of the stranger as the glimmering light from the farmhouse window afar off faintly illumined the scene.

"I saw you and sprung from the deck of the steamer and succeeded in saving you," he responded. "You do not recognize me, but I know you in an instant, even by the uncertain light of the lightning's flash."

"Yes, I do recognize you," said Daisy, impulsively. "You are the gentleman I directed to Briarvale today."

"I thank you for taking so much notice of me as to remember me," he said, flushing.

"You have saved my life," she said. "How am I ever to find words to thank you? And you have risked your life for me. I can never forget that."

"I would have risked a hundred lives, if I had had them, for your sake," he said earnestly.

He was just about to add "Miss Ruthven," but he checked himself just in time.

She must not guess that he knew her to be the heiress, worth three millions of money, he told himself with a smile.

"I was just about to take you to that house yonder, whose light I see shining through the trees."

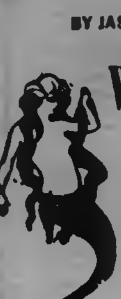
THE LIAR OF WINTERGREEN SHOAL.

BY JAS. A. TUCKER.



WHERE the little driftwood fire in front of "Bush" Gallagher's "shack" danced fitfully to the whimsical music of the west wind, the figures of four men reclined uneasily. Uneasily, for it was a rough beach—a narrow margin, bowlder-built and dead-wood-strewn, 'twixt the dark, forbidding "bush" and the yet more dark, forbidding water. Twinkling lights, at intervals up and down the shore, told of other encampments and of civilized man's love of the cheer of fire, when divorced from his accustomed haunts and set down in the midst of inscrutable night and unfamiliar nature.

It was the time of the fall trolling at Wintergreen Shoal, on the Georgian. Men had come out from town to enjoy the unsurpassed sport, and to share the harvest of the waters with the bronzed and hardened fishermen and farmers. A fine season it had been, too, and great was the catch of that most toothsome and delicate of finny creatures—the plump, meaty, muscular, and always game salmon-trout, the "namaycush" of the fresh-water seas. Forty, fifty and even sixty of these mottled beauties, weighing anywhere from four to six or seven pounds, and taken, fish by fish, by the incomparably sporty method of line and spoon, had this season been no unusual day's record for experienced trollers.

"Bush" Gallagher was not only one of the oldest settlers and farmers along the lake shore—he was one of the best fishermen, hunters and trappers also, and, like all men of real prowess in these pursuits, something of an accomplished liar to boot. "Bush's" farm-house being a couple of miles back from the beach, he had built a fishing shanty down by the water. Here he kept his boat and hither he came and established headquarters every fall when the fish schooled in to the shoal. Often he found profit in sharing the accommodation of the shack with townsmen, who feared rheumatism and colds from sleeping in tents, or in wigwams, or under upturned boats, in the latter end of October. And so it happened that this fall "Bush" Gallagher had three "boarders" who were glad enough to pay $3 a head for a week's comfortable shelter, with "yarns" to enliven the long nights and pointers on the subtleties of successful trolling from the most renowned fisherman and romancer of Wintergreen Shoal.

"Bush" had been, on the evening in question, reciting for the second time a marvelous account of the great fishing of thirty years before.

"Yes, siree, that was a great fall, a great fall, I say. Why, sir, us farmers took so many trout we couldn't eat 'em, salt 'em, or give 'em away, and so we fed 'em to the pigs by the hundr'd, sir; yes, sir, I say by the hundr'd. An' would you bee-lieve it, so much fish diet did the pigs have all that fall that when killin' time come, on towards Chris'mas, would you bee-lieve it, there wasn't a ham or a pork-chop or a side o' bacon in all this lake-shore settlement that didn't taste disagreeable strong o' fish—yes, sir, I say disagreeable strong."

"It's a wonder," quietly remarked Mr. Joshua Ketch, the dignified K.C., who was one of "Bush" Gallagher's guests and auditors, and who at that time was adding the right proportion of aqua pura to a modest dose of dark liquid from a stone jar, "it's a wonder that, with so much phosphorous diet, the porkers did not run entirely to brain rather than bacon."

"Yes," added Dr. Killem, "and outstrip their owners in intelligence."

"Which wouldn't 'a' been a very hard matter, sir, not a very hard matter, I say, considerin' the intellec' of a lot o' the neighbors hereabouts," added "Bush" with a laugh at his dexterity in turning the shaft aside from himself.

"Now, I say, 'Bush,'" said "the Kid," his third protege, drawing contentedly at his pipe, "we've had a good deal of fiction. I suppose that's but natural, seeing this is a fishing party. Let's have some fact for a change."

"I don't comprehend you, sir; what do you mean, sir?" said "Bush." "I've been tellin' you gospel truth, an' I hope you don't mean to suspicionate the same."

"Ah, go on 'Bush,'" put in the lawyer, winking with his weather eye. "The Kid's right. You needn't be so dead serious about it. Now, tell us, honest Indian, hope-you-may-die, what, in your judgment, was the most exciting occurrence in the history of this shoal."

"Bush" was silent for some moments, not so much in the effort to recall the past as with the evident purpose of appearing to disdain so direct an impeachment of his veracity. He stirred the fire, put on a fresh log—for the night, though pleasant for October, was growing late—and then, after resuming his seat, bit off a "quarter section" of a plug of black tobacco.

"In 1869," he began, dreamily, "yes, it was '69, 'cause that's the year there was nine cows killed by lightnin' on Beaconsfield Jones' farm, an' the year the nine cows was killed was the same year Martha Jane Meredith an' 'Slug' Parki'son got hitched, an' the year them two got hitched was the same year that—but there's my story. Well, in 1869, as I was sayin', there was a stranger come down the Center road, one stormy October night, and turned in at Pete McLean's. Pete was a pretty well-to-do farmer, you mus' understand, but not too well liked in this here neighborhood, for he was keen on money an' always got ahead o' the other feller in a deal. This stranger was a shabby-lookin' customer, with seedy clo'es, an' a hooked nose an' curly hair an' beard. He had a big carpet-bag bulgin' out with stuff, and he said he was a travelin' salesman (I'd call him a peddler), an' expected to do business with the settlers in these parts. He give his name as Sol Nitler or Needler, an' he asked for a night's lodgin' an' breakfast at Pete McLean's. Pete, bein' keen for money I suppose, dickered with him for the price an' took him in—a mos' unheard-of thing for a farmer in them days to charge a stranger for a night's roostin' an' a slab o' sowbelly in the mornin'. But I daresay that stranger wouldn't get pork an' ad ter have fresh eggs, an' that may be why Pete charged him, after all.

"Well, Sol Nitler was around this neighborhood fer three or four days, sellin' jewelry."

"Selling jewelry?" exclaimed the K. C., in the incredulous tone of a barrister cross-examining a hostile witness.

"Yes, jewelry, that's what I said," went on "Bush." "P'rhaps you don't know, Mr. Ketch, that you can sell luxuries where you can't git the price fer necessaries. But that's not in yer law books, it's jest a law of human nature. Sol Nitler drove a thrivin' trade, an' every night, reg'lar as the hens went to roost, he returned to Pete McLean's an' paid fer his bed an' breakfast. These fac's I wasn't seized of at the time, bein' as I was down here on the shoal, like most o' the men folk. Pete McLean—he wasn't fishin' much that fall.

"Sol Nitler engaged with Jim Gregory, who was goin' ter drive to the railway, twenty miles away, ter call fer him at McLean's an' take him along. Pete didn't know of this, and when Jim Gregory drives inter his place in the mornin' bright an' early an' asks fer the Jew, Pete vows Sol ain't there—that he'd never came back the night before. Jim says that's strange. Pete allows it is strange, an' talks kind o' confused like as if Jim's suspicionin' him of some wrong-doing. Of course Jim ain't doin' anything of the kind, and drives off to the railway, thinkin' most likely Sol had took some other chance.

"Nex' night, as I was sleepin' here in a makeshift balsam an' bark wigwam, I woke up all of a start round about midnight, and pretty soon I thinks I hears the 'tuck-tuck, tuck-tuck' of steady rowin' out on the lake. 'Queer time o' night,' thinks I, 'fer anyone to be out in a boat. Mischief's abroad, someone liftin' nets.' So I gets up an' creeps out to the beach. It wasn't very dark. There was a moon, but it was behind a bank of cloud. I could see a boat out about quarter of a mile from shore, and, by jiminy! come to look, my boat was gone from the beach. My first idea was ter holler at the thieves, but on second thought I knowed it was better to sit tight and wait developments.

"The boat was manoeuverin' round out there fer some time, an' then it puts in fer shore again. As it draws near I crouches down in the underbrush, and pretty soon I sees there's two men in the boat, an' hanged if they don't look like—well, never mind who they looked like; that's part of my story. They pushes in, very quiet-like, and before the boat can scrape her snout on the stones, out they steps as noiseless as jackrabbits an' lifts her bodily—she was just a little duck-boat—up the beach. 'They've got no fish, that's sure,' says I to myself. Then they dives through the bush, quick-footed as red Injins, takin' the direction of the settlement, an' leavin' me crouchin' here like a fool, too serprised ter tell my own name if I'd 'a' been asked sudden.

"I confides in the boys nex' day as to what I'd seen, an' the yarn spreads round and people is sayin' pretty soon that so-an'-so is mean enough an' graspin' enough ter lift nets, but they're glad he got nothin' fer his pains. But I knows in my heart it was no net-liftin' business, fer the only net in that direction was mine, an' nex' mornin' it was fuller o' fish than I'd ever seen a net before. But I keeps my counsel on that p'int.

"Soon Jim Gregory comes back from the railway an' brings word that Sol Nitler's not there nor been there, an' Jim tells somebody what passed at McLean's that mornin' he drove off, an' the story spreads, an' everybody matches my story with Jim's an' makes a piece o' them, an' the fat's in the fire. The men of the settlement meet at the blacksmith shop an' discuss the hull thing, pro an' con, an' a deputation is sent up to Pete McLean's, with me as spokesman.

"We call's Pete out o' the barn an' I tells him, straight up and down, that we don't want to make no charge nor no trouble, but we think circumstances calls fer explanation, and if he knows anything of the whereabouts of Sol Nitler he'd better say where or suffer the consequences. Peter McLean turns red an' then white, an' swears an' curses, tellin' us he don't know nothin' o' the Jew, an' we can go to all kinds o' places, if we like, fer any further information; an' he winds up by sayin' my yarn about the boat is a infernal lie, which he'd make me prove it. An' he calls on his son Martin to back him up.

"I keeps my head an' says that's all very well, but 'Meantime, Mr. McLean,' I says, 'we're goin' ter search the woods an' fields round your house to the last rod, an' we're goin' ter drag the lake, and to-morrow we'll send ter town fer a law-officer to further investigate.' Peter McLean rushes into the house an' comes tearin' out with a shotgun, and vows a bloody oath that the first man who moves another foot on his land except in the direction of the gate will die in his tracks.

"That settled it. Not bein' armed, we retreated in good order. But that very night we sent Bill Dougall to town on horseback for the Crown Attorney. We also started ter drag the lake, but we couldn't find nothin', an' never did find nothin'. An' nex' day, when the law-officer arrived, what do you think?—Pete an' Martin had vanished clean as a half-hooked eel. No trace of either o' them was ever found, nor any of the Jew, though diligent search an' enquiry was made. Now, did Pete an' Martin kill the Jew or didn't they? In other words, is it true, as Spokeshave says, that murder will out?"

This gruesome yarn, with its singularly inconclusive ending, was surely a somewhat heavy and indigestible repast to retire on, and it would have been no matter for wonder had there been troubled dreams that night under the hospitable roof of "Bush" Gallagher. But exercise and fresh air are valiant enemies of the whole genus nightmare, and "Bush's" guests slept sweetly and arose early for their last day's sport.

Now it so happened that about noon Dr. Killem and "the Kid" pulled ashore for lunch at a point where a gray-bearded old man had his boat drawn up also. The three drifted into conversation, and the old man mentioned that his name was Bill Dougall. Then the doctor, still full of "Bush's" story, laid open his knowledge of the strange occurrences of October, 1869. Bill Dougall seemed mildly surprised and asked what the doctor was driving at, and when "Bush" Gallagher's whole story had been repeated, the old fellow lay back and shook with laughter like the traditional "bowl full of jelly."

"One of 'Bush' Gallagher's yarns, eh?" he exclaimed. "Well, when you've known 'Bush' as long as I have you'll put as much dependence in his murder stories as in his fish yarns, an' that's not sayin' much."

Of course "Bush" was taxed with deception at the evening camp-fire. Not the ghost of a smile or of a blush haunted his countenance. "You suspicioned my veracity when I was tellin' gospel truth, an' yet you wanted entertainment, an' you got it, didn't you?" This was the only explanation he deigned.

"Right you are, 'Bush,'" said Mr. Ketch, K.C. "Still, you might have added, as a sort of postscript, you know, that there never was a Sol Nitler; that Peter McLean died here in bed ten years ago; that his son (still residing in this township) is called McAlpine, not Martin; that there was no railway in this section of the country in 1869, and finally that you were not here then yourself — all which I myself have quietly gathered from your own lips to-day, independently of the discovery of the Doctor and 'the Kid.'"

"Had you been educated at college, 'Bush,' you'd be one of the distinguished historical novelists of the day," added "the Kid."

"Or, if you'd been trained in my profession," said the Doctor, "you'd be the right kind of man to give expert medical testimony in the courts."

"Gentlemen," said Mr. Ketch, K.C., "if 'Bush' had been brought up to the law, I will not venture to say what would have happened. But anyway, here's looking at you, 'Bush.' May you live long and 'lie' in peace. Everybody drink hearty, for this is our last night, for a year at least, on Wintergreen Shoal."

Queer Facts About Orchids.

THE life of an orchid hunter combines in itself all the most sensational features of exploration in untrodden districts, often infested by ferocious beasts and by even more savage natives, and in many cases highly malarious and disease laden. The rarer orchids are generally found in the most inaccessible spots, and in the densest and most marshy jungles. Even the natives avoid the districts into which the intrepid orchid hunter penetrates in search of his floral quarry.

A few years ago eight orchid hunters met at Tamatave, and then separated in search of specimens. Within a year only one of them survived, and he had spent months in the most pestilential swamps, from which he emerged with his health permanently impaired. One of the others had been captured by native priests, who drenched him with oil and burned him to death on their altar.

The expense of collecting the orchids and getting them at last into the sales-room is very great. For example, a fine orchid is found in a very out of the way part of Colombia. After being gathered the plants are wired to sticks and nailed inside boxes. These boxes are conveyed on a journey of several days to Bogota, whence another six days' journey takes them to Honda, where they are placed on rafts and conveyed down the Magdalena River to Savanilla—a fortnight's journey — where the steamer is awaited.

When at last, after a heavy outlay, the consignment reaches England, quite half the specimens will be dead, and in many cases the whole of them will be too far gone for recovery. The orchid importer has always to be prepared for heavy losses.

Twenty-seven thousand valuable plants were sent home on one occasion from Colombia by Mr. Roesl, and of these only two survived the voyage. They were sold for 40 guineas each—not a high price when one considers what they had cost.

Until the plant flowers its value is purely speculative. Its species is in most cases readily determined, but it may present some variation which will greatly enhance its value. For example, a certain orchid with a purple bloom may be worth about five shillings, but an example of the same species with white flowers will realize £100 at auction. The value of a plant depends upon its rarity and novelty even more than upon its beauty.

Many years ago an orchid, of quite new and unknown species, arrived in the packing in which some foreign plants were sent home. No one knew where it came from, and for a long while it continued unique. Orchid hunters sought everywhere for it, but not till seventy years later was it found.

Another orchid arrived in 1854 without any known place of origin, and, notwithstanding persistent search, its native habitation has not been found yet.

Some years ago two orchids were found in the Zoological Gardens on a heap of rubbish. They came in the packing with some South American monkeys, but their place of origin has not yet been discovered.—"Harmsworth Magazine."

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawford—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—"Town Topics."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

L'BRARY FOR THE BOYS

A Strong Effort Being Put Forth to Establish One at the Y.M.C.A.

A very strong effort is being made to establish a library in connection with the Boy's Department of the Y.M.C.A. A large number of the boy's friends have been asked to assist in the work by giving a book, each member is also requested to do the same. It is not necessary that the book should be new so long as it is in good condition. The time for receiving the contributions will be on March 24th and it is hoped that by that date that there will be a large number of books ready to be placed on the shelves. A good circulating library is much needed in the department and will be a great help in furthering the work of the association.

32nd Annual Meeting

The Company Solid and Progressive — Another Year of Substantial Gains.

The Thirty-second Annual Meeting of this popular and prosperous life company took place at its head office, Waterloo, Ont., on Thursday, March 6th, 1902, at 1 p.m. The company's spacious Board room was well filled with policyholders, who evinced a deep interest in the proceedings, which were throughout both harmonious and instructive.

The President having taken the chair, on motion, Mr. W. H. Riddell, Secretary of the Company, acted as Secretary of the meeting, and at the request of the President read the DIRECTORS' REPORT.

Your Directors submit for your consideration and approval their report, with financial statement for the year ending Dec. 31st, 1901.

New Business

They are pleased to inform you that the business of the year in all respects has been of the most satisfactory character, enabling them to make the same liberal distribution of surplus to policyholders as in the past. The volume and character of new business were all that could be desired; the death rate was much below the expectation, and the lapses and surrenders, in proportion to business in force, very moderate. Amount of applications for new insurance received was $4,403,000; accepted and policies issued $4,071,009, all of which with the exception of $36,500 was secured in Canada.

Canada First

The Board of Directors have not seen any reason why they should depart from the rule hitherto followed of confining their operations to our own country and Newfoundland.

Insurance in Force

The number of policies in force was 21,785, assuring $31,718,031, the reserve on which, based on our own standard, Actuaries 4 per cent., on all business previous to 1900, and Hm. 3 1-2 per cent. on all business taken since then, is $5,301,100.41.

Assets and Income

The cash assets are $5,439,541.65, and the total assets $5,757,822.17. The surplus on Government standard, over all liabilities, is $605,470.00; on the Company's standard $379,970.53. The net premium income was $998,619.06; interest and rent $255,817.02; annuity premiums, $23,250; total income, $1,277,686.08.

Paid to Policyholders

The amount paid to policyholders was $493,532.45, of which sum $305,021.96 was paid to living policyholders. The death claims paid were $188,510.50; Matured Endowments $163,400; Purchased Policies $52,523.37; Surplus $82,255.51, Annuities $6,763.07.

Investments

During the year the demand for money has been active, and the funds of the Company have been fully employed. The rate of interest has been good, and payments on both instalments and interest have been promptly met, the interest overdue being much less than in any former year.

The Manager, officers and staff continue to discharge their duties to the entire satisfaction of the Board, and in the best interests of the Company.

The Executive Committee have carefully examined all the securities, and compared them with the entries in the ledger, and found them to correspond therewith.

You will be called upon to elect four Directors in place of Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Alfred Hoskin, K.C., E. P. Clement and Hon. J. T. Garrow, whose term has expired, all of whom are eligible for re-election.

ROBERT MELVIN,
President.

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

In moving the adoption of the Report, Mr. Melvin said: Allow me to express to you the very great pleasure it gives me to meet you again, and to be able to place before you for your consideration a statement of the last year's business which is so eminently satisfactory in every respect; for whilst the new business was a little less than last year, it was quite up to our expectations, and beyond the amount, I believe, issued by the majority of other Canadian Companies in Canada. The statement shows steady progress in all that denotes strength and stability, while the ratio of expense to income was the lowest in our history, viz: 16.98 per cent., or 3.57 per cent. less than the previous year.

We added to our insurance in 1901 $2,199,695, and during the past five years the large amount of $11,716,569, considerably over one-third of the total amount in force, a very gratifying increase indeed, which says much for the quality of the business done by our agency staff, for which they will please accept the hearty thanks of the Directors.

During the year we paid to policyholders in surplus the sum of $82,255.51, and during the past five years the large amount of $306,527.64. During the same period we increased the surplus on hand from $221,417.05 to $379,970.53. This surplus is ascertained on the Combined Experience 4 per cent. Table for business in force previous to 1900 and Hm. 3 1-2 per cent. Table on all new business since then. If we were to base our reserve on the present standard allowed by the Government, viz: Hm. 4 1-2 per cent. on old business, a standard that some companies still use, the surplus would be $605,470.

The mortality for the year amounted to $268,471, being much below the expectation, and $6,487.00 less than the previous year, notwithstanding the increased business in force.

The interest and rents from our investments exceeded the amount paid for claims in 1901 by $67,307.00, and in the past five years by the large sum of $185,809.16. For this we are, no doubt, indebted in a large measure to Dr. Webb, our Medical Director, who has always been most careful in his selection of risks, and also to our medical examiners.

The large sum of $305,021.96 we paid to living policyholders during the year; the total amount paid to all classes of policyholders or their representatives in 1901 was $493,532.45, and in the past five years $1,991,727.36. The amount paid to living policyholders is largely accounted for by the very large surplus paid to policyholders and the increasing tendency for many years past towards endowment assurances as a provision for old age, instead of, as formerly, by policies upon the whole life plans, which at one time were more in favor.

At the Annual Meeting on May 28th, 1896, in referring to the reserve and surplus, I used these words:—"It may be that in the near future we may require a 3 1-2 or even a 3 per cent. reserve, which some of the British companies have already adopted. The death rate is a certain and fixed quantity, while the rate of interest, or value of money, is very unstable, but always with a downward tendency. This being the case, whatever we may do with regard to surplus, etc., we are bound to make ample provision in our reserve for payment to the policyholders of the uttermost farthing of the obligations we have incurred." These remarks are as applicable to-day as they were then, as the Government in the following year, seeing the necessity for increasing the reserve in consequence of the steadily decreasing rate of interest, amended the Act, making it compulsory for all new business after the 1st of January, 1900, to be on the higher basis of 3 1-2 per cent., while all business issued prior to 1900 may remain on a 4 1-2 per cent. basis until 1910, but from 1910 to 1915 4 per cent. must be assumed, and after 1915 all business must be placed on a 3 1-2 per cent. basis. It is true that we have yet some time to reach the higher standard, and, it may be asked, why provide the additional reserve so long before the Government requires it? I answer that it is not only our duty to comply as soon as possible with the requirements of the Act, if it is to give added strength and stability to the Company, but to anticipate it, as was done previously with the best results. In 1895, long before the Government asked a higher reserve, our Company voluntarily raised the reserve from 4 1-2 to 4 per cent. The wisdom of this is now apparent, as all our old business is now within one-half of 1 per cent. of what the Government asks in 1915, and it is more than possible that we can come to the 3 1-2 reserve within a very short period, if our surplus continues to increase as it is now doing, without interfering much, if any, with our present liberal scale of surplus distribution.

In conclusion, I will briefly recapitulate some additions and gains for the year. Our income amounted to the large sum of $1,277,686.08, our gain in insurance $2,199,695.00, in assets $575,807.60, in reserve $469,366.73, in surplus $9,120.63, and last, but not the least gratifying feature, the expense account was $23,951 less than the previous year. Up to March 1st our death rate was much less than it was for the same period last year, and the new business exceeds that of last year at the same time. Is it, then, too much to expect that if Directors, agents, the staff and the policyholders do their duty, the year upon which we have now entered may be still more successful than the one just past?

VICE-PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS.

Speaking in support of the motion, Mr. A. Hoskin, K.C., First Vice-President, said:—The President has been so full and explicit in the excellent address just delivered that but little has been left for me to say. However, I may be permitted to take up a few minutes of your time in referring to a matter not enlarged upon by him. In this, as in all insurance companies, the investment of the assets of the company is of vital importance, both as regards the safety as well as the earning power. The Directors of your Company have paid both anxious and constant attention to this matter, and the President, in addition, has given a great deal of his time and thought to this part of the business, and, I venture to say, with considerable success. At the end of 1901 the interest past due amounted to $3,693.00 on securities representing over $5,000,000, and of this amount over two thousand two hundred dollars have since been paid. The major part of the Company's investments are in municipal debentures and mortgages upon real estate. It may be of interest to the members to know how these investments are distributed.

The amount invested on farm property is $1,609,482.46, upon city property $1,033,584.14. In Manitoba there are $186,874 invested on farm and $178,815 upon city properties. The Debentures are distributed as follows:

	Account Value.	Par Value.
Cities	$ 385,760 79	$ 377,541 97
Towns	1,184,289 51	1,140,729 83
Villages	138,042 96	134,255 96
Townships	34,955 89	33,876 28
Schools	68,390 21	65,245 02
Miscellaneous	200,969 67	192,999 99
	$2,012,448 03	$1,914,758 95

The average rate of interest realized by the Company during the past year was nearly 5 per cent. I think it well to refer to another matter which the members at large may not be aware of, which shows how their interests are safeguarded. The Executive Committee meet once a month, and among other duties pass upon every payment made on behalf of the Company; every item disbursed is scrutinized and no item allowed to pass unless it has been expended solely for the business of the Company. The same Committee once a year go through all the securities of the Company. They take up the investments made during the past year. The mortgage is produced and is compared with the application and the Minute book of the Company to see if the land embraced in the mortgage is the same as that upon which it was agreed to lend, that the amount mentioned in the mortgage, the terms of payment and rate of interest and the parties agree with the application and the Minute Book. Also the mortgage is examined to see that it is properly signed by the parties and properly registered. The Mortgage Ledger is also examined to see if all these particulars are entered in it. If all is found to be correct then some member of the Committee puts his initials upon the mortgage, so that on its production at any future time and the initials being found there, the Committee know that the above investigation has been made. In addition to this, once a year all the debentures and mortgages are gone over with the Mortgage Ledger and Auditors' detailed statements. Each security is produced and handled by the Committee, the Mortgage Ledger is compared with the Auditors' list and statements to see if they agree as to the amounts still unpaid. Each mortgage account is looked at to see if it is in arrear, and for what length of time. By these means the Board endeavor to keep a check upon the investments of the Company.

I would ask to be permitted to make a few remarks personal to myself. I have now been a member of the Board for twenty-one years and can say I have "come of age." I am proud to have been for such a length of time a member of such a prosperous and reliable institution, and in a manner to have "grown up" with the Company. To show the growth since I became a Director, the present assets exceed by $1,500,000 the total insurance in existence when I joined the Company, and the present annual income of the Company is almost one million dollars more than the total assets of the Company at that time. I hope those who will be here twenty-one years hence will find, as I venture to predict they will, that there has been as great if not a greater progress.

The Hon. Mr. Justice Britton, and Messrs. Bruce, Clement, Somerville and Kidd, Manager Wegenast, Messrs. Earl, Burrows, Sipprell, Linton, Stewart, Mills, Muir, Scripture, Ormsby, Chisholm, Curtin, Moore, Dr. Webb and others, having spoken, and the retiring Directors having been re-elected, the meeting adjourned.

The Directors met subsequently, and re-elected Mr. Robert Melvin President; Mr. Alfred Hoskin, K.C., First Vice-President, and the Hon. Mr. Britton, Second Vice-President of the Company for the ensuing year.

RUSSIA AND FRANCE REPLY TO BRITAIN AND JAPAN--ENGLAND MUST WAKE UP

Boers in British Uniforms—In Some Cases a Penalty Has Been Inflicted

PRINCE OF TECK SAILED FOR SOUTH AFRICA TUESDAY

The Rebellion in China—Imperial Troops Repeatedly Defeated

London, March 20.—The reply of Russia and France to the Anglo-Japanese alliance is not regarded here as a menace. It implies no more than that the Franco-Russian alliance extends to the far east. The only newspaper that sees danger in it is The Daily Mail. The Morning Post, on the other hand, says it is a declaration which all the world may note with equanimity. Not the least important point of the communication is the emphatic manner in which France and Russia are spoken of as allied. The concluding paragraph of the note bears a strong resemblance to article one of the Anglo-Japanese treaty, which asserts that it will be admissable for either contracting party to take such measures as may be indispensable in order to safeguard its interests if threatened by the aggressive action of any third power or by disturbances arising in China or Korea.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS.

London, March 20.—The passage of the aged pensioners bill, on its second reading yesterday in the Commons, was a singular tribute to the influence of Mr. Chamberlain. The measure followed the lines laid down by him in many public speeches, and aimed to provide pensions for workers above the age of 65, with the cooperation of the poor law guardians and without discouraging habits of thrift. Mr. Greene moved the second reading in a candid speech which estimated the cost of the scheme at ten or twelve million pounds, divided between the Treasury and the local authorities, and there was no serious opposition on either side of the House. While neither local rates nor the Treasury are in a state for so large an addition to the public burdens, there was a general disposition to sanction the general principle of old-age pensions, and Government supporters were willing to make political out of this radical measure of State Socialism. The third reading is not expected, but Mr. Chamberlain's favorite social policy has received general recognition.

ARE TORPEDO DESTROYERS DANGEROUS.

Great diversity of opinion was disclosed at the session of the Institute of Naval Architects on the subject of the unseaworthiness and the utility of the torpedo flotilla. Experts, especially as a naval enquiry has been ordered, considered it premature to condemn torpedo destroyers as dangerous craft.

ENGLAND TOLD TO WAKE UP

The Prince of Wales' address, in declaring the National Physical Laboratory at Bushey Park open yesterday, was the most interesting he has delivered since his famous speech in the Guildhall on his return from the tour of the empire. He again told England to wake up; her commercial supremacy was threatened, and the only way to maintain it was, he said, to give greater facilities for furthering the application of science to commerce and manufacture.

AMMUNITION FOR THE BOERS.

New York, March 20.—There was a rumor current to-day that a number of cases of cartridges were on the pier at the time of the fire last night which destroyed the Phoenix Line pier at Hoboken, the steamer British Queen and several lighters, the total damage amounting to $1,200,000. The rumor said that the cartridges were destined for the use of Boers in South Africa. According to the report, the cartridges were to have been shipped to Antwerp, and from there to their destination. A member of the Hoboken fire department said to-day that he saw the boxes of cartridges on the pier, and that he heard a number of explosions. These are said to have occurred after the fire was under control about midnight. Superintendent Mason of the Phoenix Line said that as far as he knew there were no cartridges on the pier.

The British Consul-General said to-day that he had no information that any such munitions for the Boers were on the ship. He regarded the report as improbable, because the British Queen was to sail for Antwerp, not South Africa.

PRINCE OF TECK FOR THE CAPE.

London, March 20.—Prince Francis of Teck sailed for South Africa yesterday to resume his duties with the remount department of the army. Prince Francis of Teck is a brother of the Princess of Wales and a brevet major of the 1st Royal Dragoons. The Prince served in the remount department in South Africa in 1899 and 1900. He was born in 1870.

DEMOCRATS AND THE BOERS

Washington, D. C., March 20.—The Democratic members of the House, at a caucus held to-night, unanimously adopted resolutions declaring that Congress should express the sympathy of the American people for the struggling Boer republics, and pledging themselves to use their utmost endeavors to "force" the committees to report resolutions expressive of such sympathy in order that Congress might have an opportunity to act.

BOERS IN BRITISH UNIFORMS

London, March 20.—In the House of Commons to-day, Mr. Brodrick said, regarding the Boers wearing British uniforms, that all civilized nations punished such action with death. Boers captured wearing British uniforms were liable to be shot after trial by court-martial. Lord Kitchener, in certain cases, had already inflicted that penalty.

THE REBELLION IN CHINA.

Hong Kong, March 20.—The rebels in the southern provinces continue to defeat the imperial troops sent to subdue them. General Ma and Marshal Su report that it is impossible to suppress the rebellion with the troops at their disposal, and the Viceroy of Canton has requested Yuan-Shi-Kai, the Viceroy of Chili, to send reinforcements overland from Chili. The imperial troops have been defeated at Sekshing and at Papta, in Yunnan Province. The rebels hold the town and district of Foochuen, 20 miles northwest of the prefectural town of Yunnan. They have also captured the towns of Sinchoo and Yungning.

RHODES SLIGHTLY BETTER.

Cape Town, March 20.—A bulletin issued at midnight last night said that Cecil Rhodes had taken nourishment; that he was slightly stronger, and that at that time he was sleeping.

The exceptional coolness of the weather, and the free administration of oxygen contributed to the patient passing a quiet night last night. He no longer reads. Mr. Rhodes was much pleased at the receipt of messages of sympathy sent to him by King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

CHINA MAKES PAYMENT

Her First Instalment on War Debt Promptly Paid—Chinese Slain by Russians

Pekin, March 20.—The Bankers' Commission to-day accepted the February instalment, amounting to 1,820,000 taels, of the Chinese indemnity, greatly to the satisfaction of the Ministers of the Powers.

There is great dissatisfaction at Canton at the extortionate taxes which Mandarins are levying under the pretext of meeting the instalments of the Chinese indemnity. The merchants have petitioned the Viceroy for redress, asserting that they fear the action of the Mandarins will lead to an uprising.

Another fight occurred March 3, between Russian troops, and 300 Tunguses, north of Hubeaday, Manchuria. Two hundred Tunguses were killed, including their leader. Two Russians were wounded.

ENGLAND WILL NOT REDUCE CLAIM.

Washington, March 20.—Great Britain, it developed to-day, is the stumbling block in the way of the pro rata reduction of the claims of the Powers against China in order to place the total within 450,000,000 taels. Germany has consented to lessen her claim, but the British Government believes that as it demanded an amount only sufficient to cover its actual expenditures and losses during the Boxer revolt, it should not agree to any modification. The ostensible reason for British obstinacy is to force Germany to withdraw her troops from Tien Tsin.

The State Department approves the action of the Foreign Ministers in Pekin in directing the Bankers' Commission at Shanghai to accept the February instalment of the Chinese indemnity. In view of the action of the diplomats in referring to their Home Governments the question of disposal of excess of 12,500,000 taels, above the 450,000,000, which China has agreed to pay. Secretary Hay will have another opportunity to renew his proposal for a pro rata reduction.

LAW IN THE ARCTIC

Canada Will Probably Take Immediate Steps

American Violators of the Law Will Probably be Punished—Scandalous Condition of Affairs in the Far North

Ottawa, March 19—For half a century American vessels have had a monopoly of the whale fishery of the western Arctic ocean. By wintering near the mouth of the Mackenzie river they were enabled to make an early start when the spring freshets drive the ice seaward from the estuary of the river. During their winter rendezvous the whaling crews do a trading business with Indians and as the chief article of barter is cheap whisky a systematic demoralization of the Indians is the result. The attention of the Canadian Government has frequently been called to the necessity for putting a stop to this illicit traffic and its baneful effects upon the natives, but practically nothing has been done in that direction.

The subject is again brought forcibly to the notice of the government in the report of the mounted police which Sir Wilfrid Laurier laid on the table of the house a short time ago. Commissioner Perry says:

"Since my last report further information has been received as to the operations of the whaling fleet which last year wintered some 300 miles east of the mouth of the Mackenzie river.

"Tyranny over the Indians, debauching the Indian women, illegal trading and lawlessness among themselves demand the assertion of our laws. A small, powerful steamer is needed, which can navigate the Mackenzie and, if necessary, go into the open sea. The cost of carrying law and order into the Arctic regions may cause hesitation, but where our territory is being violated and our people oppressed, cost should be the last consideration."

Poor Mr. Kruger Still Relies Upon Divine Help in War in South Africa

RUSSIAN POLICY NOT TOUCHED CHINA IS DISSATISFIED.

Kruger Says Boers would not Give Up without Repudiating God

London, March 20.—The Paris correspondent of The Times quotes a statement made by Mr. Kruger in an interview granted to Le Matin. He said he still relied upon divine help, and prayed God to add to his miracles and favor the Boers, and dispel the blindness of the British. He said British offers of peace were unacceptable because the Boers could not abandon their God-given independence. "We could not give up without repudiating God, and meriting His maledictions."

CHINA DISSATISFIED.

London, March 20.—Dr. Morrison, writing from Pekin to The Times, says that the Russian Minister at Pekin is now trying to persuade the Chinese that the Russo-Chinese bank negotiations are of no concern to Russia. He has modified his terms since the publication of the Anglo-Japanese treaty. Russia promises to withdraw all her troops from Manchuria within eighteen months if the state of the country permits. The Chinese are dissatisfied with the qualifying phrase. Russia waves her stipulation forbidding Chinese troops the use of artillery, consents to restore the Niu Chwang Railway if paid five hundred thousand dollars for expenses while holding it, and agrees to vacate Niu Chwang on the abolition of the Tien Tsin provisional government.

PAN-GERMANIC AGITATION A NUISANCE.

London, March 20.—A despatch from Berlin to The Times says that the Pan-Germanic agitation is beginning to be regarded as a public nuisance, and is assuming the aspect of a treasonable conspiracy against Austria, akin to the machinations in Africa which led to the present war. The leaders of the movement recognize that it is hopeless to try and do anything in the United States, but are casting envious eyes on the British colonies.

St Petersburg, March 21.—The Official Messenger in publishing to-day the Franco-Russian declaration, relative to the Anglo-Japanese convention, accompanies it with an official statement as follows "The Imperial Government received with the most perfect calm the announcement of the Anglo-Japanese agreement. The principles which have guided Russian policy since the beginning of the disturbances in China remain, and will remain invariable. Russia insists on the maintenance of the independence and integrity of China, a friendly, neighboring country, as well as that of Corea. Russia desires the preservation of the status quo and general peace in the Far East by the construction of the great Siberian railroad, together with its branch line through Manchuria, towards a port always ice free. Russia aids in the extension in these regions of the commerce and industry of the whole world. Would it be to her interest to put forward obstacles at the present time? The intention expressed by Great Britain and Japan to attain those same objects which have invariably been pursued by the Russian Government, can meet with nothing but sympathy in Russia, in spite of the comments in certain political spheres and in some of the foreign newspapers, which endeavored to present in quite a different light the impassive attitude of the Imperial Government towards a diplomatic act at which in its eye does not change in any way the general situation on the political horizon."

NOT A MENACE.

New York, March 21.—The reply of Russia and France to the Anglo-Japanese alliance is not regarded here as a menace, says the London correspondent of The Tribune. In implies no more than that the Franco-Russian alliance extends to the Far East.

The only newspaper that sees danger in it is the Daily Mail. The Morning Post, on the other hand, says it is a declaration which all the world may note with equanimity. Not the least important point of the communication is the emphatic manner in which France and Russia are spoken of as allies.

IRISH WILL FIGHT SAYS WM. REDMOND

The Irish Leader Makes no Bones About Saying So

TO BATTLE FOR FREEDOM

Will Throw Off the English Yoke as Soon as Opportunity Offers

Messrs Wm. Redmond, M.P. and Joseph Devlin, M.P., Make Strong Speeches in the United States.

Philadelphia, March 21.—In the presence of an audience that packed every inch of available space in the Academy of Music last night, while thousands outside were clamoring for admission, William Redmond and Joseph Devlin, the Irish Nationalist members of Parliament, who came to this country to seek financial support for the Irish cause, made stirring appeals, which met with immediate response. Hundreds of dollars were subscribed in less than five minutes by the 700 or more persons on the stage, and hats passed through the audience were returned filled with cash and pledges. The total received was about $7000.

In the lower right-hand proscenium box sat Archbishop Ryan, and with him were Bishop Horstman, of Cleveland, and Bishop Prendergast. Without the building both Broad and Locust streets were black with people, and it was necessary to send speakers to the front of the building to address them.

Long before the hour for the meeting to be called to order Broad street as far north as Oxford was lined on both sides by thousands awaiting the distinguished speakers. The latter rode in open carriages, and the order of the procession was as follows:

Third Regiment Band.
Troop of Calvary.
St Joseph's Bugle and Drum Corps.
St. Joseph's Cadets.
Battery of Artillery, under the command of Captain Lewis A. Mellon.
St. Ann's Fife and Drum Corps.
St. Ann's Cadets, under the command of Captain Robert M. Brookfield U.S.A.
Polish National Guards, under the command of Captain Joseph F. Slomkowski
Band of the Industrial Home.
Emmet Guards, under the command of Captain J. Mallnery.
First Regiment Band.

When Mr. Redmond, on one arm of Governor Stone, and Mr. Devlin on the other, appeared at the head of the line of vice presidents the applause was deafening and lasted fully five minutes. No time was lost in calling the meeting to order. Michael J. Ryan named Governor Stone as presiding officer and on taking the chair he said: "Ireland has been captured, but Ireland has never been conquered. There is one thing about the Irish people that goes to the hearts of other people, and that is that in these hundred years there has never been lost the desire, the hope and the belief in the accomplishment of their ultimate freedom. If there is one thing that causes every lover of patriotism to sympathize with Ireland it is because every one believes it is worthy. I know that Ireland has the sympathy of the American people and I know that the men who are fighting for Ireland's freedom in Parliament have the sympathy of the great American heart."

Mr. Redmond's Speech

Mr. Redmond outlined the accomplishments and purposes of the United Irish League. It is more potent than its predecessor, the Land League, he said, because the Protestants of the North are shoulder to shoulder in it with the Catholics of the South.

"We have made and unmade British Ministers," he said. "We can do so again. We have deranged the machinery of Parliament and stopped the passage of British reform. We can do so again. No rules or regulations which can be framed can possibly destroy the influence of eighty-three independent Irishmen in the British Parliament. The greatest question in England to-day is how to get rid of us. We believe that by honest action we can force the Irish question upon the attention of England and the world most effectively in England's own Parliament.

"I sometimes hear it said that by physical force alone Ireland can achieve her freedom. It may, indeed, come to that in the end. The Irish people would, in my opinion—and I believe in their own opinion—be quite justified in resorting to arms, did opportunity offer.

"British rule in Ireland is in all its aspects so intolerable to-day that the people would be quite justified in resorting to any means of freeing themselves from it. The difference between the members of the National party and those who adhere to the doctrine of physical force is, as far as I know, merely a question of time and opportunity.

"The people at home, if they got the chance, would need no spurring from this or any other country to fight bravely for their freedom. They have learned, however, bitter lessons in the past, and they know that it would be to the interest of England that the unarmed Irish people should place themselves in a false position.

"Perhaps, as I have said the opportunity may come. If any man or set of men can make the opportunity, I am sure all Ireland, or the great majority of the people, would wish them success. I certainly would myself.

"We are fighting in Parliament, and if we do not succeed there, eventually, we shall try when we are able to restore."

His words were lost in the uproar that these remarks occasioned. A like outbreak greeted a reference to Lord Methuen's defeat.

Weather Notes

A storm on the New England coast has changed snow and rain as far west as Montreal, elsewhere the weather has remained fair. The Northwest is mild, and the cold wave which is still centred over Lake Superior is gradually moderating.

WESTERN CANADA DOG SHOW

Over 500 Dogs on Exhibition in Winnipeg Dog Show

(Special Telegram to The Times.)

Winnipeg, Man., March 20 — The seventh annual exhibition of the Western Canada Kennel Club opened to-day under auspicious circumstances. The show, from present indications, will be the most successful ever held in this part of Canada. The total number of thoroughbred canines on exhibition exceeds 500, and every breed known to fanciers is included in the list. The entries come from every section of the Dominion and the United States, and universal interest has been aroused in them. Of particular note are the displays of King Charles, Blenheims and black and tans. Judging was commenced soon after the opening to-day under the direction of James Cole of Kansas City.

C. P. R.'S NEW EQUIPMENT

The Immense Order Which the Big Railway Gives for Rolling Stock

Montreal, Que., March 21 — The Canadian Pacific officers have just compiled the annual order for rolling stock, which is the largest in the history of the company, and will bring its freight car service alone up to 30,000, and its locomotives to about 1,000 in round numbers. Of the eighty new locomotives the great majority will be of the heavy Atlantic type, with ten drivers and weighing an average of 160 tons. They will all be built in the company's shops in this city.

SECOND DEMAND ON TURKEY

Brigand Abductors of Miss Stone Must be Captured

London, March 20.—A despatch from Constantinople says that the United States Legation sent a second note to the Porte yesterday, pointing out that Miss Stone had been captured, her ransom paid, and she and Mme. Tsilka had been released, all in Turkey. The brigands, therefore, must be captured, and Turkey ought to capture them.

The note denied that the legation ever requested the authorities to reduce their vigilance on the frontier.

Items of Interest

Cape Town, March 21.— Cecil Rhodes passed a better night. He slept more than for some time past. Consequently there is a distinct improvement in his condition to-day.

PASSENGERS AT SOUTHAMPTON

TO CLIMB MOUNT EVEREST

Geneva, March 21.—One of the most interesting ascents made for the past decade will be attempted this year in the Himalayas by a party of English-Swiss and Austrian mountaineers. The objects of the expedition is mainly a sporting ambition to break climbing records, but scientific observations will also be made. The Englishmen are Messrs. Crowley, Knowles, and Eckenstein, the last of whom was Sir William Conway's companion in his last Himalayan expedition. The Austrians are Doctors Pfannel and Wessely, and the Swiss is Dr. Jacot, of Neuchatel. The party left Trieste on March 3 and arrive at Bombay to-day. They hope to leave Askole, in Kashmir, by the end of May. Porters and Swiss guides have already been engaged. The first peak to be attempted will be the Godwin Austen, 28,250 feet, also known as K2 or No. 2 on English maps. Afterwards the party will attempt Mount Everest, 29,000 feet high, the highest mountain in the world. The highest point yet attained in the Himalayas is Pioneer Peak, 21,000 feet, climbed by Sir Wm. Conway in 1892.

DRUNK IN A HOTEL.

London, March 20.—Henry Oswin Bell, license-holder of the Grey Arms, Broomhill, Newcastle, one of the branches of Earl Grey's Public House Trust, was charged at Morpeth Petty Sessions yesterday with permitting drunkenness on his premises. In a previous case a small fine had been inflicted on a collier aged seventy-two who, according to a policeman, was very drunk when he left the house, and had to be helped home by the officer. After hearing the evidence, the bench came to the conclusion that the barman had not sufficient knowledge of the old man's condition, and dismissed the case.

A LIVELY TIME OVER THE BOER WAR DILLON SUSPENDED FROM HOUSE.

The Irish Nationalist Called Colonial Secretary Chamberlain "A Damned Liar."

DISSCUSSING THE AFFAIRS IN SOUTH AFRICA

Dillon Said Boers Who were Fighting with British were Traitors—House was Stunned by the Remark

London, March 20.—One of the liveliest scenes witnessed in the House of Commons since the palmiest days of the Irish Nationalists ended this afternoon with the suspension of John Dillon. During the discussion of South African affairs, the Liberal leader, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, vigorously protested against the Government's conduct in uttering "malignant slanders" in calling the Liberals "pro-Boers."

The Colonial Secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, in the course of an equally incisive reply, said he desired deliberately to accuse Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman of losing no opportunity for slandering his countrymen, the soldiers and the Government, consequently, the "malignant slanders" had come from the Opposition side.

The Speaker, Sir William Court Gully, here intervened, and declared that the term, "malignant slanders" was unparliamentary.

Both Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Mr. Chamberlain thereupon withdrew the words, amid cheers.

Mr. Chamberlain, proceeding, referred to the Boers who are fighting on the British side, when John Dillon, (Irish Nationalist), interjected: "They are traitors," on which Mr. Chamberlain retorted:

GREAT CONFUSION.

A scene of great confusion ensued. When order was partially restored Mr. Dillon demanded a ruling on Mr. Chamberlain's words.

The Speaker said:

"An honorable member spoke of soldiers serving under the British flags as traitors. I deprecated the interruption, and I deprecated the retort of the other member."

Mr. Dillon then said:

A dead silence followed this remark. Such unparliamentary language seemed to stun the House.

The Speaker invited Mr. Dillon to withdraw the expression, but the latter said:

"I will not withdraw."

"Then I must name you," said the Speaker.

The Government leader, A. J. Balfour, then said:

"I beg to move that Mr. Dillon be suspended from service in the House."

The motion was carried by 248 to 46 votes.

Mr. Dillon, immediately, by direction of the Speaker, left the House, amidst wild Nationalist cheers, and Mr. Chamberlain resumed his speech.

CHAMBERLAIN'S POLICY IN SOUTH AFRICA

He Proposes to Educate the Boers to Respect the British

HIS PROBABLE FOREIGN POLICY DEFINED

Should He Succeed Lord Salisbury, as is Expected—His Wonderful Personality

London, March 20 — Should Mr. Chamberlain succeed to the Premiership, he will come into power as the representative of the great central party He will bring with him the undeniable force of Australian, Canadian and Cape opinion. The business men of the country approve of Mr. Chamberlain. Alone, among the twenty members of the Cabinet, he is recognized as a model of efficiency. Lord Selborne, who was his under-secretary for five years, since he became First Lord of the Admiralty, has carried into the administration of the navy many of Mr. Chamberlain's methods. The consequence is that more has been done for the navy in the last twelve months than for many years previously. The country attributes the efficiency of Lord Selborne to the training he enjoyed under Mr. Chamberlain. Having regard, therefore, to the weight attached to Colonial opinion, to the general demand for efficiency created by our failures and defeats, and to the fact that Mr. Chamberlain, more than any other Minister, has borne the burden and heat of the day during the trying times through which we are passing, it is reasonable to expect that on Lord Salisbury's retirement Mr. Chamberlain will become Prime Minister in the event of Mr. Balfour's health preventing him from accepting the appointment.

Some critics allege that Mr. Chamberlain's foreign policy would be aggressive and calculated to lead to war. Those who were present at the Leicester luncheon, when, fresh from an interview with the German Emperor, he pointed to the desirability of an understanding between the United States, Germany and Great Britain, will recognize that Mr. Chamberlain's views and those of Mr. Whitelaw Reid, as expressed in his speech at the great dinner given by the American press to Prince Henry of Prussia, are practically identical.

Mr. Chamberlain, like everyone else, must be judged by his deeds. Perhaps the most effective contribution to a knowledge of what he has done is to be found in the present state of the organization of the Orange River Colony. It is known that between Lord Milner and the military authorities at the Cape there existed a year ago a profound difference of opinion as to whether civil organization should be begun, or whether it should wait until the conclusion of the war. In the controversy, Mr. Chamberlain threw the whole weight of his influence on the side of Lord Milner. The result of this momentous decision is now known. Mr. Alfred Lyttelton, K.C., speaking at a dinner this week, explained in a speech of extreme interest the actual state of affairs to-day.

First as to education. There are more Boer children being educated in South Africa to-day than at any period previous to the beginning of the war. Both the children and their parents show themselves eager to acquire education. The Minister of Education in the Cape Colony, Mr. Sargeant, is a man after the heart of Napoleon or of Stein. He has appreciated the immense possibilities of bringing peace to the country through the teaching staff. In a most eloquent and moving memorandum of instructions to the teachers Mr. Sargeant points out to them the importance of their task. He successfully inspired them with enthusiasm on the subject to such an extent that the relations existing between the Boer children and the English teaching staff are of the happiest description. It is not generally known that the plan of introducing education before the end of the war was originally due to Lord Methuen. It occurred to this gallant officer that, although he was fighting the Boer fathers of families by day, there was nothing to prevent the introduction of English culture to the children at night. He accordingly sent to the Cape for two or three teachers, who resided in his camp and taught the Boer children under difficult conditions. The experiment was so successful that it was generally adopted, and the results already are beyond the most sanguine estimates of the authorities on the spot.

The next point to be noted is the act that the army north of the Orange river is now almost entirely supported by the products of local cultivation, with the single exception of meat. The expenditure of the army has gone down from nearly two millions to three-quarters of a million sterling a week, almost wholly owing to the policy of introducing settled cultivation within the areas protected by the blockhouses and in the neighborhood of the larger towns. Railway construction is proceeding apace. More stamps are being dropped at the Johannesburg mines every month, and although disasters still take place, the general trend of events in South Africa is most hopeful. Mr. Lyttleton, speaking as a recent visitor, absolutely declines to believe in the permanent hatred of the races after the war is over. The principal reason for the antipathy between Boer and British before the war was that the Boer did not respect the British nor the British the Boer. Each side has now acquired respect for the other. Respect is the primary condition of friendship.

THE TIMES LETTER-BOX

REEVE MALONEY SPEAKS

To the Editor of The Times:

Sir,—In your issue of the 12th I noticed an item referring to the Douro township printing in which I am accused of disregarding the instructions of the Council. It is true I was appointed to let the contract for the printing and get prices from the different printing offices. Now, Mr. Editor, you say I did not ask you for prices and also that you were prepared to put in a low tender. Well, at the meeting of the Council at which I was appointed to get the printing done, the clerk produced an application and also a tender from The Times Printing Company offering to do the printing at same prices as last year, so you will see it was not necessary to call on you for prices. Now with regard to your correspondent stating that I gave the printing to the Examiner for political reasons it should be evident to you and your correspondent that such was not the case, as you have been favored with the township printing four years out of the last six years and the Review one year, and as the Examiner's prices were quite satisfactory I 'thought' it was their turn this year. Now, I think your correspondent must feel a little sore over some previous action of the Council where the township was concerned, and evidently he wants you to do some fighting for him while he backs into his hole, but I would advise you to let your correspondent fight his own battle and you keep out of the ring. Thanking you for space in your columns,

DENNIS MALONEY, Reeve.

Douro, March 18.

P.S.—Hoping you will be good enough to supply those same gentlemen with a free copy of this week's Times, as you did of your issue of the 12th.

Ans.—In regard to the above, our friend, Mr. Maloney, is altogether wrong. On Jan. 8th we wrote to Douro Council, pointing out that the work had been satisfactorily done by us, and asking for a continuance of the patronage. It would require considerable of an effort to twist this into a tender, as Mr. Maloney suggests. Besides, Mr. Maloney himself proposed that we write the letter to Douro Council. What are the facts? The reeve, it appears, was instructed by the Council to get prices from the Peterborough printers for the year's printing. Did he do so? So far as the Times is concerned, he did not. Mr. Dobbin, of the Review, cannot remember that he called on him, either. Then why did he give the contract to the Examiner in violation of his instructions? Was it, as our correspondent suggests, on account of political leanings? Why did he volunteer the statement made in our office (in the presence of two others) that the printing would again come our way this year, or words to this effect, giving as a reason that the service was very satisfactory, and then place it elsewhere? There must have been some powerful (?) influence at work to cause him to make this double shuffle. We leave our readers to figure it out for themselves. We have no wish to parade our personal affairs before the public, and would not do so if our duty to the people of Douro did not demand it. We are not fighting the battles of our correspondent, but simply defending ourselves. We imagine that our correspondent is quite able to speak for himself, and will no doubt do so at the proper time. In regard to the after clause, we may say, for Mr. Maloney's benefit, that our correspondent bought and paid for 30 extra copies of the paper, which were mailed to residents in Douro. Mr. Maloney had better try again. —Ed. Times.

Breaking the Bank at Monte Carlo.

SENATOR CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW recently visited Monte Carlo on his wedding journey, and watched Lord Rosslyn attempt to break the bank. "Everybody," he says, "is laughing at the earl's so-called system. He announced in England that he had an infallible system, and only needed $50,000 to make it go. People tumbled over each other to give him the money. He began playing with thousand-franc notes. When I left he was playing with five-franc pieces. I was told that all but about $5,000 of the $50,000 was gone. There is no such thing as breaking the bank at Monte Carlo. A man who has lived in the place merely as a resident for years told me the gambling-house paid returns as regular as dividends on the New York Central Railroad. I suppose there are ten roulette-tables, and each table is a bank with a capital of $120,000. If you win all its capital that particular table closes for the day to get a change of luck. That is all the bank-breaking there is. You would have to go through all the other tables—roulette, rouge-et-noir, and trente-et-quarante — before you close up the concern, and there are several of each. They are a dismal looking lot—the players. I never saw one of them smile, and the winners looked as miserable as the losers. Nobody gets away with any money, no matter how much he wins. At least it is very rare. I saw one man begin with a thousand-franc note—$200. He played and won—doubled his money; played, and won again, and again doubled. He kept on until he had won about $24,000. Then he started resolutely to go out. At the door he stopped, hesitated, and turned back. He sauntered over to the table, and looked on at the game for a while. Then he buttoned up his coat again, with great decision, and started out with a firm stride. But he could not — positively could not get through the door. The last I saw of him he was playing away again, and the $24,000 was going pell-mell back into the gambling-house coffers. I did see one man, however, win and go away with his money. He was a very rich man, as I happened to know, and just played for fun, not caring whether he won or not. He had astonishing luck. The same number came up five times in succession—an unusual thing. It made a great sensation in the room, and people gathered about. At the fifth turn of the number he swiped in everything from the table, and poked away the wads of French banknotes into his pockets right and left. He won about $6,000 in a very few moments."

Why Women Can't Throw Straight.

IT has often been a source of wonder to married men that their wives should invariably hit the cat, or some other inoffending object, when aiming bootjacks and other missiles in their direction. An explanation is now to hand, which, it is hoped, will add enlightenment, as well as consolation, to any benighted Benedict who has experienced this idiosyncrasy. It appears that the reason a woman cannot aim straight is on account of her collarbone being too large to enable her to acquire a free swipe of the arm. This simply shows that when kind Providence sent woman into the void for man to lavish his affections and earnings upon, everything was beautifully and systematically thought out. Had woman been physically constructed so that her shying powers were equal to those of man, husbands would have had a mighty busy time of it dodging things generally. Thanks to that same Providence, however, woman can still throw her lily-white arms round our manly necks and hit the bull's-eye every time.

No matter what the world may say
  About a woman throwing straight
Dame Nature built her just that way
  That man might dodge her when irate.
Her collar-bone consoles her still
  In formulating little plans
To "collar" and to "bone" at will
  'Most everything of simple man's.

Civilization.

"I SEE the ships," said The Eavesdropper, as he stole round the world to me, "on a dozen sides of the world. I hear them fighting with the sea."

"And what do you see on the ships?" I said.

"And what are they doing?"

"They are walking fiercely," he said—"some of them—walking fiercely up and down the decks before the sea."

"Why?" said I.

"Because they cannot stand still and look at it. Others are reading in chairs because they cannot sit still and look at it."

"And there are some," said The Eavesdropper, "with roofs of boards above their heads (to protect them from Wonder)—down in the hold—playing cards."

There was silence.

* * * * * * *

"What are you seeing now?" I said.

"Trains," he said—"a globe full of trains. They are on a dozen sides of it. They are clinging to the crusts of it — mountains—rivers—prairies—some in the light and some in the dark—creeping through space."

"And what do you see in the trains?"

"Miles of faces."

"And the faces?"

"They are pushing on the trains."

* * * * * * *

"What are you seeing now?" I said.

"Cities," he said—"streets of cities—miles of streets of cities."

"And what do you see in the streets of cities?"

"Men, women, and smoke."

"And what are the men and women doing?"

"Hurrying," said he.

"Where?" said I.

"God knows."—Gerald Stanley Lee in "Critic."

Anecdotal.

In "Lives of the 'Lustrious," a biographical dictionary just issued in England, it is said that when Hall Caine, whose resemblance to Shakespeare is well known, landed in New York on a trip to America, he was accosted by the late Ignatius Donnelly, a stranger to him, with the words: "Lord Bacon, I presume."

Some of the late Lord Randolph Churchill's friends once tried to have Lord Salisbury reinstate his erratic lieutenant. Salisbury listened to them patiently, and then asked: "Have any of you ever had a carbuncle on the back of your neck?" "No," was the reply. "Well, I have," retorted his lordship, "and I don't want another."

At a dinner-table in London the conversation turned on speaking. Curran stated that he could never speak in public for a quarter of an hour without moistening his lips. "I have the advantage of you then, Curran," said Sir Thomas Turton, a pompous and pretentious member of Parliament. "I spoke the other night in the House of Commons for five hours on the Nabob of Oude, and never felt in the least thirsty." "That is very remarkable, indeed," replied Curran, "for everyone agrees that it was the driest speech of the session."

Dr. Gordon, who was the first minister of the church in Jamaica Plain, about the year 1771, was a Scotchman, very stern and arbitrary in his manners, and precise and orderly in his own habits. The following anecdote of him is recorded in the family journal of one of his old parishioners: One Sunday, while preaching, he had begun to develop his theme with the usual "firstly," and got through that and "secondly." Then, turning the leaves of his manuscripts he said: "Thirdly," a second time "Thirdly," and again in great embarrassment, "Thirdly!" Just then a little girl in one of the front pews stood up and said: "Please, sir, thirdly flew out of the window some time ago."

John Townsend Trowbridge, one of the few surviving intimates of Walt Whitman, relates these anecdotes in his "Reminiscences" of the "good, gray poet" in the "Atlantic Monthly": "When, at dinner, preparing my dish of salad, I remarked that I was employed as his critics would be when his new edition was out, he queried, 'Devouring Leaves of Grass?' 'No,' I said, 'cutting up Leaves of Grass'—which amused him more, I fancy, than the cutting up did which came later. As the afternoon waned, and he spoke of leaving us, somebody placed a book before the face of the clock. I said: 'Put Leaves of Grass there. Nobody can see through that.' 'Not even the author?' he said, with a whimsical lifting of the brows.

Curious Bits of News.

Recently an American cyclist wheeled through La Mancha, in Spain, and in all that bleak region found no one who had ever heard of "Don Quixote," much less of Cervantes.

Dogs are to be used as river police on the Seine. At Gibraltar, curiously enough, dogs are mainly used for smuggling across the frontier, while on the St. Bernard they have once more been established as "first aid" to the frozen. Burnham, the famous scout, found that on the Klondike trail every kind of dog could be taught to draw sledges. The decoy dog and the blind man's dog share with the sheepdog the honor of earning their own living in recognized walks of industry.

Goubet, the French inventor of submarine boats, has devised a model of a boat intended to run under water and to convey passengers between France and England by means of a cable stretched across the Channel. Perhaps his strongest argument for an underwater passage is that the steadiness of motion would prevent seasickness, the traditional terror of the English Channel. The submarine boat "Fulton" lately lay undisturbed on the bottom off the Long Island coast while a tempest overhead sent many vessels to destruction.

The keepers of the big cobras in the Central Park Menagerie and the New York Zoological Garden do not find it easy to supply their venomous charges with the kind of food that they specially prefer. In their native land cobras live chiefly on smaller and less dangerous and objectionable snakes, but although every effort is made to collect harmless snakes to satisfy the appetite of the imprisoned cobras, at some seasons they have to be content with rats and mice, which they do not particularly like. Other varieties of captive snakes are fed mainly on toads, mice, rabbits and English sparrows.

Smoking in church is a Dutch custom. Dutchmen are such inveterate smokers that one of them is rarely seen without his pipe. He finds himself unable to deprive himself of the indulgence, even for the short period of a church service. A similar practice exists in several churches in South America. Smoking in churches in Great Britain is said to have been prevalent at the end of the sixteenth and the beginning of the seventeenth century. At one time smoking was carried to such an excess in Seville Cathedral that the chapter applied to the Pope for power to repress the abuse. Urban VIII., yielding to their wish, issued a bull, which was promulgated January 30, 1642. In Wales smoking in church was indulged in as late as 1850. In one church the communion-table stood in the aisle, and the farmers were in the habit of putting their hats upon it, and when the service began they lighted their pipes and smoked, without any thought of irreverence in the act.

The Lion of the Place.

OF the many artists who have depicted on canvas the tawny royalty of the king of beasts, few indeed have omitted the precaution of maintaining strong bars between themselves and their models—unless, indeed, the models were no longer living. The story is often told of the dinner-party given by Sir Edwin Landseer, at which the guests were startled by the entry of a stolid butler, who enquired respectfully, in a perfectly matter-of-fact tone:

"Beg pardon, but did you order a lion, sir? There's one down-stairs, just come, sir."

There was, indeed, but it was safely dead, and the body had been sent around from the Zoo as a complimentary offering from the authorities to Sir Edwin.

It remained for a woman artist, Rosa Bonheur, to own her own lions, make friends with them, and caress and handle them with absolute fearlessness and impunity. Indeed, at one time she accorded her great pets the freedom of her house and garden at By exactly as if they had been dogs; but this liberty she was later obliged to curtail out of deference to other people's nerves, although the lions never abused it or manifested the least ferocity.

It was certainly hard for the casual caller to arrive expectantly at the gates of the chateau and behold, as soon as the latch clicked, a huge yellow lion rear itself upon the terrace, stretching in a sleepy and amiable yawn a pair of jaws that could easily bite a man's head off.

"Oh, it is only one of Mademoiselle Rosa's lions," a neighbor—with intent rather to tease than to reassure—was once heard saying to an alarmed visitor who still hesitated on the safe side of the fence. "Monsieur need only be careful not to step on its tail; the tip is black, and one does not readily observe it. It is a friendly animal—quite friendly, I assure monsieur—though I do not know how it would behave if stepped on. One might do well to go tiptoe."

On another occasion a note from an admirer of the artist's work, a distinguished man not known to her personally, was delivered at the chateau.

"Mademoiselle," it ran, "I had promised myself in passing through By the pleasure of seeing the lion of the place, mademoiselle, and I therefore offer upon paper the tribute of my profound regard to the lion of the place I no longer expect to see."

Getting Your Own Jehu.

MUCH clamor and confusion have been done away with at the Metropolitan Opera House in New York by the installation of an illuminated carriage call system, which signals to waiting coachmen a half-mile distant. The proper numbers are flashed from a conspicuous place commanding the stretches of pavement where the carriages, cabs and automobiles formerly crowded and jammed the crossings after opera hours. Operators stationed at the entrances are given numbered checks, and, without the aid of the man with the fog-horn voice, calling one's vehicle is now only a matter of switching a series of levers, arranged somewhat like a typewriter board. The figures from 0 to 9 can be shown in each of the three large apertures, so that carriage calls may be numbered up in the hundreds and changed every two seconds. The principle of the device is similar to that of the shifting advertising legends written in colored incandescent lights. This innovation does away with all shouting for carriages, and gives the coachmen no excuse for delay and confusion, as they are able to read their numbers against the sky a half-dozen blocks away.

Miss Oldgirl—After all, what so graces the world as woman?—"Harper's Bazar."

The Late Queen's Autographs.

According to the London "World," great annoyance has been caused at court by recent sales of Queen Victoria's private letters and autographs, of which an immense number have been produced in the open market during the last few months. It is impossible to understand how such strictly confidential communications as the Queen's private letters to foreign sovereigns and to the Duchess of Gloucester and other members of the royal family can have come to be publicly offered for sale, unless they have somehow passed into the possession of the servants of the recipients.

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 206,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 209,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by R. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

The capital invested in electrical enterprises in the United States is estimated by "American Trade" at four billion dollars. We have the same authority for the assertion that these industries employ more than half a million persons. Almost half of the aggregate capital is represented by the electric railways, which, it would be safe to assume, employ a majority of the half-million persons. There were dismal predictions current ten or fifteen years ago of things that would befall certain classes of labor when electric cars came in; but the abolishment of the horse-car has probably thrown no one out of work—except the horse.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

"Thank you, I will go by myself," replied Daisy, nervously, thinking what a fright it would give her father to behold a stranger bringing her home at that hour, and in such a plight.

He clasped the little hand Daisy had extended to him, murmuring softly: "Am I never to have the pleasure of seeing you again?" and the winning, musical voice of this noble, handsome hero, who had rescued her at the peril of his own life, sent a thrill of pleasure through pretty Daisy's romantic, foolish, little heart.

"Would you really care to see me again?" stammered simple little Daisy, in girlish confusion, raising her blue eyes timidly to his face, then dropping them quickly and shyly.

"More than I can tell you," he answered, earnestly.

"You would be very welcome to come to the house," she said.

"It would be so much more romantic, if you would permit me to join you in your rambles, boating, or horseback riding. I am really ashamed to admit this to you, but it is quite the case. I do not like to be lionized for aiding you. On the contrary, I would be so happy if you would not mention our adventure to any one——"

"Of course I won't mention it, if you really wish it so," said Daisy, blushing and thoughtlessly —oh, so thoughtlessly —giving that fatal promise.

Again he thanked her warmly for her kindness, and begged to know when he should see her again, as he would be so anxious to know that she had not suffered any severe shock from the fright, or exposure to the water.

And Daisy answered, little dreaming of appointing a trysting-place. "My favorite nook is in the peach orchard, near the stone wall, just down at the end of the lane."

"What? so far away from Briar Hall?" he was about to ejaculate, but again he checked himself.

No doubt this capricious, pretty little heiress to three millions was on her way to visit some of the rustic beauties hereabouts, he told himself.

"Good bye, and thank you again for saving my life," she said gratefully.

Just then the door of the old farmhouse opened, and in another instant Daisy was lost to sight in the darkness.

For an hour Harold St. John stood quite motionless under the trees where she had left him. His better nature urged him to fly from the place, and never see that sweet face again.

"I will risk all by staying a little longer," he told himself, with reckless desperation. "I, who have always laughed at the notion of love, am in love at last. I will win her, if I can. When I leave here, she will go with me as my bride. Yes, she must be mine!"

CHAPTER III.

A Handsome Young Lover.

Daisy reached the house and crept up to her own room unnoticed.

When night had come on and the storm had set in, and Daisy had not returned, the farmer had grown quite uneasy about his favorite child.

"It's all nonsense to be alarmed over Daisy," both the girls declared. "No doubt she was at one of the neighbor's houses when the storm came on and they persuaded her to stay overnight."

"I suppose that must be the way of it," answered the farmer; "but somehow I feel strangely worried about the child to-night; I don't know why. I can't shake the impression off."

He drew his arm-chair closer up to the chimney-corner and lit his pipe, murmuring:

"Bless the child, God bless little Daisy."

It was a busy evening for both Hetty and Olive, for they were to start bright and early on the following morning with a jolly party of young folks for Briar Hall. And as they were to stay a fortnight, the old valise had to be packed with necessary clothing.

Everything was in readiness at last, and, looking up at the tall, old-fashioned clock ticking over the fireplace, Hetty saw that it wanted twenty minutes to ten.

"Oh, my!" she cried in dismay, "see how late it is, Olive; we must get to bed at once, or we'll never be able to get up early in the morning."

As they passed through Daisy's room on their way to their own chamber, Hetty started back with a little smothered cry, pointing toward the dainty white bed.

"Look, Olive!" she cried. "See, here is Daisy sound asleep in bed, after all the fuss father made over her absence."

"I might have guessed as much," laughed Olive. "She has stolen into the house and kept out of our way the whole evening so she wouldn't be asked to help us with our packing."

Farmer Gordon heard it all from his arm-chair in the sitting-room below.

Progress of Marconi.

There is a good deal of inspiration in the steady progress of Marconi, five years ago an utterly unknown man, with his faith in himself as his chief asset, to his present position of world-wide fame. The record is brief and marked by stages so well defined as to lend themselves easily to succinct statement:—

1896—In July Mr. G. Marconi, then 22 years of age, arrived in England from Italy, bringing with him a method of sending messages across space without intervening wires. The first trials in England were made between a room in the General Postoffice, London, and an impromptu station on the roof some 100 yards distant.

1897—Across Bristol Channel—8 miles.

1897—At Spezia, Italy, between a warship and the shore—12 miles.

1897—Between Salisbury and Bath—34 miles.

1899 (April 27)—Between England and France—32 miles.

1900—Between war vessels of the British navy up to 150 miles.

Popular Literature.

The popularity test of literature is so rapidly becoming, in the general estimate, the all-important test that the consideration of the reasons why people buy certain popular books is one of the interesting commercial as well as literary problems of the day. It is a curious fact that no theatrical manager can tell whether a play will fail or succeed, nor can the shrewdest publisher predict the fate of a book. "The public simply takes the bit in its teeth now and then," says the organ of one of the big New York publishing houses, "and runs away with the play or book—why, nobody knows. Last fall the public was running away with a novel called "The Right of Way"; and in order, if possible, to ascertain why, the publishers printed several advertisements in the daily press of the country asking readers to kindly say why they read this book. The replies were curious. From all over America and Canada came letters—1,486 in all. These were carefully tabulated with this result:—

711	said they had heard it favorably spoken of by friends who had either read it serially or in book form.
468	had seen it advertised or both advertised and reviewed.
114	had read reviews of it.
86	had read something the author had written previously and liked his style.
84	had read the serial themselves, and wanted the book in consequence.
23	replies gave frivolous reasons—"because they had the price," because "a fool and his money are soon parted," because "they were dull and wanted something exciting," because "they wanted something to talk about," because "they read all the new books," "they wanted to be up-to-date," etc., etc.

All this leaves the publisher pretty much where he started. But one thing is clear. While readers, in the long run, are the best advertisers, it is the review, and in some cases, as in this one, the serial publication at the outset, that sets them talking. In other words, the first vogue of the popular novel is due apparently to the man who reviews it."

Cause of Kingly Ills.

The pessimistic anticipations which are expressed from time to time with regard to the health of the King seem to have ceased for the time, but the undercurrent of alarm remains as strong, almost, as ever. Sensational reports are still going about, and find their chief sanction in the fact that the King has lost within a comparatively short space of time a brother and a sister from the fell disease which, according to popular rumor, he believes to be threatening his own life. Three of Queen Victoria's children, it will be remembered, died during her lifetime, and one other, the late Queen's eldest daughter, widow of the late German Emperor Frederick, has died only a few months after the death of her mother.

A recent article in The Dublin Freeman's Journal, perhaps of Ireland, which has attracted Justin McCarthy's favorable comment, insists that one main cause of illnesses which at present affect so many royal houses in Europe is to be found in the fact that "the sovereigns of Europe have disregarded the great law of nature which discountenances the marriage of near blood relations." The article goes on to say that while "there are in Europe over a score of Emperors, Kings and minor reigning sovereigns. . . . all but two are the descendants of James I. of England, the only child of the marriage of Darnley and Mary Queen of Scots."

The King of Sweden is the descendant of Marshal Bernadotte, one of the soldiers whom the great Napoleon raised from the ranks and set upon a throne, and the Prince of Montenegro, who became a sovereign ruler within the recollection of us all, are almost the only two exceptions. The result of this condition of things naturally is that European Princes and Princesses are compelled to marry "in and in"—in other words, their marriage consorts have to be found in families more or less nearly related to their own.

At present there is hardly a European imperial or royal family which is not oppressed by serious and boding illness of some kind, and it is only reasonable to say that some explanation of this fact may be found in this system of intermarriage. It is certainly a curious historical fact that the dynasty of the Stuarts, in many ways, the worst dynasty that ever ruled over England, should have so many descendants among the reigning houses of Europe.

"You are indeed my treasure,"
I gently said to her;
She blushed and said with pleasure:
"Then be my treasurer!"

Mrs. Durand's Backrobe.

My wife's brother, seven years old, was surely in France with his mother (said Mr. Leroy Durand of the St. Maurice Club), for we had received a cablegram on their arrival, but his voice seemed to be screaming on the shore of Lake Pazhegu[illegible] in the St. Maurice Wilderness of Quebec. That scream first reached our ears as we paddled around a bluff and lost hearing of the cascades. My wife, kneeling in the bow of our small canoe, stopped her paddle midway in the act of dipping it and turned her eyes about to me. They are always big, as you know, but they were twice as big then. That was the first time I had seen her look scared, and we had hunted together, east and west, north and south, for five years past. When we left New York two weeks earlier the voice of her little brother in a delirium of pain seemed still sounding in her ears, she told me, although he was so far convalescent as to have sailed on the "Etruria" a fortnight before we left for Quebec.

"Did you hear anything?" she asked me now.

"It was some tree creaking." I was trying to reassure her.

"Nonsense! There's no wind."

In fact, the lake was so calm that the up-side-down shores were as distinct as the right-side-up ones, except where trout wallowed in the mirror or a darting kingfisher touched it with spreading circles. White clouds were as fleecy in the lake as in the blue above us, and a perfect silence seemed to hold all the void between the counterparts, while our canoe ran on with a lessening gurgle as we listened for more than twenty seconds. Then the childlike, the almost infantile screams came again, seeming to reach from the far opposite shore by force of some poignant emotional quality of agonized weakness. They ended with a short note like a wail choked off by faintness or despair.

My wife knows the woods, and now she said, "It must be a young bear—a yearling—in a trap."

"Exactly. Chief Josef."

She took to paddling without a reply. She herself had given Chief Josef the order for a backrobe.

On we went at a faster stroke than she usually sets, straight for the bluff of the screams. For intervals of about a minute they lingered in our ears, and then spread through the blue.

"Come right along up and set him free," said my wife, as she landed.

"And what will his teeth and claws be doing while I'm springing the trap open?" I asked, when I had made the canoe secure.

"Then come and put him out of his pain."

"Certainly, my dear, I'll go. But you'll stay here in the canoe. It won't do you any good to see that bear."

"It might," she said, with self-reproach. "But, anyway, I'll never let a trap be set on my account again. Come!"

"But the old she bear may be up there, and you didn't bring your gun."

"Go up at once!" said my wife, who had never imagined that a man with a magazine rifle could get into serious trouble with bears.

So up I went; and as my wife always obeys my wishes when I'm not there, she got back into the canoe and pushed off a few yards to be ready, as I told her, in case I might "find bears too plenty on the hill."

But there was only the one, a young bear, as my wife had guessed—not a cub, not an infant, but a child—one of about seventeen or eighteen months. I wish I could quite forget that picture of despondency.

He was caught by the right fore-paw; he had dragged the trap till the clog caught between two small trees; then he had pulled the trap back and forth and round and round till the earth was worn bare of grass and twigs and the little bushes within his reach were stripped of bark. His mouth was down, biting gingerly at the twisted leg and muttering most piteously, as if that way of getting free were too unendurable. Then, as the crescendo of wailing screams began once more, his head was raised toward the sky as if the creature were veritably appealing to the Eternal Judge between man and beast.

At that instant I fired, and he sank down in death with a sense of relief, I do believe. He did not struggle in the least, so much had his strength been exhausted by the long ordeal. His trapped leg I found to be broken and twisted as a towel is twisted in wringing it; the edges of the bone had torn the muscles and tendons to a fibrous pulp.

I went back to the canoe, told my wife, "The bear was a yearling," and had no questions from her.

On the way to camp we passed the Montagnais wigwams, and I stopped to tell Chief Josef of shooting his bear.

"Dass good t'ing," said Josef. "I glad you keel heem. He's not bot' 'nough for mek good robe for de lady sleigh, but he's good maybe two dollar. Me, I hain' had no lucky wis bear since de lady is tol' me for trap some good skin. Tudder day, what you t'ink? I'll find in one udder trap great big paw what de sacre bear he's twist off, or bite off, maybe—anyhow, he's get away. Here's dat paw, lady," and he took the hideous relic from behind one of his wigwam poles and offered it to my wife.

She turned away, hit hard, and so pale that I put my arm around her to help her down to the canoe. Without a word we started—there seemed nothing to say. But when we had paddled a mile she stopped the stroke and turned her head over her shoulder with, "Leroy, did you understand about trapping before?"

"I'm glad you didn't—or I shouldn't like to think I'd married you," she said, in a conclusive tone.

Her Ideal Man.

SHE was a lovely chocolate-cream-box sort of a girl, with a gushing tenderness suggestive of butter on a hot day, and she was confiding in her "ownliest own" girl friend:

"The man that aspires to the privilege of pressing his moustache upon my rosebud lips," she began, firmly, "must be tall and stalwart as a pine tree in its prime."

"There is a slump in pine trees just at present," murmured her friend, inaudibly, but the rapturous girl swept on.

"I can see him now with the perfect Greek features of the Belvedere Apollo, surmounting a frame that is suggestive of the Farnese Hercules in repose."

"I fancy that Ouida has been there before," murmured the friend once more, "but there is no additional charge for heroics; so proceed."

"His mouth must be firm but kind, and his soft hazel eyes will twinkle with a smile that is at once sweetly serious and saucily sedate."

"I fancied that I was rather a connoisseur in smiles myself," remarked her friend, "but I do not recall at this moment seeing one of the precise nature you describe. But I will endeavor to imagine it. Fill in your hero, please."

"He must be strong and resolute, yet generous and tender to a fault; his face will light up with the fire of a strenuous passion when his feelings are aroused, and yet he will have his whole nature in such perfect control that he will never lose that grip of himself which is the leading characteristic of the true aristocrat."

"True aristocrats have been a falling market for some time past," remarked the friend in another aside; "but there is nothing like putting one's trust in Providence."

"He must be both truly religious and honestly manly, with the creed of the man of the world elevated to the standard of the highest religious principle."

"Right, oh!" said her friend relapsing into slang. "Muscular Christianity, ritualism and rowing, golf and godliness, are all the go. There may be a chance for you yet."

And then a dreamy far-away look came into the melting maiden's eyes as she concluded:

"He must have no eyes for any other girl in the world, but must feel the god of love spring into birth in his heroic soul as his glance meets mine, and we realise that we were predestined for each other from the beginning of the world."

At this moment the door opened, and the neatly-attired parlormaid announced "Mr. Jimkins is waiting to see you downstairs in the drawing-room, miss."

"What! that little red-haired bounder with a squint," enquired the dear friend, "who used to be always spooning round after Maud and Blanche, until they at last succeeded in getting it into his wooden little copper-topped coconut that his room was decidedly preferable to his company! Why, he's the mangiest little toad that ever—"

But the whole of her remark was lost upon the chocolate-cream girl, whose dainty feet were tripping downstairs three steps at a time, and before the drawing-room door closed the dear friend heard her begin "Dear Mr. Jimkins, how sweet of you to come on a day like this!" And then the door closed, and the dear friend was left to her own cogitations on the eternal feminine.

Back at the Old Home.

IRVING BACHELLER, the author, tells a story of having gone back, after many years' absence, to his old country home in the New England States. On the ruined doorstep of the old house stood the seedy remnant of a once noble race. He wore, amongst other things, one suspender and a seedy pair of trousers. The conversation ran like this:

"Glad to see ye," ses he. "Thanks," says I. "We've heerd about you," ses he, "and they say you done noble." "Well, and how are you?" says I. "Porely," ses he. "How's that?" says I. "Jest makin' a bare livin'," ses he. "Why don't you go away?" says I. "Can't," ses he. "Why not?" says I. "Mortgaged," ses he. "That's too bad," says I. "'Tis," ses he. "You don't seem to have much to live for," says I. "Don't want to live," ses he. "You might die," says I. "Can't," ses he. "Why not?" says I. "Mortgaged," ses he.

At this point they were joined by another old acquaintance of Mr. Bacheller's—a man who for years had held a mortgage on every acre of the country-side. "So you're Paul Bacheller's boy?" he said, after scrutinizing the visitor closely. "The same," said Mr. Bacheller. "Well," said Mr. Wallace, reflectively, "if your father had kept you on the farm it would not have looked as it does now." Up to this point the unfortunate farmer who was mortgaged had taken no part in the conversation. Now, however, a strange grin came across his face.

"That's right, Mr. Wallace," ses he. "If he had been kept on the farm the farm would hev looked better, but he'd hev looked a damn sight worse."

Cause For Madness.

"By George," said a man who was riding to the city in an early train, "I detest people who are so positive about everything."

"It is a disagreeable habit," the passenger who sat next to him admitted, "and it always pleases me to see such people confronted with proofs that they are in the wrong."

"Yes, it does me, too. My wife's cousin has been visiting us for several days, and he's one of those know-it-all fellows. You can't tell him anything. Yesterday morning he was reading, and I gave him a hint on how to pronounce a French word that he used. But do you suppose he was willing to admit that I knew more about it than he did?"

"I suppose not."

"No; he sat there, right at my own table, and argued with me for twenty minutes trying to show that I didn't know what I was talking about. Such people make me weary."

"Why didn't you get a French dictionary and prove to him that he was wrong?"

"Oh, I looked it up yesterday and found that I was mistaken myself; but what makes me mad is the fact that he was so positive about it."

The dinner party consisted of fourteen stomachs and two very interesting bodies.—N. Y. "Life."

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied as to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL

The Charge Against Fred Cousins will be Heard by the Judge

Fred Cousins, who is charged with setting fire to a dwelling house in Ashburnham, belonging to the late Mrs. Lucy, on Feb. 24, was up before County Magistrate Edmison in the County Police Court yesterday. The evidence of a couple of witnesses was taken, and the Magistrate ordered that Cousins be committed for trial. It is likely that he will be tried by the County Judge Mr. Morden, of Belleville, was counsel for the prisoner.

ACCIDENT AT CEREAL WORKS

Wm. Corbett, a Laborer, Has His Leg Broken by a Fall

Wm. Corbett, a laborer, at the Cereal Works, was engaged yesterday morning in taking down some scaffolding on the top storey when in some manner he tripped and fell about ten feet and fractured one of his limbs. He had a miraculous escape from falling further. He grasped a joist and held on until assistance came and lifted him out of his perilous position.

The ambulance was called and Corbett was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, where the fracture was reduced. Corbett is a young man about 30 years of age and married.

THE TOWN COUNCIL

Market By-law Amended — Permission Granted Power Co. to Place New Poles

The Town Council met in Special Session at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Those present were, Mayor Denne, Aldermen Best, Shortly, Cornery, McGregor, Rush Roger, and Edgcumbe.

A by-law to change the hour of opening market from 11 a.m. to 10 a.m. received its several readings and was passed.

The Board of Works granted permission to the Auburn Power Co to place new poles on Edinburg street to conduct electric power to Munns bakery.

A resolution was passed referring the matter of wages for street laborers to come up before the next meeting of the Council.

The Council then adjourned.

THE NEW RINK

Meeting Held Last Night—Large Amount of Stock Subscribed

A large number of those interested in the new skating rink met last night in the office of Hatton and Bradburn to discuss the progress already made. The chairman, Mayor Denne stated that a large amount of money was already subscribed for the company and that in a short time after a suitable site had been secured that work on the new building would be started.

The committee appointed to look at different sites and obtain options reported. Two places were chosen from the number, and the committee were authorized to find out the lowest price that the lots could be obtained for. A committee was appointed to meet a committee from the present rink company to discuss the taking over of the ground at present used for a rink.

"The rink that will be built is to be one of the best in the country. The ice will be about 75 x 175 raised galleries will be erected on either side and at one end. This will give a seating capacity of nearly 1700. The galleries will be so arranged that spectators can see the ice without any trouble.

Several of those present took out application forms for stock and it is [illegible] that in a few days more the amount required will be nearly subscribed.

"COFFEE HEARTS"

More Frequent Than Tobacco Hearts

Coffee drinking frequently affects the heart, and many cases of heart trouble are relieved or entirely cured by leaving off coffee and taking on Postum Food Coffee.

A good illustration is that of a lady who says, "I was troubled, for many years, with my heart, and at times would become unconscious. The children have many times run for the neighbors to come in and restore me by putting my feet in hot water and rubbing me.

Dr. Short frequently told me that coffee was a poison to me and was really the cause of my weak heart. I could not do without the coffee, though, but finally the doctor told me it was certain death if I did not give it up. This was about five years ago and I changed from coffee to Postum Food Coffee. My heart trouble gradually disappeared, and now I am entirely well, having never used a particle of coffee since my first cup of Postum.

I gave a little Postum to a lady friend one day to take home and try. She reported that she did not like it at all. I found that she boiled it only five minutes, so I gave her some more and told her to boil it 20 minutes. That was different. She has been using Postum now a long time.

KNOCKED DOWN BY A HORSE

Mrs. West Sustained Severe Injuries Last Evening on George Street

Mrs. West, a lady who resides on Geo. St. north, met with a rather severe accident last night. She was at the corner of George and Hunter streets, when she was knocked down by a horse and buggy and sustained a nasty cut over her left eye besides being badly shaken up. The injured woman was taken into Tully's drug store, and medical assistance summoned at once. Dr. Scott attended to her injuries and had the woman removed to her home in a hack.

Pain in the Back

makes life miserable. Can it be cured? Yes, in one night. Polson's Nerviline gives a complete knockout to pain in the back, for it penetrates through the tissues, takes out the soreness and pain, invigorates tired muscles, and makes you feel like a new man. Nerviline cures quickly because it is stronger, more penetrating, more highly pain-subduing than any other remedy. Don't suffer another minute, get Nerviline quick, and rub it in, for sure as you were born it will cure you. 25c.

ST. JOHN'S NEW RECTORY

The Collections at Easter to be Used for That Purpose

After the service in St. John's on Wednesday evening, a congregational meeting was held at which it was unanimously decided to devote the Easter offertory towards the nucleus of a Rectory fund. Several formal addresses were made in support of the movement. Rev. Geo. Warren warmly congratulated the congregation on the spirit evidenced and stated that long ago he had pressed the subject on Mr. Davidson's notice and he was pleased to see it now taking shape.

A Case too Difficult and Complicated for the Ordinary Physician

Paine's Celery Compound

The Marvellous Spring Medicine Rescues The Suffering Man

Mr. Forsythe Says: "I Am Pleased to Recommend Paine's Celery Compound; I Beleive It Is The Best Medicine in The World

Paine's Celery Compound surely and truly makes people well. It is the one true specific recognized and prescribed by eminent physicians for all diseases arising from a debilitated nervous system. As a spring medicine for the banishment of blood diseases, dyspepsia, kidney disease, liver complaint and rheumatism, it is unequalled in the world.

Mr. A. Forsythe, Manvers, Ont., says: "For two years I was in a low condition of health, suffering from nervousness, fainting spells, pain in the head, stomach troubles and loss of appetite. I was under the care of two doctors, but received no benefit from their treatment. I was then advised by a neighbor to use your wonderful medicine, Paine's Celery Compound. The use of this marvellous preparation soon produced the very best results. I am glad to report that my health is improved in every respect; I am stronger, sleep better, and my appetite is good and natural. I am pleased to recommend Paine's Celery Compound to all sick people, as I believe it is the best medicine in the world."

A VOLUNTEER IN TROUBLE

Fred Bradfield Enlisted for South Africa and did not Go—Now Under Arrest

Last December when volunteers were being enlisted in town to go to South Africa, Fred Bradfield, a young man from Douro, signified his willingness to go, and as he had some military experience in the 3rd Dragoons he was examined and accepted for service with the Canadian Mounted Rifles. When Bradfield went home and told his parents that he had enlisted his parents objected and pleaded with him to alter his mind. He could not turn a deaf ear to his mother and did not appear at the drillshed at the time set for the men to assemble there. Nothing more was heard of the incident until a few days ago when Lt.-Col. Edwards received the following communications regarding Bradfield's enlistment.

"To District Officer, Commanding M. D.W., re Fred Bradfield, 2nd C.M.R.

"The above named man was regularly enlisted in the corps above mentioned, and has illegally absented himself therefrom. You will be good enough to take the necessary steps to place him in military custody, reporting to the Adjutant General directly the required action has been taken. The man in question is most likely with his parents in Peterborough. By order,

"B. H. VIDAL,
Lt.-Col D.A.G."

"To Officer Commanding 57th Regt.,

"In accordance with the above be good enough to communicate with the Chief of Police and if possible secure the arrest of this man; also please report to me."

The latter request was signed by Col. Otter, Commanding No 2 Military District. The letters were handed to Chief Roszel and yesterday morning Constable Adams placed Bradfield under arrest. A message was sent to Toronto to advise Col. Otter that the man had been arrested and in reply received word that the man was to be held until an escort arrived from Toronto this morning.

The charge against Bradfield is rather peculiar. He is not charged with desertion but with absenting himself from the regiment after being duly sworn in. Mr. Bradfield is a young man who is highly respected and feels his position very keenly.

Why Catarrh is Fatal

Because it pours a flood of poisons into the circulation that saps strength and digestion so materially as to render the body incapable of resisting disease, and consumption is the result. Catarrh is quickly cured by Catarrhozone, a fragrant germ destroying vapor that goes to the root of the disease. It soothes and heals the inflamed mucous surfaces, clears the head and throat, and positively never fails to perfectly cure bronchitis, asthma, or catarrh. Nothing is so good for diseases of the respiratory organs as Catarrhozone. Large outfit $1.00, small size 25c. Druggists or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

A LONG STANDING CHARGE

John Irwin Arrested for Deed Committed Seven Years Ago

John Irwin, who was a resident of Peterborough a some six or seven years ago was greatly surprised yesterday when he was placed under arrest by County Constable Moore, on a warrant sworn out 7 years ago.

In May 1895 Irwin was charged with breaking doors windows and other fixtures in a house in Ashburnham. The incident is so old that the officials can scarcely remember the facts. Irwin might have been arrested at the time but the Magistrate did not want to be hard on him and only issued a summons for him to appear. Irwin left town at once and did not return for some time. He has been in town once or twice but only stayed a short time and kept well in doors. Last winter Irwin was working in town but the police were a few minutes too late to arrest him as he left when he heard they were coming.

His time came, however, yesterday morning when he was apprehended by Constable Moore, and at once taken to the Court House where police court was in session. The prisoner was remanded until Monday.

The warrant for the arrest has been carried so long that it is badly worn at the edges.

A True Brain Food

must replace the feeling of lassitude and mental tiredness by clearness and strength of mind. Not that it goes directly to the brain. That were foolish. The true brain food must be carried by rich, red blood. If mental fatigue worries and alarms you, look not to the brain but the stomach and assimilative organs. No remedy yet discovered possesses the marvellous brain strengthening power that Ferrozone has demonstrated in thousands of cases. Ferrozone does not stimulate the brain into a fitful glow, but by improving digestion, strengthening the nervous system, stimulating assimilation, giving new strength to the heart, it sends a stream of red, vitalizing blood to the brain. Thus it is a true brain food. Ferrozone is sold by Ormond & Walsh.

A BIG FEUD IN THE RANKS OF THE SALVATION ARMY

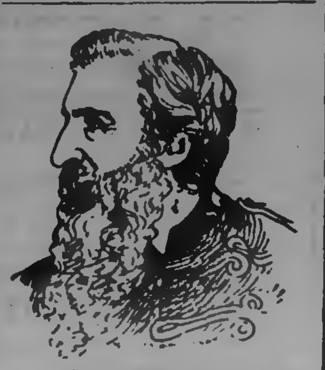
Herbert Booth Joins His Brother in Revolt Against Father

He is Commander in Chief of the Australian Division of the Army

Will Not Stand The Restrictions Placed Upon Him by the Old Father

New York, March 22.—News has been received by high officials in the Salvation Army here, that Herbert Booth, a son of General William Booth, the founder of the organization, has resigned his position as commander in chief of the forces in Australia and will take a post under the government.

Herbert Booth is the second son of the general to rebel at the restrictions placed upon him by his father and withdraw from the organization.



GENERAL BOOTH

INHERITS SIX MILLI

Was Taken from the Arms of a Dead Mother and Becomes an Heiress

New York, March 22.—Frank Conger of Brooklyn, who died suddenly a few days ago in a Detroit hotel, bequeathed to his adopted daughter, Oressa Stewart Conger, whom he took from the arms of her dead mother, a dozen years ago, in a railroad wreck at Hamburg, N.Y., an estate of $4,000,000. The girl is now fourteen years old, and for twelve years has been thought by many to be the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Conger. The will states that the girl, whose income will be $250,000 a year, was the daughter of the Rev. R. K. Stuart and wife, of Rochester, N.Y., both of whom were killed on March 5, 1890, in the wreck on the Lake Shore Road, at Hamburg, N.Y. George E. Allen, at that time General Northern Passenger Agent of the Erie Railway, Harry T. Jaeger of the same road, and Frank Conger, hurried from the drawing room coach to aid the victims. Over the wreckage they clambered until they were halted by the cries of an infant. It was some time before the child could be located, but finally Mr. Conger found her. On a pile of wreckage, half covered by drifting snow, lay a dead woman, and in her arms lay a beautiful babe. The baby was taken back into the warm drawing room car none too soon, for she was nearly unconscious. Mrs. Conger, an invalid, was in the car, and to her care the baby was given. Mr. Conger saw in the child's dress a Masonic pin. As he was prominent in the Masonic order, he made immediate arrangement for the care of the bodies of the father and mother of the child, took up a subscription among the Masons on the train, and when Buffalo was reached, supplemented it by another appeal to the members of the order in that city. He kept the child at the hotel in Buffalo where he and Mrs Conger remained until the coroner's inquest had been held. Releases were obtained from the grand parents of the babe, and Oressa was legally made the daughter of Mrs. and Mr. Conger. Mr. Conger bequeathed a life interest in his estate to the widow, and an annuity of $5,000 to the widow of a friend for whom he had provided since her husband's death.

“Heap Medicine Man”

And a Sure Loser.

It's no use, old man, you can keep on trying them, one after the other, but the same old haunted look in your eyes, the same lantern jaw and clothes that need a bicycle pump, will continue until you quit coffee.

There are hundreds of thousands of your type, sick and miserable half their lives, taking cathartic pills, stomach remedies, blood purifiers, tonics, and an endless string of remedies, some of which might be beneficial if you were not constantly pouring in a poison that keeps up your trouble, and that poison is coffee.

You say, "I ought to be able to drink coffee because I see others that use it and thrive," but, my dear man, your make-up may be so highly organized, or of such a character, that coffee, even one small cup a day, is an absolute poison to you.

You can prove whether or not it is, by leaving off coffee totally for a period of, say ten days or a month. During this time eat plain food and drink Postum Food Coffee.

If your stomach gradually begins to recover, pulse beats right, and you lose the uneasy feeling of ill-health, you can safely conclude that coffee has been a poison to you, and if you want to do things in this world—make money, be a success, round out your body, and win friends by your good nature and helpfulness—you want to throw over your coffee and take in return all these good things. It's just sense, plain, good, common sense.

Underneath all this are reasons of the most scientific character known to the physicians. In a nutshell, coffee is a poison to many people. Quit it away and introduce Postum Food Coffee, which is a liquid food of high character that at once begins rebuilding the destroyed nerve centres.

These are facts, facts, facts, and they mean health conferred and continued, if one will only wake up and take advantage of them. Remember Postum is a delicious beverage if made strictly according to directions, and that is easily done. Don't take any cook's excuse or statement that she followed directions. If your Postum comes to the table weak and unpalatable, you can depend upon it, the cook has slighted the job. It is the easiest part of a proposition to make good Postum. It only needs attention. Put a piece of butter twice the size of a pea in the pot to prevent boiling over. All first-class grocers sell Postum.

There Are Many.

THE IRISH FEELING GROWING IN NEW YORK

The United Irish League Propose to Make Things Lively For Britain

A BUDGET OF NEW YORK NEWS

Visit of Count Matsukata, of Japan—A $50,000,000 Loan for the Mikado's Empire—Other Interesting News

(Special Telegram to The Times)

New York, March 21.—The local branch of the United Irish League are making a noise. At a mass meeting held last night, fiery speeches were made against Britain, one of the speakers going so far as to suggest another Fenian invasion of Canada. "Independence for Ireland," appears to be the war cry, and it is being taken up with vigor by all the tail-twisters in the city.

THE LEGISLATURE

After one of the busiest sessions in its history the New York Legislature closes next Thursday, which by the way, will be the earliest adjournment on record for that body. A large number of bills have been passed and equally as many shelved, but the most notable of the latter is the "three platoon" bill, which has been the cause of a great expenditure of money by the policemen of New York.

THE CITY TAXES

Nothing has been the cause lately of so much gratification on the part of Controller Grout as the passage of his bill by the State Assembly to permit the collection of New York City taxes in the spring instead of the fall. However simple the change may seem, it means a great deal to the city, which for years has been obliged to live upon its future income, and for nine months of the year to borrow from the banks $50,000,000 and more, in order to provide for its expenses until such time as its taxes are paid. This cost the city something like a round million in interest charges.

TITLED AMERICAN WOMEN.

The majority of the American girls who have become English women and who will be conspicuous as hostesses during the gay season following King Edward's coronation are New Yorkers. The Duchess of Marlborough, who will probably head the list of most lavish entertainers, as her functions will extend beyond London to her country palace at Blenheim, is the daughter of William K. Vanderbilt. Lady Strafford, who is both beautiful and immensely wealthy, was Mrs. Cora Colgate, of New York. Then there is the Dowager Duchess of Manchester, Mrs. Arthur Paget, the Countess Craven and Lady Beresford, all of whom have reigned as belles of Gotham's smart set.

A TEN MILLION LOAN

Wall street men are looking forward with an unusual degree of interest to the visit of Count Matsukata and other Japanese, who are now en route to America. Count Matsukata is one of the foremost financiers and statesmen of Japan, and by his visit those in the street will hear more about the proposed Japanese loan of $10,000,000 being floated here.

BIGGEST LINE'S NEW SHIP.

The new 10,000 ton steamer Oscar II, of the United Steamship Co., is due to reach New York on her maiden voyage to-morrow, and much interest is manifested in her arrival among shipping men. The vessel is the largest plying between America and Scandinavia. She is 515 feet long, and is expected to make the trip from Scandinavian ports to New York in eleven days.

A NEW STEAMER

A Splendid New Steamer Being Built for Stoney Lake Waters

Mr. Harry Buck, of Norwood, is building at Hastings, a steamer, which will be ready for the water in June. The boat is 41 feet long by 9 1-2 feet beam.

As soon as completed she will be taken to Belleville, where her initial run will be made to Quebec and return. Mr. Buck will invite a number of his friends to make the trip with him. The steamer will then be taken by train to Lakefield, where she will enter the Stoney Lake waters.

The boat is being built specially for strength and comfort, and will be a valuable addition to the Stoney Lake fleet.

Unnecessary to Suffer From Asthma

This distressing complaint can be perfectly cured by inhaling Catarrhozone, a vegetable antiseptic that destroys the germs which cause the disease. Catarrhozone is inhaled at the mouth from a convenient pocket inhaler, and after permeating the minutest air cells, is exhaled slowly through the nostrils. It stops the cough, makes breathing regular, and eradicates the asthma so thoroughly from the system that it never returns. Don't suffer from asthma, use Catarrhozone, it will speedily cure you. PROHIBITION

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—The schemes and dodges of our politicians are wonderful to behold.

The "Ross party" seeks to make re-election sure by enlisting the aid of the "Temperance Party" under the promise of a Prohibitory Liquor Act.

As for the temperance people, we satisfied their intemperance under the Dunkin Act and also the Scott Act. We will now give them a Prohibition Act with a reinstatement of the Ontario Government, all of which is regrettable.

The apparent lack of honor, honesty and justice exhibited by the politicians of this Dominion of ours, makes any true Canadian hold his head in shame.

The legislation in the liquor traffic has been in the wrong direction: Admitting that the intemperate person or habitual drunkard amounts to, say, one per cent. of the community, the law should be such as would reach the erring individual and not for the ninety and nine. If a man's tooth aches, you do not cut off his head to effect a cure. If the laws were so framed as to reach the intemperate, they would have the respect of every one and could be enforced.

However, we are going to have prohibition, and the sooner we get it over the better for the country. We will help to make it, and then break it on every occasion. Why? To illustrate: A gallon of good, wholesome whiskey can be manufactured at a cost of 20c. to 25c. It cannot be purchased for less than $3.20 to $3.60—bad at that—the high price being an inducement to adulterate. Now, every time I buy a gallon of whiskey I pay about $3.00 taxes for these temperance cranks.

By all means give us prohibition and direct taxation. Be honest, and make all pay their proper share of the public tax.

Under prohibition we will have cheaper and better liquor than that now obtainable.

COMMON SENSE.

Peterborough, March 21.

VANDERBILT'S EMPHATIC REMARK

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—Which of the Vanderbilts made this remark: "The people be d——d." and about when—what year?

I.M.H.

Ans.—The remark was made by William H. Vanderbilt, about 1883 or 1884. Mr. Vanderbilt had directed the discontinuance of a certain fast train, and a reporter was sent to ask why he had done so. Mr. Vanderbilt said that the train did not pay; the reporter said several times that the public wanted it. Then Mr. Vanderbilt made the famous remark, "The public be damned. If the public wanted the train, why didn't the public use it?"

WHAT CAN THE TEACHER DO?

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—Does a teacher in the public schools have a right to keep a knife, or any article, taken from a child in school hours? Some parents are too poor to continue replacing articles taken by the teachers from children and kept, and sometimes children's little treasures have a special value to a child.

PARENT.

Ans.—The teacher has no right to keep an article taken from a child but if the child persists in bringing playthings into the schoolroom and playing with them what is the teacher to do?

THE PRESIDENT'S SALARY

MURDERER HANGED FOR FIENDISH CRIME

Shot His Wife and Defenceless Old Man in Cold Blood

EXPRESSIONS OF CONTRITION.

Accused His Wife of Infidelity and Denounced His French Counsel and the Jury in Violent Language.

Ottawa, March 21.—Stanislaus Lacroix was hanged in Hull jail this morning for one of the most fiendish crimes on record, the murder of his wife and a defenceless old man. He died without showing signs of fear. Father Forget, on behalf of the murderer, made a statement that Lacroix admitted the justice of his sentence and died at peace with the world and his God. He asked forgiveness of all whom he had offended, and requested their prayers. After pulling the bolt Radclive said he did not believe hanging did as much to prevent crime as some people thought, although he believed it was a good thing in some cases.

THE CRIME.

The deed for which Lacroix forfeited his life was committed August 24, 1900, in the village of Montebello—the murder of his wife and an old man named Hippolyte Thomas de Trenchemontage. The crime was a most fiendish and shocking one. As a child Stanislaus was irritable and peevish, as a boy he was the bully of his companions, and as a man displayed a jealous disposition, a quarrelsome nature, and an ungovernable temper. It was not surprising, then, that his married life proved an unhappy one. The day before the crime Lacroix told members of his family that he intended going to the States, and asked to be called early the next morning. In the morning he borrowed $3 from the station master and with it purchased a revolver and cartridges at the village store. Then he primed himself with liquor and started out early in the afternoon on a hunt for his wife. She, hearing that he was in the village drunk and that he was looking for her, ran to the house of a friend, a half-breed widow, Mrs. Michel Dufond, better known as Madame Commandant. Lacroix arrived some minutes later and angrily called for his wife. He soon found her crouching behind a door with her infant child in her arms. With fiendish passion the drunken husband caught her by the hair of her head and dragged her from her hiding place. At the door he fired the first shot, which took effect in her hand. The frightened woman ran into the street, followed by Lacroix, who fired a second shot, which also took effect. Becoming exhausted, the woman fell on her knees, turned to her husband and appealingly asked, "Stanislaus, what do you mean?" The reply was a bullet, and she fell forward in the dust of the road and expired. Her babe, still clasped in her arms, was sprinkled with her blood. After telling a woman who was near to take the child out of the sun, Lacroix returned to the widow Commandant's house, where the defenceless old man was shot in cold blood. He was arrested after violent and exciting scenes.

THE FAST.

At his trial Lacroix made an impassioned speech, in which he accused his murdered wife of infidelity, made accusations against other people in Montebello, and denounced his French counsel and the jury. His harangue over, he shouted, "Fire your bullet; I am ready to receive it." When sentence was passed, Lacroix wildly gesticulated and shouted, "You fellows will never have the honor or dishonor of seeing Radclive put his hand on my shoulder. I am too clever for you and will find some way to kill myself." After steps to obtain commutation had failed, Lacroix said to the sheriff, "Well, you will never take me to the gallows, and from now on I shall refuse to eat anything. As soon as I see my little boy I will soon make an end of it all." For a week he kept his vow, but on the evening of Thursday, Feb. 28, he broke his fast, and called for a big meal. He was only given a small supply, and when he was refused more he became angry and morose. For a couple of days he resumed his fast, but finally, owing to the efforts of his spiritual adviser, he relented and lately had been eating as heartily as could be expected, with the gallows looming up before him.

Items of Interest

Hong Kong, March 21.—Advices from Canton say it is credibly reported there that the Viceroy has received telegrams from Lung Chang, on the Annam border alleging that the whole of Marshal Su's troops have deserted and joined the rebels. If this be true, say the advices, it adds to the revolutionists twenty thousand foreign armed and drilled troops capable of defeating any force the Imperialists can raise. The telegrams further say the country is undoubtedly ripe for rebellion. Robberies are of frequent occurrence. The long continued drought prevents the planting of spring rice, and this has led the farm laborers to become robbers. Well-informed persons consider a rebellion similar to that of the Taepings probable.

JAMES J. HILL AND BELLEVILLE BOILERS.

London, March 21.—An emphatic opinion as to the Belleville boiler is expressed by Admiral George W. Melville, of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, Washington, in a quotation from a private letter which appears in the Pall Mall Gazette. "I have been persecuted almost to death, and nearly driven out of my office," he says, "by the French patentees and their agents who were trying to induce the secretary of our navy to adopt their form of boiler. But I am pleased to say that up to date I have been able to prevent the introduction of any such sky-rocket arrangement in any of the ships of the United States navy. 'Jim' Hill (of the Great North-West Railroad and Steamship Company) some years ago had two of his 6,000-ton vessels on the Great Lakes fitted with Belleville boilers. After doing everything they could with them for the last five years to keep them afloat, the ships are now lying alongside the wharf, and within a year or a year and a half boilers will be replaced by our good old friend the Scotch boiler. This has been a very expensive experiment for the great 'Jim' Hill."

HOOLEY AND HIS $42,000.

London, March 22.—The question of Mr. E. T. Hooley's alleged agreement with it was to be returned in the event of the company making a profit in the first three years after the issue of debentures. The judge said, in his opinion, Mr Hooley had failed to prove the existence of any such agreement, and he dismissed the action.

A REGISTER OF TEACHERS.

London, March 22.—For the purpose of forming and keeping a register of teachers, there is to be established, according to an Order in Council, a registration authority called the Teachers' Registration Council. It is to consist provisionally of twelve members, of whom six are to be appointed by the President of the Board of Education. Of the remaining six a member is to be appointed by each of the following bodies: The Conference of Headquarters, the Incorporated Association of Head Masters, the Association of Head Mistresses, the College of Preceptors, the Teachers' Guild of Great Britain and Ireland, and the National Union of Teachers. Its members will hold office for three years.

A NEW RAILWAY IMPROVEMENT.

London, March 22.—The North-Eastern Railway Company have adopted a new system for communication between the passengers, drivers, and guards of their trains. For the cord arrangement outside the carriage window there is substituted a small chain and handle inside the doors on both sides of the carriage. A pull on the handle opens a valve on the air brake pipe and partially applies the brake. At the same time a whistle is blown, while a red disc, released by the chain, projects from the side of the carriage where the alarm is raised.

TALLEST OF THE PEERS.

London, March 22.—The death is announced at Hyeres of Lord Malcolm of Poltalloch. Born in 1833, he sat in the Commons for twenty-four years, representing Boston and latterly Argyllshire. In 1896 he was created a peer. He was an enthusiastic volunteer, and was colonel of the 5th. V.B. Princess Louise's (Argyll and Sutherland) Highlanders. The deceased peer was a very large landowner in Argyllshire, and the tallest member of the House of Lords, standing six feet five inches in his stockings.

TAMING THE WILD ZEBRA.

London, March 22.—Evidently the taming of wild zebras is proving successful. The Official Gazette (Mombasa) contains an advertisement that Baron Bronsart von Schellendorff of Kilimanjaro is prepared to supply tamed but unbroken zebras at 200 to 300 rupees each, and tamed and broken-in animals at just twice that price. Orders can be executed in nine months.

BRITAIN AND THE OPIUM TRADE.

London, March 22.—An extensively signed memorial has been forwarded by the Archbishop of Canterbury asking for decisive action by Imperial authority in regard to the Indian opium traffic with China. The memorialists say the use of opium in China is a vast national curse, and that the British action in regard to its importation into China has had disastrous results in injuring other branches of British commerce in that country, and in generating a feeling of hostility to British subjects and interests in the minds of the Chinese people. "It is," they conclude, "the grave duty of the nation as before the Supreme King and Governor to purge itself anywise of connection with a great and public wrong." Lord Salisbury has replied, promising to lay the memorial before his colleagues in the Government.

London, March 20.—During a discussion in the House of Commons to-day Mr. Brodrick and Mr. Chamberlain showed themselves to be very hopeful over the position of affairs in South Africa.

Mr. Chamberlain estimated there were still 9,600 fighting Boers in the field.

The Government has again telegraphed Australia, inviting that Commonwealth to send 2,000 more men to South Africa.

BOERS WELL SUPPLIED

London, March 21.—A despatch to The Times from Klerksdorp, Transvaal Colony, says that the Boers in the Western Transvaal are well supplied with guns and ammunition, and have such unlimited support and a large amount of stock that their numbers give them confidence, while the blockhouse system has not yet been extended enough to alarm them.

"What is possible has been done," continues the correspondent, "but owing to the insufficiency of troops, the British columns have been too small to cope adequately with the Boer forces, which are all composed of fighting men, without any intention of surrendering."

Sore Throat and Hoarseness

with their attendant dangers may be speedily averted and remedied by the use of Polson's Nerviline. Excellent to gargle with — ten times better than a mustard plaster, and more convenient for the outside. Nerviline penetrates the tissues instantly, soothes the pain, allays inflammation, and cures sore throat and hoarseness simply because that's what it is made for. The large 25c. bottle of Nerviline is unexcelled as a household liniment. It cures everything.

Yesterday's Fire

About five o'clock yesterday afternoon the fire brigade was called out to a fire in a house occupied by Mr. Con Wall, Driscoll Terrace, Ashburnham.

The fire had gained considerable headway before the brigade arrived. The loss was not heavy as the furniture had all been removed. The roof was partly burned and the house received quite a soaking from water.

The Maccabees Concert.

A very pleasing and successful concert was given last night in the Sons of England hall, under the auspices of the Ladies of the Maccabees. The large assembly hall was filled to the doors. The programme consisted of vocal and instrumental music, readings and recitations. Among those who took part in the program were Mr. Halpenny, Miss Carrie White, and Master Mowat.

THE BOER WAVERERS ARE ALL WEEDED OUT

London Times' Correspondent Says Boers on Western Transvaal are Well Equipped

THE BURGHERS ARE NOW ALL FIGHTING MEN

Boers in Eastern Transvaal are in Hiding but in the West are well Supplied with Guns and Ammunition

London, March 22.—A despatch to The Times from Klerksdorp says that in the Orange River Colony the enemy is split into two small groups, and without any prominent leader. Many Boers are in hiding in the Eastern Transvaal, south of the Delagoa Railway line, where there are still organized commandoes, none over three hundred strong. North of the Delagoa line the Boers are more anxious to lead peaceful lives, and will embrace the opportunity to honorably discontinue hostilities. In the Western Transvaal the Boers are supplied with guns and ammunition, and have unlimited transport and a large amount of stock, while their numbers give them confidence and the blockhouse system is not extended sufficiently to alarm them. Because of their general insufficiency the British troops are unable to cope with the Boer forces, all the burghers in the Western Transvaal being fighting men. The waverers have been captured or surrendered, and those in the field seem determined to continue the struggle. Lieut.-Col Wools-Sampson has been appointed to take charge of the field intelligence service in the Western Transvaal, but the correspondent says it will take time to make the service as reliable as that of the Eastern Transvaal.

GERMAN PAPER FOR FRANCE.

London, March 22.—A despatch from Paris to The Times says that a German paper will be published in Paris next April to promote friendly relations between the two countries. It will be the first German paper published in France.

U. S. TO RETALIATE AGAINST EMPEROR WILLIAM

Decree of the Kaiser Excluding from Germany Upon Which Boracic Acid Has Been Used

New York, March 21.—A special to the Herald from Washington says:

Secretary Wilson is preparing to enforce retaliatory measures against Germany. He is formulating regulations for the exclusion of any products of that and any other countries which are preserved or in which boracic acid has been used.

This is the direct result of the decree issued by Emperor William prohibiting the importation of American meats upon which boracic acid has been employed as a preservative. The department of agriculture holds that boracic acid is not injurious, and it is satisfied that German action is due to the pressure of the Agrarian party. As the secretary pointed out in his memorandum to the Department of State there are many articles of German exportation which this Government can exclude for clear sanitary reasons. These include German wines and German malt liquors. The despatches from Berlin say that the exclusion will apply only to meats upon which preservatives have been used, but this is construed into an unwarranted excuse on the part of the German Government to exclude all American meat, in response to the Agrarian demands in Germany.

Malt Breakfast Food

Makes The Weak Strong and Keeps the Strong in the Bloom of Health

Some profit loving merchants buy package dyes to supply their customers with that are so poor and weak that it requires fully three packages to give the same depth and richness of color that is obtained from one package of the Diamond dyes. These weak dyes—dear at any price—are sold to consumers at 10c. per packet, same price as the full strength Diamond Dyes.

Any woman who is urged by a merchant to buy the weak and adulterated dyes referred to, should stoutly refuse to be swindled. Loss, trouble, and irritation of temper can be avoided by always using the Diamond Dyes. Examine each package; when you see the name "Diamond Dyes" you are fully protected.

Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns richly colored on the best quality of Scotch Hessian, can be ordered by mail. Send for free sheets of designs to select from. Send your address to the Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q.

MUSICAL RECITAL

Under the Auspices of the Choir of St. Paul's Church

It was a rare treat provided by Mr. J. Crane and his splendid choir of St. Paul's Church last evening, when Miss Richardson, violincellist, Mr. Hirwen Jones, tenor, and Mr. Owen A. Smily, elocutionist, appeared before an appreciative audience in Bradburn's Opera House. The seating capacity of the hall was taxed to the full extent, and every person came away fully satisfied, and enthusiastic in praise of the artists of the evening.

The opening number of the program was a violincello solo by Miss Hilda Richardson, of London, an acknowledged leader in music of this class. So persistently was she applauded, that she responded with "Blue Bells of Scotland." This seemed to touch a responsive chord in the hearts of the audience, for the most exact stillness prevailed. She was followed by Mr. Hirwen Jones, in "I try from Love's Sickness to Fly." This is a difficult selection to render, and brought out to advantage the fulness of Mr. Jones' vocal powers. On his recall he sang "The Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond," in a most acceptable manner. Mr. Owen A. Smily, in his initial number, "Gentleman Dick o' the Greys," gained the unbounded admiration of his hearers. This is a tale of the Crimean, with a pathetic conclusion. Mr. Smily, on his encore, introduced a number of original Irish witticisms.

The other numbers on the program were: 'Cello solo, by Miss Richardson, with a Scottish melody, "Sweet Alice," as an encore; songs, "My Lady Sleeps" "O my Love's like a Red Red Rose" and "Irish Love Song," by Mr. H. Jones; musical sketch, Mr. Smily; 'Cello solo, by Miss Richardson; Welsh melodies, "The Dove" and "Nos Galan," by Mr. Jones; and the closing selection, a mirth provoking recitation by Mr. Smily, "The First Piano in Camp."

Miss Constance Veitch, of London, an artiste of high standing played the piano accompaniments during the evening.

The thanks of the music loving people of Peterborough are due Mr. Crane in his successful effort to secure the appearance of entertainers of such high merit.

The piano used for the occasion was loaned by Messrs. Heintzman & Co., Toronto. The instrument was regular drawing-room size producing a rich volume of sound, yet giving due prominence to the accompanying [illegible]

AFTER IRISR TRADE

Yankee Steamship Service Is Inaugurated Between New York and Ireland

New York, March 22.—With the sailing of the steamship Haverford today, the Red Star line inaugurated its service by way of Queenstown to Southampton and Antwerp. The new service brings the Red Star Line into competition with the Cunard and White Star Lines for Irish and English immigrant and freight business. Considering the admissions made last spring that the American and the Red Star lines, the two departments of the International Navigation Company, and the Atlantic Transport and the Leyland Lines were to carry on business in a community of interest, the new departure of the Red Star may be taken to indicate an aggressive move by American capital upon a port whose freight and passenger business has been hitherto exclusively in control of British companies.

FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN

Wise Women Use The Great Spring Medicine

Paine's Celery Compound

It Is The Only Remedy That Can Provide for the Increase of Red Corpuscles in the Blood

From every section of the land, from Newfoundland in the east to British Columbia in the West, strong and well-attested reports of women, bloodless, nervous, dyspeptic, neuralgic, rheumatic and rundown, and in many cases so weak as to be bed-ridden, who have been enabled to resume their places in the family and in social life, enjoying health, vigor and true happiness, all through the aid of that great blood-purifier, blood-maker and health-giver, Paine's Celery Compound.

When Paine's Celery Compound is used, the rapid change in color, flesh and expression of the face is so marked and observable, that repair of the wasted tissues might well be called a renewal of life.

Paine's Celery Compound is the only medicine that can effectively increase the proportion of red corpuscles in the blood; this is a source of power over all blood diseases, rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney and liver troubles, dyspepsia, indigestion, and general rundown condition. Mrs. E. Trinder, Simcoe, Ont., writes thus:

"Having used your wonderful Paine's Celery Compound with great success, it gives me pleasure to write in its favor. For a long time dyspepsia and indigestion made life miserable for me. I was so bad I could not go out of the house, do housework or get regular sleep. I bought six bottles of Paine's Celery Compound from Mr. Austin, our druggist, and commenced to use it regularly. I was obliged to consult a doctor about another trouble, and he advised me to continue with your compound, and told me if I had not been using it he would have recommended it to me. Paine's Celery Compound worked wonders for me; it has banished my dyspepsia, indigestion and sleeplessness, and given me a new life."

SMITH TOWNSHIP COUNCIL

Much Miscellaneous Business Put Through —The Auditor's Report

The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed.

The Council made a grant of $100 to improve the road between lots 18 and 19, through the swamps in the 8th and 9th concessions. A grant of $200 was made to open the road at the west of the communication lots.

The clerk was instructed to have the municipal printing for 1902 done at the office of the Times.

A grant of $50 was made to improve the road between lots 28 and 29 in the 10th and 11th concessions.

The following claims were ordered to be paid, namely:—R. Scott, work on road, $2.50; W. J. Northey, building culvert, $3.00; Walter Young, refund of statute labor, $2.00; Review Printing Co, balance on printing, $25.00; O. N. Brown, flour for Mrs. Richardson, $2.25; Kerrighan & Gordon, flour for Mrs. Richardson, $2.25; E. Brown & Co., goods for G. Hamilton, $0.90; I. Archer, work on road, $6.00.

After verbally appointing overseers of highways, pound keepers and fence viewers the Council adjourned to meet at the town hall, Bridgenorth, on Monday, the 10th March.

THE MARCH MEETING

The Council met pursuant to adjournment on March 10. All the members present, the reeve in the chair. Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Two tenders being received for the delivery of stone as advertised for Messrs. Stenson and Elliott were appointed a committee to arrange for the same with power to act.

A grant of $25 was made to improve the road on the 18th concession line between the Buckhorn road and Deer Bay.

A by-law to divide the Township of Smith into pound and road divisions and to appoint overseers of highways, pound keepers and fence viewers for the current year passed its several readings.

A by-law to repeal by-law No. 579 and to make other provisions therefor was also passed.

The Auditors then reported, and the clerk was instructed to have 200 copies of their report printed for distribution.

A petition from Jacob Snelgrove and others was received, and laid over for further consideration.

The following requests were also laid over, namely: from the trustees of S.S. No. 6 applying to have debentures issued to raise money for the building of a school and that of Geo. Allen for employment with his engine in running stone crusher.

The following claims were ordered to be paid:—W. B. Kelly, rent of hall, fuel, etc., $20.75; W. B. Kelly, timber, A. Morrison, overseer, $11.67; W. B. Kelly, timber, T. R. Mann, overseer, $4.94; W. B. Kelly, wood for Mrs. Smith, $16.75; W. Currens, wood for Mrs. Richardson, $9.00; C. H. Brown, flour for Mrs. Richardson, $2.13; E. Brown & Co., goods for G. Hamilton, $1.50; R. N. Scott, work on road, $27.25; A. Morrison, work on road, $9.00.

The Council then adjourned to meet on Monday the 14th April next.

APSLEY

Mr. John Kilborn, who has been, we believe, a life long resident of this country, is soon to remove to Lakefield, to assume a position in the cement works. Both he and Mrs. Kilborn made many friends by their universal kindness, all of whom deeply regret the loss the community will sustain by their departure. How much they were appreciated has been shown on two occasions lately: A number of Mrs. Kilborn's lady friends made and presented her with a very handsome autograph quilt. The presentation was made at her own home, where a very pleasant evening was spent. The quilt was made by Mrs. W. Smith, Mrs. G. Reynolds, Mrs. J. Bickles, Mrs. Hope, Miss Staunton, and Mrs. Gallon. And on March 10th Mr. and Mrs. Kilborn were invited to the residence of Mrs. Z. Tucker, where about twenty of the neighbors had assembled, and here another pleasant surprise awaited them in being presented with a parlor lamp and a shaving set, also the following address:

Mr. and Mrs. Kilborn: We your friends desire to express our feelings towards you by wishing you all success and happiness in the change you are about to make, and sincerely hope that wherever your future home may be the same cordial feelings which have been ours will prevail among you and your new friends. We would also ask that you accept these presents, not for their intrinsic value, but as a memento of the many happy days we have spent together, hoping that not only the light of this lamp, but also the light of the never fading sun may shed its rays about you. We shall always remain your sincere friends.

Signed in behalf of Donald Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. A. Windsor, Mr. and Mrs. E. Tucker, Mr. and Mrs. Masters, Mrs. B. Kilborn, Mr. and Mrs. Z. Tucker, Miss Lousley, Mrs. Steele.

A bountiful supper was then served, after which a social and pleasant evening was spent by all, and Mrs. Kilborn, for herself and husband, wishes through the medium of The Times to thank not only the above named friends, but all others who have by many acts and words shown their friendship to her during her 12 years of married life among them, and will always have the kindest of thought towards their friends in Apsley and surrounding country.

NOTES

—Mr. S. A. Wilson has purchased the Hillside farm and the Lindsay lot, formerly owned by Mr. T. G. Eastland. Mr. Wilson contemplates building a house next summer.

—Mr. Laval, of Young's Point, is moving to Apsley to keep a Temperance House. The three new buildings are progressing favorably.

—Mr. T. McIlmoyle has taken the contract of building the new church.

—Apsley is growing. Those who want lots or property near the village should invest early.

—Mr. Benjamin Windsor captured a very large lynx last week. It measured in length 5 ft. 2 in., and in height 28 in.

—A few of our village ladies (!) disgraced themselves one evening last week by going to a miserably mean, low-down, hoe-down dance a few miles out of the village. How can any lady expect to maintain her good name or the respect of her associates, when she will go to a mere shack, little larger than twice by four, to spend the night, where to be seen in daylight would make her blush. Whatever the difference of opinion may be regarding the propriety of attending the ordinary party or ball, no respectable person would hesitate for a moment to denounce most emphatically the presence of decent people at such a hovel. We hope in the future our girls will consider not only their own character, but also that of their friends.

20 Years of Vile Catarrh.—Chas. O. Brown, journalist, of Duluth, Minn., writes: "I have been a sufferer from Throat and Nasal Catarrh for over 20 years, during which time my head has been stopped up and my condition truly miserable. Within 15 minutes after using Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder I obtained relief. Three bottles have almost, if not entirely, cured me." 50c.—73

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 200,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 200,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by R. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

The capital invested in electrical enterprises in the United States is estimated by "American Trade" at four billion dollars. We have the same authority for the assertion that these industries employ more than half a million persons. Almost half of the aggregate capital is represented by the electric railways, which, it would be safe to assume, employ a majority of the half-million persons. There were dismal predictions current ten or fifteen years ago of things that would befall certain classes of labor when electric cars came in; but the abolishment of the horse-car has probably thrown no one out of work—except the horse.

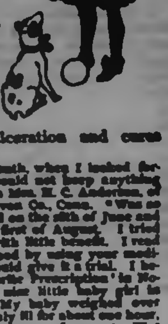
Rheumatism will Succumb to South American Rheumatic Cure because it goes right to the seat of the trouble and removes the cause. Many so-called cures but deaden pain temporarily only, to have it return again with doubled violence. Not so with this great remedy. It eradicates from the system the last vestige of the disease and its cures are permanent.—75

If a woman is physically miserable and mentally unhappy, the child she bears will, in face and form, as well as in disposition, reflect her own condition. Every woman who anticipates motherhood ought to think of this and be a fairy godmother to her own child, endowing it with health, beauty, and a happy disposition.

The mental misery of the prospective mother is in general the result of her physical condition. She is nervous, her appetite fails, she cannot sleep. Restore her appetite, quiet her nerves and give her sleep and she becomes a new woman.



"It has made a new woman of me," is the constant testimony of women who have used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces refreshing sleep. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"During the first month, when I looked forward to maternity, I could not keep anything on my stomach," writes Mrs. H. C. Anderson, of South Britain, New Haven Co., Conn. "Was so weak that I went to bed on the 5th of June and never got up till the first of August. I tried different doctors, but with little benefit. I read about many being helped by using your medicine, so I thought I would give it a trial. I began to take your 'Favorite Prescription' in November, and I had a nice little baby girl in February following. My baby weighed over eight pounds. I was only ill for about one hour, and got along nicely during confinement. Was up and dressed on the eighth day. I never had the doctor with me at all; just the nurse and one or two friends. My friends thought I was sick a very short time. This makes my second child. With the first one I did not take 'Favorite Prescription.' The little one lived just about two months, and she was sick all the time. This last baby is as plump and healthy as any mother could wish."

A Great Man and a Child.

IN his reminiscences of Horace Greeley in the "Youth's Companion's" series of Recollections of Famous Editors, Noah Brooks says that Greeley could bear a great sorrow or a great disappointment with the fortitude of a stoic, but a trifling annoyance would provoke him to an outburst of wrath that was simply childish. The death of his little boy, his only and idolized son, was to him an awful blow. No man can know what agony the stricken father silently endured, his grief coining the drops of his heart's blood. But a typographical blunder, especially if it were in one of his own writings, drove him into spasms; then his maledictions on the offending typesetter and proofreader were something blood-curdling to hear.

One morning he went swiftly down to the "Tribune" office to find the compositor who had made a bad error in setting the types for one of his editorial articles in the paper. Bounding upstairs into the composing-room, with blue fire in his eyes and shaking the paper folded across the page to show the offence, he shrieked, "Show me the man! Show me the man that did this!" The error had already been made a topic of discussion in the office, and the culprit, a very old man who had been with Mr. Greeley on the "New Yorker" and on the "Tribune" ever after, came out from behind his case and tremulously pleaded guilty. The editor, standing there in the full height and strength of his manhood, looked down upon the little old man with a startled air, and then, turning away, invited anybody in the office to kick him (Greeley) downstairs.

Of his education, Mr. Greeley said it "was picked up by the way." It is natural that one who knew him should wonder what manner of man he might have been if he had been trained and disciplined in an institution of learning. He might have been a very much greater man, thinks Mr. Brooks; and then, too, his raw resources might not have been so strong and abundant under a scholastic rule.

When he was a lad of nine years he was offered free tuition in the academy at Exeter, New Hampshire. His parents declined the offer, partly through pride, Mr. Greeley thought, although nominally because his mother was unwilling to part with him at that tender age. Later in life, speaking of this failure to secure an academic course of instruction, he said: "I suppose I ought to be sorry, but I am not much."

Mr. Greeley affected contempt for college-educated men, and was accustomed to say, with great emphasis, "Of all cattle, the most useless in a newspaper office is a college-bred man!" This seemed to be an affectation intended to justify his own lack of scholarship, as if he were the shining example of what a great editor could be without special training. As a matter of fact, adds Mr. Brooks, during my term of service on the "Tribune" a majority of the men on the staff were college-bred men.

Some Epigrams on Growing Old.

Max O'Rell, in an article on "Old Women," says, among other things:

"A woman who knows how to grow old gracefully is a delight; but an old woman, whose wrinkled grimaces try to be inviting, voluptuous smiles, whose skeleton, loaded with diamonds, seems to crack as if on the point of crumbling to dust, who has a painted face, dyed hair, and false teeth—that woman makes me shudder; it is the most horrible sight in the world.

"For a man, love is an expectation at twenty, an irresistible desire at thirty, a habit at forty, an indiscretion or a hesitation at sixty, and a profanation at seventy. For a woman love is a dream at twenty, an experience at thirty and a reminiscence after forty.

"Balzac, the greatest authority on love and women, and the most wonderful dissector of the human heart who ever lived, says that the best and most artistic effort of a clever and refined man is at fifty-two, and that a woman is perfect only at thirty-five. There is hope for some of us.

"Happy the woman who knows how to grow old! Happy her husband especially!

"I have heard it said that few women know how to get old. However true this may be, the old woman who believes that she is still attractive is much less ridiculous than the old man who believes that he is still irresistible."

The Considerate Dog.

A yellow dog who had bayed the moon ever since sunset was finally approached by a sedate old mastiff about 2 o'clock in the morning.

"See here, friend," said the mastiff, "will you be so good as to explain why it is you get so much comfort out of barking all night at the moon?"

"Well, it's this way," explained the yellow dog: "You see, I am afflicted with insomnia, and it takes an acute form which makes me feel obliged to bark at something; so I, being a considerate dog, bark at the moon, knowing that it cannot hear me. Therefore it is not annoyed in the least, and I am afforded much relief."

"So you are actuated purely by considerate motives and a sincere desire to spare anyone annoyance?"

"Just so!" and the yellow dog wagged his tail proudly.

"But did it never occur to you to consider your neighbors also?" demanded the mastiff.

The yellow dog was overwhelmed with confusion. He listened for a moment to the hitherto unnoticed profanity and tearing of hair that was going on all over the neighborhood. Then he tucked his tail beneath him and slunk under the house.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,
Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

"Daisy is safe at home," he muttered. "Thank heaven for that. I was greatly worried about her."

Every one was up at daybreak at the farmhouse the next morning, and two gayer or happier maidens than Hetty and Olive could not be found as they started two hours later.

"Good-bye father, good-bye, Daisy," they called back, as they climbed into the old-fashioned carry-all that stood before the door.

The last sight they saw was Daisy's tear-stained face pressed close to the window-pane, gazing after them as the carriage turned the curve in the white road.

"I hope you won't be lonesome, Daisy," said Farmer Gordon, anxiously, as he drew her from the window, stroking the lovely, fluffy, golden curls with his toil-hardened hands. "A fortnight will soon pass, and the girls will be back again. It will be your turn next, pet. If you get lonesome staying here with Margy, or if she can spare you from helpin' with the meals, you can come over to the meadow and sit with me a spell. Those clover-fields down by the bridge want mowing. You'll either find me there, or else at the other end of the field plowing."

Old Margy, the servant who had been installed at the farmhouse for long years before Daisy was born, soon thrust her head in at the door.

"You do look powerful lonesome, lamb!" she exclaimed, as she caught sight of Daisy sitting disconsolately on the wide doorstep. "You can go into the clover field with your pa, if you like; I shan't need you, I'm sure, child."

Daisy caught up her broad-brimmed sun-hat and walked slowly down to her favorite nook in the orchard.

How long she sat dreaming under the pink blossoms of the peach tree she never knew; she was thinking of a dark, handsome face and a pair of laughing dark eyes.

Glancing suddenly up, she saw the same pair of dark, smiling eyes regarding her intently, and the next instant he had vaulted gracefully over the hedgerow, and stood by her side.

"I have been standing there quite an hour," he said. "I began to despair that you would ever come."

She looked up into his face with frank, child-like eyes, and he saw that they bore traces of recent tears.

What could bring tears to the eyes of this happy little heiress, he asked himself in puzzled surprise.

"Ah," he cried earnestly, "the smile you give me is not a happy one. You are grieving over something, I am sure."

A sudden impulse of confidence in this handsome hero to whom she owed so much came over Daisy. Should she tell him that she had been grieving—yes, crying bitterly—because Olive and Hetty had gone to spend two weeks at Briar Hall, and she had been left at home? No, no; he might think her weak and childish, and she would not like him to think that of her.

"You are right," she said. "I have had a little disappointment."

"How I wish that I were not a stranger," he said, eagerly, "that I might say something to console you. Let me try to help you to forget it."

It was pleasant to hear such kind words; it was pleasant to read the admiration revealed so plainly in those dark mesmeric eyes.

"Is that the sound of falling water? Is there a cascade near by?" asked Harold St. John, suddenly.

"Yes, the chief pride of Cliffdale in the spring, and the brook that joins the river at the foot of this glen," replied Daisy. "There's a little waterfall, and the artists who come here in summer say it is delightfully picturesque."

"Let us go and see it," said Harold St. John.

She took him down a broad path through the orchard, and across the dell, and then they stood by the brookside.

It was so beautiful down in the deep green glade. The sunlight came filtering through the thick green foliage; the ground beneath their feet was a carpet of wild flowers—blue bells and wild hyacinths, pale strawberry blossoms and purple foxgloves. Overhead where the thick branches met, the birds were singing as though love and hope were dawning for them.

"A charming spot," declared Harold St. John. "If I were a poet I would immortalize it. I am sure you must be tired," he gallantly added. "Let me make you a throne."

He cleared the debris of flowers and leaves from a part of the mossy bank, and Daisy sat down upon it, he throwing himself gracefully down at her feet, his white straw hat by his side.

What did they talk of? What do the young and beautiful and happy always speak of when the sun shines and the birds sing?

Handsome Harold St. John was a young man of the world, and in the art of fascination no man was better skilled. He knew the value of every inflection of his low, musical voice, of every flash of his dark eyes. He did not say it in words—he was far too clever for that—but he made her understand that life had only begun for him since the hour he had asked the way to Briarvale.

A Comic Opera Strike.

THERE is, as a rule, little that is humorous in a strike. But a recent strike in Columbus, O., is so humorous and at the same time so extraordinary that it seems almost incredible. It sounds as if it took place in Topsy-turvydom instead of in the United States of America. It would make a good libretto for one of Gilbert and Sullivan's crazy operettas.

This is the story of the Columbus strike: C. M. Jones is editor and proprietor of the Columbus "Press-Post"—that is, he was. The paper is now apparently being edited by almost everybody but the editor. It seems that Editor Jones got into trouble with his city editor. The city editor is a member of the Newspaper Writers' Union. Now it has long been a grievance among newspaper reporters that they are not so well treated as the printers, because they have no union. On the other hand, the printers have a union which is the most powerful and prosperous trade union in the country, with the possible exception of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. The reporters have attempted to form unions. But they are like ropes of sand. So they finally decided to organize under the wing of the printers.

In every union printing-office there is a body called "the chapel," presided over by a "father." The foreman represents the employer, the father of the chapel represents the printers. Whenever there is a question at issue, the printers invariably take their orders from the father of the chapel instead of the foreman. So in the office of the "Press-Post," the reporters organised as a newspaper writers' union under the protection of the printers' chapel.

Editor Jones found City Editor Marshall unsatisfactory for various reasons. First, he had criticised some court house officials who were friends of Editor Jones; and, second, he had been "scooped" by the other Columbus papers on a railroad wreck; they had run the wreck with "scare-heads," and City Editor Marshall had not run it at all. Therefore Editor Jones requested Marshall to resign. Marshall refused. Editor Jones then informed him that he was discharged. Marshall at once ordered a strike, and Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2 walked out. Editor Jones attempted to parley with them, and offered to secure another editor. They refused to return unless Marshall was replaced. Thereupon Editor Jones broke off negotiations, got ten young men from the State University as reporters, edited their copy himself, and it was sent to the composing-room. The father of the chapel walked to the imposing-stone, rapped thereon with a mallet, a chapel meeting was held, and the printers stopped their work. The father of the chapel informed Editor Jones that if the non-union copy was not removed from the hook the printers would strike. Editor Jones took back his non-union copy. That day the "Press-Post" did not come out. The next day Editor Jones sent the paper to press without any local news, filling it up with narratives of the low-necked gowns at Newport, snake stories, accounts of the shocking attire worn by the young women at Long Branch, and other refined and pleasing miscellany of the kind usually found in the Sunday supplements of great daily newspapers. Unfortunately, Editor Jones, feeling somewhat embittered over the situation, wrote with his red right hand a savage editorial on the labor question and sent it in to the printers. Not being local news, and being written by the editor and proprietor, it might be supposed that they would print it. Not so. Again the unfortunate editor was informed that he must withdraw his non-union copy, or the printers would strike. Editor Jones withdrew his editorial.

At last accounts the "Press-Post" is still running without the local news, and Editor Jones is beseeching President Lynch of the International Typographical Union to devise some means by which he may be allowed to get his paper out.

So the question may be asked, Who is editing the Columbus "Press-Post?" Is it the proprietor, Editor Jones? or is it the discharged employee, City Editor Marshall? or is it the Newspaper Writers' Union No. 2? or is it the father of the Columbus printers' chapel? or is it the president of the International Typographical Union of North America?

Expenses of Society Life in New York.

Mothers of daughters having social aspirations find it very expensive to meet all the social requirements and demands made upon them, as is shown in proceedings in the Supreme Court of New York brought by Mrs. Kate Shippen Roosevelt to have the yearly allowance of her daughter, Dorothy Quincy Roosevelt, increased from $1,500 to $3,000. Even the larger sum will not by any means be sufficient to keep this young lady in good society and meet all the various expenses incidental thereto; but Mrs. Roosevelt says she is willing to pay the additional expenses, which will amount to several thousand dollars annually, out of her own pocket. Miss Roosevelt inherited $100,000 from a deceased uncle, which is being held in trust for her until she becomes of age next year. Inasmuch as her income amounts to $4,000 and Mrs. Roosevelt proved to the satisfaction of William J. A. McKim, the referee, that $3,000 is only a reasonable amount for a young woman of good social position, the increased allowance was granted. In giving her testimony, Mrs. Roosevelt said she had six tutors for her daughter, who, among other things, was being educated in German, French, and Italian. She was also being instructed in elocution, belongs to several social dancing-classes, is a member of golf, tennis and bathing clubs, is fond of riding, and has an English governess. Mrs. Roosevelt added that the needs of her daughter were increasing year by year, that she found entertaining and traveling abroad added greatly to the cost of living, that one of her daughter's greatest incidental expenses was for hire of cabs going to and from social functions, and that a great deal of the social life which young ladies in New York see is where gentlemen are not invited, such as teas, receptions, etc.

The Revolution in English Character.

IT is the opinion of Mr. Bernard Shaw, as expressed in a characteristic preface to a late volume of his plays, that the nature of the English people has, within the past ten years, undergone certain conspicuous modifications. Excitability—"theatricality" is his own word for it—Mr. Shaw believes to have been steadily mounting in force among the English, usually so solid and stolid; and this he ascribes to the pronounced romanticism of taste developed among them by the literature, the books and plays, of the past five years; a taste which has caused them to lose their true sense of the realities, with all the steadying effects thereof.

It will not be disputed that the special style of literature in vogue during a period leaves its impress upon it, nor will it be gainsaid that the demands and tastes of the period in turn determine the essential nature of its literary supply. We are hearing it said on all sides now that popular education accounts for the love of the novel of adventure. Popular education creates an enlarged reading public, but one which does not wish to have the realities of life laid before it; which, indeed, in many cases, reads, or goes to the play, just to escape reality. If one accept this explanation of certain present phenomena it is only going a step farther to find in all democratically organized, popularly educated societies an inherent inclination toward romanticism. As no countries have carried the modern experiment so far as the English-speaking countries, we ought not to be surprised to see a strong bent toward the romantic attitude showing itself, in many directions, in an English or American public; the romantic attitude here meaning any attitude betraying absence of a full perception of the realities, or disinclination to look at them.

Out of all this we seem to draw three propositions: that democracy appears to presuppose a certain sort of popular education, that without that education there would be no democracy, and yet that that education is calculated to destroy the sense of the realities. Now how is this? The very plea made for the education which, more and more, is prevailing against the classical education, is just this—that it cultivates the true perception of real things. It is a "practical" education for that precise reason, say its advocates. Why, then, asks the writer of "The Point of View" in "Scribner's Magazine," should this same generation manifest so much liking for the romantic fiction, the romantic plays, which are a means of getting away from the real conditions of existence? He proceeds to answer this question as follows: "It may very probably be that this liking is a taste of the moment, without ulterior connections or deeper significances. And, indeed, it seems to have been too much overlooked by some writers who have no love for the novel of adventure, that it is by no means the first time in the world that romance has been in high favor. It is none the less true that this subject does suggest another of far greater moment, which is the question what the "popular" education ought to be, and whether the democratic state of modern man really needs exactly that form of it which is now so insisted upon as essential to its maintenance and well-being. To perceive the realities in the high sense, and in that sense be willing to abide by them, is never, at any time, the portion of more than the few. But general education goes forward, very properly, on the assumption that all may be made in some degree to know the life to which they belong, to realize it. Realization comes, however, only in part through the development of practical efficiency. It comes also through the unfolding of the spiritual nature, the growth of moral vision, the dreams of the imagination—to none of which is the 'classical' education a stranger."

Pleasing Kind of Mal de Mer.

News comes from Honolulu that the transport "Thomas," which reached there on August 1, having on board three hundred male and one hundred female teachers, en route for the Philippines to engage in educational service under the Taft Commission, developed a veritable matrimonial epidemic. The young men and women on board represented almost every State of the Union. After the transport left San Francisco friendships were formed which soon ripened into love, and the day prior to the arrival at Honolulu Captain Buford found that thirty couples desired the nuptial knot tied. He refused to permit the ceremony on board the vessel, and the next day a clergyman at Honolulu made the thirty pairs happy by uniting them in matrimony. Prior to the sailing of the transport from Honolulu several other cases were reported. The departure from New York last week of the fifty-four Cuban girls and twenty-four men, who have been students at the summer school of Harvard University, developed the fact that they, too, had been victims of Cupid's darts, although their courtships have only reached the engagement stage. Most of the Cuban men are returning engaged and several Harvard students and professors are said to have lost their hearts to the girls from the South. Five of the ladies took home with them diamond engagement rings.

A Humane Pater.

One reads so frequently of the paternal boot as applied to the undesirable youthful suitor that it is a pleasure to chronicle the more humane method adopted by a wealthy Glasgow merchant for choking off a "follower" of his daughter. The girl was very young, so was the follower, but nevertheless he called formally on the object of his affections. The merchant and his wife entered the room, the latter bearing a glass of milk and a huge slice of bread spread with butter and jam. "Now, dear, run away to bed," said the kindly mother to her daughter; "it's time that all good girls should be in bed." Then the Glasgow merchant addressed the astonished young man: "Now, youngster, you drink that glass of milk, and take that slice of bread and jam to eat on the road home—and hurry, for your mother must be anxious about your being out so late by yourself." The young man did not call again.

A Woman's Age.

Mr. Youngwed—Do you mean to say you are 24 years old to-day? Why, you told me six months ago, just before the wedding, that you were only 21.

Mrs. Youngwed—Yes, I know; but, my dear, I've aged so rapidly since we were married.

Mrs Crawfood—How did you enjoy your ocean voyage? Mrs. Crabshaw—It was just lovely. The state-room seemed so comfortable after living in a flat.—Town Topics.

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Cancer Growing Two Years

Not long ago, we had the pleasure of receiving the following letter:

"When I began your treatment there was a hard lump in my breast, which had been growing for two years, and it was so bad that at last it drew the nipple in. I consulted two doctors, and they both pronounced it cancer, and advised me to have my breast cut off. Your remedy, however, was recommended to me by a friend, and I am very thankful to say that it not only saved my life but did away with the necessity of having to undergo the painful operation, which I so much dreaded."

We do not publish the names of those who give us testimonials for the gratification of the curious, but any sufferer from cancer or tumor may have the name and address of the lady who wrote the above, by sending two stamps to Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

DIAMOND DYES

Is on Every Package You Purchase

It is well known to medical men and food scientists that half of the stomach ailments to which men and women are subject, have their origin in the use of impure and badly prepared breakfast cereal foods. Quite often, the use of oatmeal, hominy, wheat granules or cracked wheat at the morning meal proves a source of misery and wretchedness for the whole day. Such foods are full of insoluble starch which hamper digestion, heat and irritate the blood and produce unsightly skin troubles. They commonly give rise to stomach derangements, waterbrash and heartburn.

Malt Breakfast Food is the only cereal preparation that can guarantee perfect digestive vigor, purity and normal temperature of the blood, regular and natural appetite. No other product in the world can equal Malt Breakfast Food as a flesh, muscle and tissue builder. Ask your grocer for it.

PROSPEROUS YEAR FOR 57TH

Shown by the Different Reports of the Officers at the Annual Meeting

The annual meeting of the officers of the 57th Regiment was held on Thursday evening. Lt. Col Edwards presided. Those present were,—Majors Miller and Stevenson, Captains Hayes, Clegg, Bennett, Mills Cluxton, Hounsell, McWilliams Bradburn, Layfield, Hamilton and McLean, Paymaster, Major Dennistoun, Chaplain, Rev. J. C. Davidson, Surgeon Major Halliday.

The reports of the Band, Rifle and Mess Committees showed that the work of the regiment had been vigorously pushed forward during the year. The trip to Toronto had cost considerable and as a result there was a deficit in the funds.

Regimental,—Majors Miller, Dennistoun and Stevenson.

Mess,—Major Halliday, Capt. Hayes and Fleetwood.

Rifles,—Major Stevenson, Captains of Companies and one man from each company.

Band,—Capt. Walker, Hounsell and Lieut. Matthews.

The first drill for the season will be held on the evening of April 1st., when a large number should be on parade.

NEW THEORY ON

Cause of Hay Fever

Hay fever is not so much a result of climatic conditions as it is a showing of the "weak spot" in the general condition of the body. If a hay fever sufferer can be fed up to a prime condition of health by the use of well selected food the chances are the hay fever will not present itself.

As an illustration, a lady in Cave Spring, Ga., explains how the change of food affected her. "This past summer I found myself in a very low state of health, and much emaciated. I got down to 95 pounds and was worried, especially as I had to look forward to my annual tussle with hay fever in September, and felt it would push me even further down.

One day a friend told me she had been using Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food and that she felt like a new person with greatly increased strength and vigor. I grasped at the straw and began the use of Grape-Nuts. The effect was really magical. In a week I felt toned up, and in a month began in earnest to gain flesh and strength. By September my weight had increased to 110 pounds and much to my amazement I discovered that when the hay fever sufferers began to complain I had not one symptom and escaped it altogether. Inasmuch as I had suffered for years from this miserable disease and had made no change except in my food, I naturally concluded that my improved condition was caused by the daily use of Grape-Nuts and by observing the usual laws of health." MR. JOHN CRANE TO BE THE NEW MANAGER

OF THE LOCAL BRANCH OF THE ONTARIO BANK

Received News of His Appointment Yesterday—Mr. A. A. Hollingshead will be His Accountant

Patrons of the Ontario Bank, and the citizens in general will be pleased to hear of the promotion of Mr. John Crane, for a number of years accountant in the local branch of the Ontario Bank, to the position of manager.

The news of the appointment was received yesterday by Mr. Crane and soon became known around the town.

The new manager, Mr. Crane, has been connected with this branch for a number of years, having been transferred here from Whitby, about fifteen years ago, and worked for a number of years with Mr. Charles McGill during his term as manager. At Mr. McGill's retirement, Mr Crane became accountant, a position which he has ably filled since his appointment. Although still a young man, Mr. Crane undertakes the responsibilities of the office excellently equipped for the work, for besides his long relations with the bank here, he has been identified with so many local organizations and interests outside the bank that he is in touch with local affairs and their conditions in a most intimate degree. The local branch of the bank is one of the largest in Ontario, and the position is of very great responsibility, but Mr. Crane is able for all its demands and the interests of the bank will be safe under his supervision. In fact what has been said in other cases can truly be said in this, that Mr. Crane is to be congratulated on his appointment to a position of so great responsibility and trust and the Ontario Bank is to be congratulated on securing such an energetic and capable manager to look after their interests in this live centre.

In musical and social circles where Mr. Crane is so popular his promotion will be received with much pleasure by his friends.

Mr. A. A. Hollingshead, who, for a number of years has been connected with the local branch has been promoted to the position of Accountant. A large number of business men and citizens called at the bank yesterday and tendered Mr. Crane and Mr. Hollingshead their warmest congratulations.

We are sure that under the new management the Ontario Bank will still increase in popularity and most heartily extend to the new manager and accountant our hearty congratulations.

CASE OF ASSAULT

Heard Before Magistrate Dumble at the Police Court Yesterday

At the Police Court yesterday, Mrs. Mary O'Brien, charged one John O'Brien with assault. Mrs. O'Brien's husband and the defendant were having some hot words and it appeared as though it would result in a fight when the plaintiff endeavored to separate the two. For her trouble John gave her a very black eye and yesterday John was given 15 days in gaol to think the matter over.

MEDICAL MEN MEET

Central Ontario Medical Association Meet on Thursday Night

The adjourned meeting of the Central Ontario Medical Association took place in Peterborough on Thursday night, about 30 members of the profession being present.

The present meeting was called for the purpose of electing officers and adopting rules and regulations, the following officers being elected:

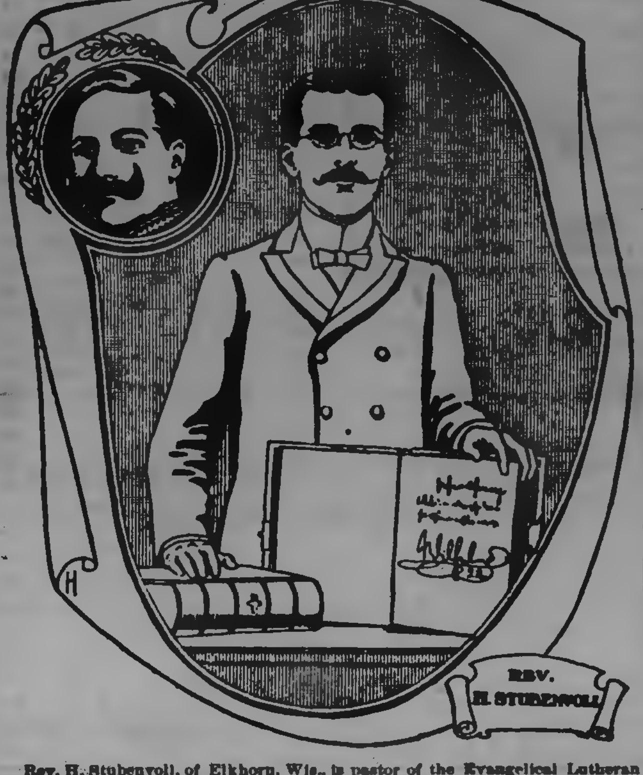
A PASTOR WHO WAS BEFRIENDED BY AN EMPEROR SAVED BY PE-RU-NA.



Rev. H. Stubenvoll, of Elkhorn, Wis., is pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran St. John's Church of that place. Rev. Stubenvoll is the possessor of two bibles presented to him by Emperor William of Germany. Upon the fly leaf of one of the bibles the Emperor has written in his own handwriting a text.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Gentlemen: "I had hemorrhages of the lungs for a long time, and all despaired of me. I took Peruna and was cured. It gave me strength and courage, and made healthy, pure blood. It increased my weight, gave me a healthy color, and I feel well. It is the best medicine in the world. If everyone kept Peruna in the house it would save many from death every year."

Yours very truly,

REV. H. STUBENVOLL.

Thousands of people have catarrh who would be surprised to know it, because it has been called some other name than catarrh. The fact is, catarrh is catarrh wherever located; and another fact which is of equally great importance, is that Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

Catarrh is an American disease. Fully one-half of the people are afflicted more or less with it in some form. Previous to the discovery of Peruna, catarrh was considered well nigh incurable. Since the introduction of Peruna to the medical profession thousands of cases are cured annually.

Mr. W. D. Smith, a well-known grocer of Port Huron, Mich., writes:

"By following your instructions and taking Peruna and Manalin I am cured of catarrh. I had catarrh for twelve years and quite a bad cough so I could not sleep nights. I do not have any cough now, and if I feel anything in the throat I take a swallow of Peruna and I am alright."—W. D. Smith.

Suffered Fifteen Years.

C. F. Gerding, Milburn, Neb., writes: "I contracted a heavy cold about fifteen years ago and tried all kinds of patent medicines and drugs recommended for a cold or heavy cough, but found none to help me until I commenced using Peruna. My age is seventy-eight years, and I am better now than I have been for years. I still keep using your great medicine, and am still improving in health. I recommend it to all sufferers with coughs and colds."—C. F. Gerding.

Peruna, The Greatest Remedy Known For Catarrh.

Mr. Chas. H. Stevens, 97 Seventeenth Street, Detroit, Mich., writes: "It affords me great pleasure to testify to the merits of Peruna as a remedy for catarrh. I suffered for some time with chronic nasal catarrh, but after five months' treatment during which time I used seven bottles of Peruna I am pleased to say that I am entirely well, there being not the slightest trace of the catarrh left. Peruna is without doubt the greatest remedy known for catarrh."—Chas. H. Stevens.

Afflicted Since Childhood With Catarrh.

Mr. Elbert S. Richards, Milton, Conn., writes:

"I am near sixty-eight years of age, and have from childhood been afflicted with catarrh in the head, and, for the past four or five years been much afflicted with it in my eyes; they being watery, would materate a good deal, and stick together in the night. My condition was so fully described in your almanac that I decided to try Peruna.

"I am thankful to say that I now consider myself entirely free from catarrh, and only use Peruna occasionally now as a tonic. Accept my sincere thanks for your personal interest in my case.

"My son, 21 years of age, has been using Peruna for a number of weeks for catarrh in the head and has obtained great relief."—Elbert S. Richards.

Catarrh Thirty Years.

Mr. Andrew Barrett, 940 N. Kidzie Ave., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"It gives me great pleasure to testify to the merits of such a worthy remedy for catarrh as your Peruna. I had suffered for thirty years from this very disagreeable disease and had tried many so-called remedies but until I used Peruna none had the desired effect.

"I have been connected with the Chicago Police Department for the past twenty-eight years. I can cheerfully recommend Peruna to anyone suffering from catarrh."—Andrew Barrett.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada. "The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

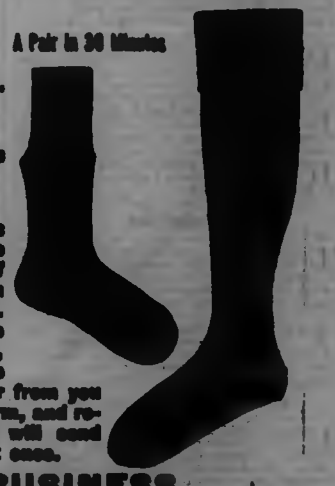
THE HOME MONEY MAKER

Machine weighs 17 pounds. It is more wonderful than a sewing machine, just as durable, and higher speed.

To Work at Their Homes
Under the Direction of
The GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO.
37 MELINDA ST., TORONTO,
To Fill Large Contracts—Good Wages Easily Earned.



We want a few more workers in this locality, at once, and in order to secure your co-operation without the delay of correspondence, we herewith explain our full plan in this advertisement. The work is simple, and the Machine is easily operated, and with the Guide, requires no teacher. If you wish to join our staff of Workers let us hear from you promptly with the Contract, order form, and remittance, as a guarantee, and we will send machine and outfit to begin work at once.

OUR METHOD OF DOING BUSINESS

We wish to secure the services of families to do knitting for us in their homes. Our method is the same as adopted in England. We are the introducers of this plan and the largest knitting concern in Canada.

After long experience, we have been able to produce an Automatic Machine by which all kinds of seamless knitting is now done by our Family Machine, thereby enabling anyone of ordinary intelligence to quickly learn to do the work from the Instruction Guide. All we require is that you use the machine according to directions. The Machine being made expressly for this purpose, and the operation so simple, it cannot possibly make a mistake in its work.

The great demand now is for Bicycle Stockings, Woodmen's Socks, and Motormen's Mittens, and as we are unable to supply the demand, have taken this method of advertising for more help.

The large export trade to the North-west Territories, British Columbia, and the British Colonies, furnishes an unlimited demand for our goods, and, with the combined co-operation of the many families we are employing, together with the large amount of knitting we are able to turn out, by which we save rents, insurance, interest on capital, etc., enables us to undersell any manufacturers of this class of goods, and we have sale for all the knitting we can have turned out.

The price we pay for finished bicycle stockings is $10.00 per hundred, or at the rate of 10c per pair; woodmen's socks, 5c, and motormen's mittens, 12c a pair. All other work in proportion to size.

The machine can be operated by any one of a family, and at our prices any energetic family should be able to sustain themselves comfortably, and in time be a source of independent comfort.

Our plan is to send out each machine to beginners with a sock or stocking partially knitted, and remaining in the machine ready to be continued, and also enough yarn to knit one pair of sample socks or stockings and a simple and complete Instruction Guide, showing how the work is to be done. When the samples have been finished and returned to us satisfactory, we send a quantity of yarn, which you knit and return likewise when finished. We prepay charges on all work one way, and our workers pay return charges. The work, as we have stated, is simple and rapidly done, the machine having a capacity of ten thousand stitches a minute. We have many persons now in our employ who can knit from twenty-five to thirty pairs of socks or stockings a day, and where the time of a family is devoted to the work, you can readily see that $15.00 or $20.00 per week can be easily earned.

We furnish our workers all the materials, yarn, etc., free, and everything that is necessary for the work. We are furnishing the machines only for the exclusive use of those desiring to take employment with us, who must, in order to become a member, send us this Contract Order Form, properly signed by them, and at least one good reference, and remittance accordingly, to give us the necessary assurance that the quantities of valuable yarn we may send from time to time will not be wasted or misappropriated. Our interests are mutual, and this confidence must be established if we are to succeed. We guarantee fair dealing and prompt payment for work, so do not ask us to deviate from our terms, as we cannot make a distinction with one and not another; besides, we are doing an extensive business, and must be governed by business principles.

The manufactured price of the machine is $15, and positively will not be sold to any others than those who will agree to do knitting for us.

If at any time after you commence, and have done an amount of work equal to the purchase price, and wish to discontinue, we will take back machine and refund the amount paid for same, after deducting cost of our expense only.

There is a Large Demand by the Trade for this class of work. Our workers can depend upon it year after year, and if you engage with us (whole or spare time) we will keep you supplied with work as long as you do it satisfactorily for us and return it promptly. We entrust our workers with large quantities of valuable yarn, and as we give references as to our honesty and integrity, we must ask you to do the same, in order that we may know with whom we are dealing.

We have, in as brief a manner as possible, endeavored to show you what our work is, and we simply say as to the machine, it is just what we represent it to be, and will positively do everything we claim for it, or refund the money. Each machine, securely packed with an outfit, is set up for work, thoroughly tested, and a sock or stocking partially knitted before boxing and shipping. Should you decide to engage with us, it will be necessary to send us Cash Contract Order Form, properly signed by you, and at least one good reference, together with the remittance, accordingly, upon receipt of which we will forward machine and outfit ready to commence.

Respectfully yours,

GLASGOW WOOLLEN CO., 37 Melinda Street, Toronto

Our References—Express Companies, Banks, or Toronto Business Houses.

If you wish to examine the machine and see the material before undertaking the work, you can do so by sending $3.00 as a guarantee of good faith, and to defray expense of shipping, and we will send everything to your nearest express company, leaving a balance of twelve dollars to pay the agent and 25 cents for the return charges on the money to us.

We are so frequently and unnecessarily asked if one can learn to knit without a teacher. We say, Yes; it requires no teacher; any person of ordinary intelligence who can read the Instruction Guide can learn to knit at once.

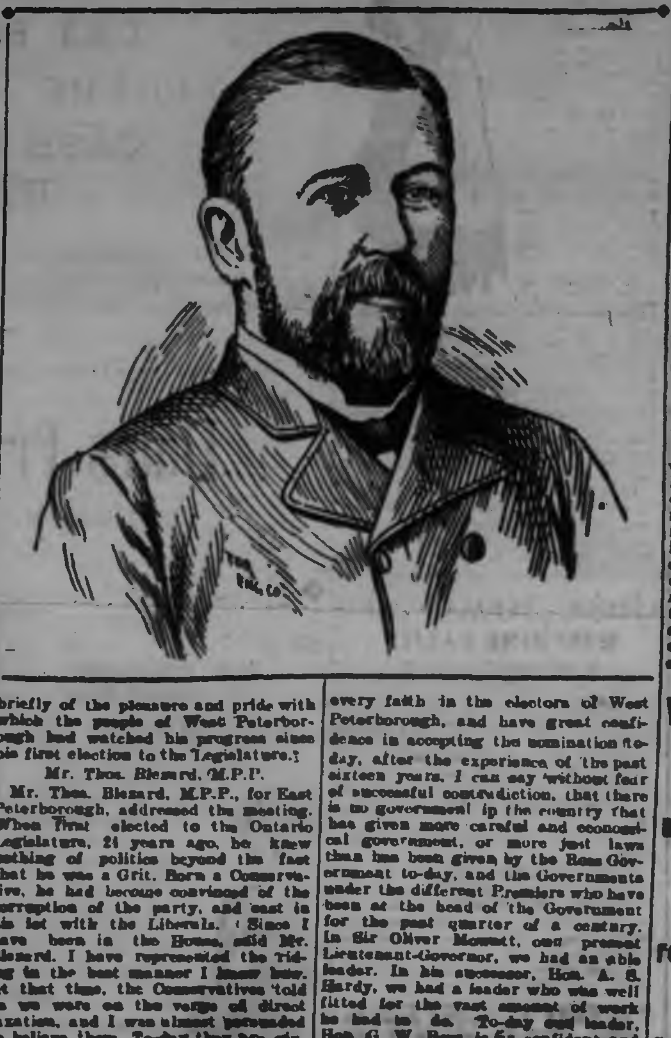
HON. J.R. STRATTON AGAIN NOMINATED TO CONTEST WEST PETERBOROUGH

At the Coming General Elections Which be Held at an Early Date

ENTHUSIASTIC LIBERAL RALLY ON SATURDAY AFTERNOON

In the Opera House— Strong Addresses Delivered by Prominent Men



It might not have been surprising if the Liberal rally of Saturday had drawn a comparatively small attendance, in view of circumstances surrounding it. The roads from rural portions of the constituency are many of them at their worst; there was no probability of any person being brought forward to oppose Mr. Stratton in the representation of the Liberal electorate, yet the meeting which convened in the opera house was a record one as nomination meetings go.

Mr. G. M. Roger, Secretary of the local Liberal Association, occupied the chair, and spoke briefly in opening the meeting, of its objects, and of his pleasure in having present such a representative assemblage. On the platform were noticed Hon. Senator Geo. A. Cox, Hon. Senator McHugh, Mr. Andrew Pattullo, M.P.P., Mr. T. Blezard, M.P.P., and Messrs. Peter Hamilton, Richard Hall, Wm. Graham, J. H. McClelland, and R. R. Hall.

Resolution of Confidence.

Mr. E. Elliott moved the following resolution of confidence in the present administration, and of appreciation of the manner in which Hon. Mr. Stratton had represented this constituency in that Government. It was seconded by Dr. Mabor, and unanimously adopted:

"That this mass meeting, convened to nominate a candidate in support of the Ross Government, declares its complete confidence in that Government, and its hearty appreciation of the energetic and advanced administration of the affairs of this province and of the broad and progressive policy whose vigorous application in the short space of time the Government has held office has been attended with such beneficial effects that its future application will, we believe, lead to still greater results, and bring about to a most important degree, the development of our great resources, in a way which will not only build up New Ontario, but reflect important benefits upon this province at large.

"And that this meeting takes this opportunity of expressing its very cordial appreciation of the excellent representation this riding has received at the hands of J. R. Stratton during five parliaments of this province, every want and interest of the riding having been looked after with a public-spirited solicitude and affectiveness that have earned the warm gratitude of his constituents of every party, creed, and condition, and leads to the hope that he will continue the services which his membership in the Government will permit him to render, to the great advantage of West Peterborough, this county and district, and the province at large."

Resolution of Condolence.

The following resolution of condolence in the bereavement lately suffered by Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of Ontario, in the loss of his life partner, was moved by Mr. Wm. Graham, seconded by Mr. R. F. McWilliams, and adopted unanimously:

"That this mass meeting desires to place upon record its most earnest sympathy and condolence with Hon. G. W. Ross, Premier of this province, in the very great bereavement he has sustained in the death of his wife, the partner of his life, and his helpmate, whose fidelity to his person and position has been of inestimable assistance and encouragement in the performance of the arduous duties incidental to the splendid services he has rendered this province and this country as its Premier, and as a statesman of a long, brilliant and fruitful career.

"And this meeting hopes that in partial mitigation of his great loss, he may receive from a Higher Source, the comfort, strength of soul and vigor of body, which will permit of many further years of invaluable service to the state."

Mr. Peter Hamilton, president of the Liberal Association of Peterborough, in rising to nominate a candidate to contest the constituency of West Peterborough in the coming elections, said:

Day after day rolls around and we are met for the same purpose for which we have gathered before. It has been my good fortune to nominate Mr. Stratton on the last five occasions when the seat was to be contested. It may be considered rather unusual for the same man to nominate a single candidate on so many consecutive campaigns, and to witness his success in each instance. But since his first election to the House, he has represented us most ably and successfully. Any favors he could secure for Conservatives were as cheerfully obtained as for Liberals. I have much pleasure in again nominating Hon. J. R. Stratton for your suffrages.

The nomination was seconded by Mr. Philip Crough, and was unanimously carried amid the cheers of the assemblage.

Mr. Wm. Graham spoke briefly. He said, Mr. Stratton is one of your old Peterborough boys. He has worked hard for the party, and he has worked hard for the constituency which he represents. I believe that one-half the Conservatives throughout Peterborough will support him in the event of a contest. But I cannot see why we should have any opposition to his election. The intelligent electors say, Let Mr. Stratton go back this time by the unanimous voice of his constituents. His representation has not been of a party nature, but for the good of all.

The chairman, in presenting the nomination of Mr. Stratton spoke briefly of the pleasure and pride with which the people of West Peterborough had watched his progress since his first election to the legislature.

Mr. Thos. Blezard, M.P.P.

Mr. Thos. Blezard, M.P.P., for East Peterborough, addressed the meeting. When first elected to the Ontario Legislature, 21 years ago, he knew nothing of politics beyond the fact that he was a Grit. Born a Conservative, he had become convinced of the corruption of the party, and cast in his lot with the Liberals. Since I have been in the House, said Mr. Blezard, I have represented the riding in the best manner I knew how. At that time, the Conservatives told us we were on the verge of direct taxation, and I was almost persuaded to believe them. To-day they are giving us the same story—that we have no surplus to meet arising necessities. We claim that we have a surplus, a large surplus, and the brightest prospects for a larger than ever before. But if such a calamity were to come upon the people of Ontario as the necessity of direct taxation, whom could we blame? The Conservative party had tried its utmost to rob the province of its most valuable resources. And had we not had Sir Oliver Mowatt, I do not know where we might have landed. He, by his thorough knowledge of constitutional law, saved to the province the vast and valuable district of New Ontario. They would have blocked the lakes and streams of the country for the promotion of the interests of a few lumbermen, such as Hon. Senator McLaren, of South Lanark, had they had the power to do so. They disallowed at Ottawa the legislation passed by the Local Administration, but we eventually succeeded. They told us the province had no power to curtail the sale of liquor, but Mr. Mowatt declared such to be within the rights of the Government, and the action the Manitoba Legislature, with the approval of the Privy Council has proven such to be the case.

I have had the privilege of sitting under the administrations of A. S. Hardy and Hon. Sir Oliver Mowatt, and against these gentlemen I shall never break one word. They were able men, and did a grand work in deriving a revenue from the country's resources, and laying it up for the relief of the men who are indirectly paying for the country's support. But in the Hon. G. W. Ross, we have an energetic leader of a progressive Government, a man who is pushing this phase of the work rapidly forward, realizing that every new settler who enters New Ontario, helps to pay the taxes falling upon the Province.

The Opposition do not like our pulpwood deals, and railway deals, and why? They are too popular. I say it is a god-send that we have men like Hon. J. M. Gibson in the House. A man more thorough in his knowledge, or better posted on the business of the province, cannot be produced, and Hon. Mr. Whitney, Opposition leader, or Mr. Carscallen (a more clever man than ever Whitney was) never think to question him on any point of law, or on any Bill which he introduces.

Then, we have the Provincial Secretary, who is one of our own people—one of the boys, raised amongst the boys. Where does he stand? He holds a higher position than any Provincial Secretary ever did before. He has the License Department in his hands, and he has devoted more study to the proper administration of its affairs than any of his predecessors. He has charge of all the charitable institutions, asylums, etc., in the province, one of the heaviest duties devolving on any member of the Administration. In speaking of our institutions of this kind, with their thousands of unfortunate inmates, I tell you whereof I know, and no person should attempt to criticise the work carried on here or the remuneration of their officers until he has gone and seen.

When we see men like Dr. Clark, of Toronto, and Dr. Butler, of London, devoting all their brain and energy to this work for the small sum of $1800 or $2,000, when men of no greater ability would not give their private practice for $15,000 or $20,000, I say we are not paying these men enough for their services. It is all right to curtail our expenses in some directions, but this is not one of them.

Hon. J. R. Stratton

in rising to respond to the nomination, said, Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I assure you I heartily appreciate the unanimous nomination accorded to me to-day to again contest the election in support of the Ross Government. I am pleased to see the splendid gathering here, in spite of the bad condition of the roads in the country. I accept the nomination you have so cordially offered me, and feel that I have the support of the electorate in the entire riding. I have every faith in the electors of West Peterborough, and have great confidence in accepting the nomination to-day, after the experience of the past sixteen years. I can say without fear of successful contradiction, that there is no government in the country that has given more careful and economical government, or more just laws than has been given by the Ross Government to-day, and the Governments under the different Premiers who have been at the head of the Government for the past quarter of a century. In Sir Oliver Mowatt, our present Lieutenant-Governor, we had an able leader. In his successor, Hon. A. S. Hardy, we had a leader who was well fitted for the vast amount of work he had to do. To-day our leader, Hon. G. W. Ross, is as confident and good a leader as we ever had, and who has the hearty and undivided support of his colleagues. These men have all had experience in the Government, and are true and faithful to their leader, their duties, and the province at large. In the Legislature we have men who represent the different constituencies in the province and who carefully consider each question that is brought before them. They all strive to bring the province ahead, and at the same time to keep down the expenditure as much as they possibly can, so that there will be no deficit to make up. I am satisfied that the Government will be returned after the approaching elections, and why should it not be returned? It should be returned because our legislation has been good. Our administration has been such that it cannot be equalled by the administration that would be given by the Opposition (applause). The Province of Ontario is to-day in the most healthy financial condition of any province in Canada. The Government has given back to the people more money to assist them and to relieve them of taxes than has ever been done by any other government. The people were benefitted in many ways. There were a large number of educational institutions that received money from the government, and this all tended to relieve those who attended them of a very large part of their fees.

A royal commission of three, composed of some of the greatest financiers of the province, had been appointed to examine the books of the province. In their report, they said the book-keeping was excellent, the work was carefully and correctly done and no monies had been paid out which were not authorized by the Parliament. There was not one dollar of the public money that had been misappropriated or used for any other purpose than that for which it was intended. As a result of this careful management there was a surplus —a large surplus—in the Treasury, to the credit of the people in the province of Ontario. On January 22nd last there was $1,468,492 in cold, hard cash lying in the banks in Ontario to the credit of the Province, and at the close of the last session there was $1,970,980.25. On Jan. 17, there was $2,226,957 in the Treasury. The services given to the public had been liberally conducted, yet there was not one dollar of the money collected by direct taxation. At the present time there were the following monies in the Treasury:

Cash	$1,468,492
Amounts due	1,292,981
Bal. Current Acc't	175,561
Interest bearing debentures	181,298
Interest during the year	142,414
To this should be added	100,000
Rec'd during the year	4,446,043
Collected from financial institutions	237,598
Collected from estates of the rich	365,581

The following monies were paid out:

Administration of Justice	$416,042
Public and High Schools	782,198
Maintenance of Insane Institutions	883,163
Hospitals and Charities	192,182
Colonisation roads	179 066

This represents over 60 per cent. of the total appropriations for the year. After spending sums of money for these purposes during the past 30 years, there is now a surplus of $2,225,000 in the province. No Government in Canada can show this splendid financial condition. There has never been one dollar of direct taxation levied on the people in the province. Since 1867, the expenditure has increased 60 per cent. This is largely due to the extra amounts given to the municipalities for public purposes. In view of these facts, the taxes in Ontario are lower than they are in any state in the Union. In the States the average tax per head is $12.55, while the taxes in Ontario are only $6 2—one-half what the average tax is on the other side. The taxes on real estate are lower here than in the States. The average tax in the Central States is $3 7-10 mills on the

MOTHERHOOD ENDANGERED

Women Occupied Too Much With Commercial Pursuits

Chicago, March 22 — A warning note that women and girls in this country were being drawn into commercial and manufacturing pursuits to an extent that jeopardized the welfare of future mothers, and was a menace to a happy home life, was sounded by Prof. D. L. Kiehle, of the chair of pedagogy in the University of Minnesota, before the department of superintendents of the National Educational Association, now in convention.

His address touched a popular feeling in the minds of educators who were present from all parts of the compass, and that portion stating that home life and surroundings were above all sordid gain was applauded.

"In this age of commercialism and industrial conditions," said Prof. Kiehle, "no provision has been made for motherhood. This phase of life seems to have been brushed aside. In fact, we are making money earners of our daughters in commercial pursuits.

"While women have every right to an equality with man in matters of education, they are going outside their sphere when that portion of their education fitting them for the higher duties of home life and motherhood does not take precedence over everything else.

"Education for women, that began only a few years ago on elementary lines, has extended to technical and classical courses, and has enabled women to compete for places formerly filled by men who supported families in many instances. The continuation of women entering commercial and industrial fields cannot but have disastrous results in time, until something is done to provide for home life also for women and the tendency to enter the office and factory is checked."

WAS MANY YEARS A PRISONER

Romantic Captivity and Wanderings of American Miner Long Thought Dead

FOUGHT IN ORIENT AGAINST THE 'PINOS

Captivity Among the Australian Aborigines Did Not Kill His Love of Adventure

New York, March 24—After 12 years' imprisonment among the bushmen in Australia, Joseph J. Gill, son of the late Thomas Gill, a well known Brooklyn manufacturer, has been heard from by his family, who had mourned him as dead. Gill left home in 1888 and in 1893 his wife, believing him dead, married again.

On Aug. 18, 1888, Joseph G. Gill sailed from New York to Australia, where he had extensive mining interests.

The mines were situated about 600 miles from Sydney and Gill expected to be gone two or three years. He left behind a wife and two children, boys of seven and five years respectively.

For two years letters were received regularly. His mining interests were prospering and he hoped soon to return to the United States, he wrote in his last letter.

A period in which no tidings were received from Mr. Gill followed, and then came a letter from the American consul at Sydney, N.S.W., stating that Joseph Gill, a wealthy mine operator and four companions had been ambushed and killed by Australian bushmen in Australia, not far from the mines which the Brooklyn man controlled.

LETTER FROM PHILIPPINES

This was the last heard from Gill until the news of his imprisonment which has just been received. It came in the form of a letter to Inspector McLaughlin of the Brooklyn police. The letter was dated Daigupan, Northern Luzon, Philippine Islands. The letter, which was written in November, 1901, was addressed to the Chief of Police, of Brooklyn. It was as follows:

"In 1888 I left my home in Brooklyn for Australia, where I was held a captive in the interior by bushmen until two years ago. I then came to these islands and entered the campaign with Macabebe scouts. Prior to Aguinaldo's capture I was severely wounded and I am afraid am a cripple for life. I am now making my way back to Sydney, Australia, to my wife and child.

"I do not know if my dear mother is dead, but would be glad to know her address if she is alive, of my brothers'. I shall be in Sydney by the time you receive this letter. Please address me in care of the United States consul at Sydney."

HIS MOTHER FOUND

The Brooklyn police had little difficulty in finding Gill's mother. Cable messages were at once sent to Gill at Sydney.

No details have yet been received concerning Gill's imprisonment among the bushmen, who murdered his four companions.

The private detective whom he is said to have employed reported that his wife was dead, and soon afterward Gill married a Sydney woman.

Poor Girl, Pity Her

Growing! Yes, into weakness, but not strength. Studies, plenty of them. Tired, of course she is, and weak, too. Does not eat enough, and digests far less than enough. This condition is so frequent, but how seldom noticed, even by fond parents. Give her Ferrozone, then watch her appetite improve, her cheeks and lips grow ruddy, her step elastic, her spirits buoyant. All this simply the result of eating and digesting enough, making blood, and thereby strengthening the nerve and brain power. Ferrozone gives a woman's strength to weak girls. Your daughter or wife needs Ferrozone. Get it to-day.

WEDDING BESIDE A COFFIN

Groom's Dead Mother's Wishes Executed in Minneapolis

Minneapolis, March 22—A most extraordinary wedding occurred here yesterday, when Lee Gilbert Smith married Grace A. Howell beside his mother's dead body. Friends and relatives were in attendance. The father of the bride gave her away; the groom's father stood at the head of his wife's flower-decked bier, weeping silently.

The bride wore a gown of light material and the younger girls in the wedding party were in white. The affair was characterized by a curious mixture of gayety and solemnity. During the ordeal the bride's lips trembled and her eyes filled with tears.

The wedding was in accordance with the dead mother's wishes.

DIED A PAUPER AT 104

Mary Jane Morgan Was Probably the Oldest Woman in Kansas

Galena, Kan., March 22 — In the little graveyard at the Cherokee county poor farm lies the unclaimed body of Mary Jane Morgan, aged 104, who died a pauper. She was once the wife of a wealthy man in Wooster, O., and moved to Kansas during the early boom, when misfortune overtook them. Since her first husband died, Grandma Morgan, as she was called, has made her own way for twenty-five years, by peddling. She was a familiar figure in the streets of Galena for many years. The day she was 100 years old she married John Morgan, who was in his 80th year. Morgan soon grew tired of his bride, and deserted her. So far as known she has no living relatives. It is claimed that she was the oldest woman in Kansas.

DEMOCRATS ON BOER WAR

House Caucus Says Congress Should Express Sympathy for the Boers

Washington, March 24 — The Democratic members of the House of Representatives held a caucus on the subject of the Boer war. The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States should by resolution express the sympathy of the people of the United States for the people of the South African Republic and Orange Free State in their heroic struggle to maintain their liberty and independence.

Resolved, That Congress should, in a spirit of amity and friendship, appeal to the British Government, in the interests of humanity, to accept overtures of peace, cease hostilities, and endeavor to bring about a just and honorable settlement of existing differences, to the end that peace may be established.

Resolved, That the United States should fairly and honorably maintain a position of strict neutrality in this contest between nations friendly to us, and see to it that the neutrality laws are vigorously and impartially enforced.

Resolved, That we, as Democrats and representatives of the people, use our utmost endeavors to force the committees now dominated by the Republican party, having in charge resolutions similar to these, to report the same back to the House, so that the Congress may give expression thereon, declaring the sentiments and the will of the American people.

A long resolution introduced by Representative Sulzer, was defeated, 32 to 36. It was similar in tone to those adopted, but went considerably further, representing that the United States was committed to the policy of arbitration as a method for settling international disputes and requesting the President to urge upon the British Government this policy of restoring and maintaining peace in South Africa.

WRITE ME A LETTER FROM HOME

Lonely I sit and weep,
Weep as I have not for years;
Why do mine eyes fail to keep
Back these affectionate tears?
I think of dear ones o'er the sea,
Who love me wherever I roam,
Oh, go to them, tell them for me,
To write a letter from home.

Chorus—
Have they forgotten me now
Or do they expect me to come?
No, no; go tell them for me
To write me a letter from home.

I think of the old fashioned cot,
I've left it for many a year;
The last words, 'God bless you," I've got
From mother and father so dear.
They hoped my voyage would be
A pleasant one over the foam;
Oh! some one go and tell them for me
To write me a letter from home.

CANADA'S STRONG CONTINGENT

Germany Plays a Strong Game in the Celestial Empire

London, March 24.—According to the Daily Mail to-day, Canada will send 300 mounted troops and 120 infantry to the coronation of King Edward in June next.

An Ottawa despatch this morning states that in view of the elaborate preparations which are being made for King Edward's coronation, there is every likelihood that the procession in London when his Majesty proceeds to Westminster Abbey will be on a far larger and grander scale than at the late Queen's Diamond Jubilee in 1897. India has been asked to send a thousand native troops, but in the case of Canada, Australia and New Zealand the quotas will not be as large. It is thought that the number to go from Canada will not exceed 500, and the probable expense will be about $50,000. The Imperial Government's invitation is now before the Dominion authorities, and action in regard to it will shortly be taken. It is understood that the contingent will be constituted on the lines of that which attended Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897.

The Department of Militia is overwhelmed with applications from officers and men who are anxious to serve on the contingent.

London, March 24.—The Berlin correspondent of The Herald declares that Germany is once more playing a strong game in China. Large squads of Berlin laborers have been ordered to China to complete the Shantung railway. There is no secret of the fact that syndicates are being formed to acquire the Weihsien mines. Negotiations are said to be progressing for the acquisition of the mines in the Shantung province. A garrison is to be maintained there to protect German interests. German policy has actually become more aggressive since the announcement of the alliance.

WAR AGAINST THE CLERICALS.

London, March 24.—The Madrid correspondent of The Times says the chief feature of Sagasta's new Cabinet policy will be the renewal of the war against the Clericals.

Items of Interest

London, March 22.—In a despatch from Vienna the correspondent of The Daily Chronicle says that Great Britain, Austria and Russia have addressed notes to Turkey admonishing the Porte to keep order in Macedonia and Albania.

Germany, says the correspondent, declined to join in this note.

CONCEDES RIGHTS FOR LOAN

London, March 21.—The Times understands that Persia has concluded an agreement with Russia under the terms of which Persia is to get a loan of $5,000,000, and is to give Russia a concession for a new road from Tabriz to Teheran.

MORE CANADIAN CASUALTIES.

Ottawa, March 21.—The Governor-General has received the following cable from the Casualty Department in South Africa:—

Stephenson enlisted in Ottawa, but was a resident of Morewood, Ont. He formerly served in D Company, Royal Canadian Regiment, Halifax, and was the champion sprinter of the regiment.

Figures That Tell the Story in Eloquent Words

The Case For the Temperance Party Seems to be Already Lost

In 1884-5 there was a great temperance wave swept Ontario. The enthusiasm ran high. The Scott act was to go into force and the campaign was the most sanguine and hearty that the temperance people have ever undertaken. The leaders of the movement naturally picked out the counties where the sentiment was such as to make it very likely that the Scott Act would be carried, and the fact that it was carried in 27 out of the 32 counties in which voting took place shows the strength of the sentiment. It is interesting to compare the results at that time with the vote polled in the same counties in the provincial election of 1886 as a relative indication of what the temperance people are likely to achieve this year. The following are the votes on the Scott Act by counties, and the total of the election of 1886:

	For	Against	Election 1886
Oxford	4,073	3,298	7,215
Halton	1,947	1,767	4,432
Simcoe	5,712	4,889	8,863

Thus while the vote cast in these 32 counties totaled 716,380, on the Scott act, the vote at the provincial election was 293,163 in the same counties. Fifty per cent. of that would have been 104,882, whereas the vote for the Scott act in these picked sections of temperance sentiment, a selection which did not include the cities or other unpromising electoral divisions, only returned 89,880 for temperance.

As an indication of the prospects of prohibition this is eloquent. There was more enthusiasm in 1884-5 over the Scott Act campaign than the Ross referendum will ever evoke; the temperance people naturally selected the most promising centres, skimmed the cream off the temperance sentiment of the province and yet failed to do in these picked constituencies what the government asks the temperance people to do throughout the whole province.

THE BOER LEADERS ASK FOR INDEPENDENCE.

Trouble Among Prisoners—First Death in the Canadian Mounted Rifles—Notes of the War

London, March 24.—The Transvaal legation at Brussels says that the correspondence between Holland and Britain has been presented to the fighting Boer leaders, as suggested some weeks ago, and that Lord Kitchener has received the replies of Steyn and Schalkburger. The Boer leaders in the field refuse to enter into negotiations which are not based upon complete Boer independence.

Arthur B. Markham was called to order in the House of Commons for declaring that all the news from South Africa printed in London, except by one newspaper, came from employes of capitalists in South Africa.

TROUBLE AMONG PRISONERS.

A number of Boers in the Bermuda prison camps have taken the oath of allegiance. A party of irreconcilables attacked their fellow prisoners who had taken the oath and tried to drown them in the Great Sound, Hawkins Island, but the military guard interfered and the irreconcilables are now in the military prison at St George.

A lieutenant-colonel of Yeomanry, writing to a member of the House of Commons from the front, says that the night marches average three a week, in heavy rain and thunder-storms, with the rivers swollen. He says that the Boer general, Erasmus, captured by his troops wants to fight on the British side, and that other Boers feel the same way.

Lord Methuen was on what he had intended for his last trek when he was captured. He contemplated taking up permanent headquarters and directing operations of his columns which had become too small to justify his accompanying them in person.

NEW MAN IN CHARGE.

Lieut.-Col. A. Wools-Sampson is to take over the field intelligence service in the western Transvaal.

In the Paris Chamber of Deputies yesterday M. Delcasse made the announcement that the British only held one Frenchman as a South African prisoner of war, and that strong efforts were being made to secure his release. Regarding the concentration camps all facilities had been given for forwarding provisions and other objects requested by the French committee. The statement was applauded by the members.

MOUNTED RIFLES' LOSS

Ottawa, March 24.—Trooper Moore, of Moosomin, N.W.T., is the first member of the Canadian Mounted Rifles to succumb to disease. The following Cape Town cablegram was received yesterday: "Death from dysentery, Newcastle, 19th March, 2nd Battalion, Mounted Rifles, R. G. Moore."

RHODES SLIGHTLY BETTER.

Cape Town, March 21.—A bulletin issued at midnight last night said that the lung difficulty of Cecil Rhodes had been ameliorated, but that owing to the heat, the patient was unable to sleep.

REV. FOSTER McAMMOND

Has Finally Resigned the Ministry—Has Been Offered A Good Business Position

Rev. Foster McAmmond, pastor of the Methodist church, formerly stationed in Ashburnham, has definitely decided to vacate his pulpit, and arrangements are being made for a new supply. A short time ago Mr. McAmmond tendered his resignation to the official board of the church and preached a farewell sermon to his congregation, but the following week he was convinced to remain as pastor for at least another year.

It is said that more letters re the Syracuse affair were received by the reverend gentleman and that he again came to the conclusion that it would be better to leave the ministry. It is said that the reverend gentleman has received the offer of a splendid business position. It is rumored in Perth that the Methodist congregation will extend a call to Rev. Mr. Timberlake, pastor of the MacLeod street Methodist church in Ottawa.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 24, 1902.

THE BOER WAR

The Methuen disaster has not changed the situation in South Africa from a British standpoint. The signs are more hopeful and it will not be long until peace reigns.

Lord Kitchener and his able staff of generals are doing splendid work, and systematically chasing the Boers out of their strong positions.

In considering the war it is well to remember that a vast number of troops is needed, and Lord Kitchener has never, up to the present, according to a reliable correspondent, had sufficient troops. An army of a million men would not be excessive. Nor must the fact be lost sight of that our recent successes in Orange Colony, while owing much to the dash, zeal, and wisdom of the driving columns, are the result of long, hard, and patient work, which has now been strikingly rewarded.

At this stage of the war the capture of guns by General Delarey is not considered important. His army has been demoralized, and he has no use for big guns. It keeps them busy avoiding British troops and they do not want such encumbrances.

The critics and the enemies of Great Britain, who are trying to bolster up the Boer cause by spreading a report that the capture of General Methuen, men and guns will have the effect of prolonging the war, talk either from malicious feelings or are ignorant of the facts.

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 236,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 208,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by E. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

The capital invested in electrical enterprises in the United States is estimated by "American Trade" at four billion dollars. We have the same authority for the assertion that these industries employ more than half a million persons. Almost half of the aggregate capital is represented by the electric railways, which, it would be safe to assume, employ a majority of the half-million persons. There were dismal predictions current ten or fifteen years ago of things that would befall certain classes of labor when electric cars came in; but the abolishment of the horse-car has probably thrown no one out of work—except the horse.

Anecdotal.

A country convert, full of zeal, offered himself for service in his first prayer-meeting remarks. "I'm ready to do anything the Lord asks of me," he said, "so long as it's honorable."

Some years ago at a Mardi Gras ball at the Hopkins Institute in San Francisco, a man, masked, approached a woman, masked, and asked her for a dance, as is considered right and proper at Mardi Gras. "But I don't know you, sir," said the lady in her most icy tone. "Well, I'm taking as big a risk as you are," retorted the man.

A tender-hearted youth was once present at an Oxford supper, where the fathers of those assembled were being roundly abused for their parsimony in supplying the demands of their sons. At last, after having long kept silence, he lifted up his voice in mild protest. "After all, gentlemen," he said, "let us remember that they are our fellow-creatures."

The Chatsworth (Ont.) "News" says: "A good joke is told on a Chatsworth young man who went to Owen Sound one day last week and dropped into Dr. Lang's office to be vaccinated. The doctor asked him if he had ever been vaccinated before and he replied: 'I've been vaccinated twice and baptized three times and neither one of them took.' The doctor hesitated, but finally concluded to vaccinate him, and judging from the way he holds his arm the third vaccination 'took,' even if the third baptism didn't."

Jacob A. Riis tells of an Irish teamster who went to the priest in a fright; he had seen a ghost on the church wall as he passed it in the night. "And what was it like?" asked the priest. "It was like nothing so much as a big ass," said Patrick, wild-eyed. "Go home, Pat! and be easy," replied the priest, soothingly; "you've only seen your own shadow."

Thomas Bailey Aldrich once received a pathetic letter in a feminine hand announcing the death of a little daughter and asking if he would not send in his own handwriting a verse or two from "Babie Bell" to assuage the grief of the household. Aldrich sent the whole poem, and not long after saw it displayed in the shop of an autograph dealer, with a good, round price attached thereto.

Senator Cullom of Illinois was asked by a correspondent why the Committee on Foreign Relations had enjoined secrecy on the text of the new treaty with Great Britain, when the text of the treaty was printed in all the morning papers. "Just so, just so," said the senator; "that's the reason the injunction of secrecy was placed upon the treaty. We knew that if we made it public at once not a paper in the country would print its full text."

During his visit to New York Thackeray was very much attracted by the beauty and brilliancy of a Miss B., and, in accordance with foreign custom, made a morning call, when she did not expect anyone. Hearing some talking in the lower hall, she leaned over the banisters and asked the servant who it was. "It's Mr. Thackeray, ma'am." "Oh, damn Thackeray!" replied Miss B. "No," said Thackeray, who could not but hear the remark, "it's not Misther O'Dam Thackeray, but Mr. Makepeace Thackeray." And, with a laugh, Miss B. came down.

The venerable Mr. —— believed unqualifiedly in Boston, as not the hub only, but the forward wheels also, of the universe. The excellent old gentleman, having confessed to L. G. that he had never found time, during his busy life, to read Shakespeare, was advised to do so during the winter then approaching. In the spring G. called on the estimable citizen, and casually asked if he had read any of the plays during the season just passed. "Yes," he replied, "he had read them all." "Do you like them?" ventured G., feeling his way cautiously to an opinion. "Like them!" replied the old man, with effusive ardor; "that is not the word, sir! They are glorious, sir; far beyond my expectation, sir! There are not twenty men in Boston, sir, who could have written those plays!"

Lord John (Russell) with a curious artlessness of disposition which made it impossible for him to feign a cordiality he did not feel, united an astonishing want of tact. Once, at a concert at Buckingham Palace, he was seen to get up suddenly, turn his back on the Duchess of Sutherland, by whom he had been sitting, walk to the remotest part of the room, and sit down by the Duchess of Inverness. When questioned afterwards as to the cause of his unceremonious move, which had the look of a quarrel, he said: "I could not have sat any longer by that great fire; I should have fainted." "Oh, that was a very good reason for moving; but I hope you told the Duchess of Sutherland why you left her." "Well—no. I don't think I did that. But I told the Duchess of Inverness why I came and sat by her."

The Use of the Word "Lady."

It is said that it is coming to be the fashion again to use the word "lady," and that the word "party" is also in better favor. For some years modish persons have called ladies "women," and parties "functions." There was some excuse for the former substitution because "lady" was worked to death, and so misused as to make it ridiculous. But vague as its meaning is, it has a meaning (or meanings), to the conveyance of which it is indispensable, and the folks who have dismissed it from their vocabularies have not been persons of much philological discernment.

The use of "function" for "party" has been a mere fad that must have started as a pleasantry and gradually became a habit. It makes it possible to speak of a row at a ball as a "functional disorder"; but even that doesn't warrant its vogue. It is a poor, borrowed, anglicized word, which the British-American language doesn't need.

Quite Too Romantic.

"I say, is this here the novel you advised me to read?" said the cabman to the librarian. "Yes," replied the librarian; "that's the one." "Well," said the cabman, "you can just take it back. There's nine people in the first four chapters who hired cabs, and each of 'em, when he got out, 'flung his purse to the driver.' Now, when I want that sort of literature, I'll go to Jules Verne and get it pure."

"No," said the landlady, "we cannot accommodate you. We only take in single gentlemen." "Goodness," replied Mr. Marryatt; "what makes you think I'm twins?"—Philadelphia "Record."

Mrs. Query—Isn't she a member of your club?

Mrs. Gadabout—Not any more. We had to get rid of her or she would have disorganized us.

Mrs. Query—You don't say?

Mrs. Gadabout—Yes; at one of our sessions we were discussing the servant girl question, and she said the best way to solve the problem was for all of us to stay at home and do our own work. —Philadelphia Press.

Curious Bits of News.

In London on New Year's Day, a burglar, having carried off five thousand pounds' worth of jewelry, all the silver, and a large sum in ready money, pinned a note on the hearth-rug wishing its rightful owners "Many happy returns of the day."

The London "Chronicle" quotes a naval officer as saying that during the War of 1812 the British Admiralty sent out to Kingston (Ont.), where the British fleet was then stationed, a large number of water-casks, in the belief that Lake Ontario was a salt water lake.

A coal-hod in the window of a New York clothier is filled with bills and coin, in which is thrust a coal shovel. Beside it is a small stove, so arranged with a red incandescent light that it appears to contain a brisk fire. Near them is the legend: "We are just burning money on these $12 suits, but we need the room, and they must be moved by February 1."

In an article on "Life in Labrador" in "Blackwood's Magazine," Mr. W. T. Grenfell vouches for the following: "A friend who had a young live black bear as a pet buried it in November in a barrel under the snow. Twice he dug it up in the winter, but it showed no signs of wishing to move, so he permitted it to sleep on till May."

Odors as an assistance to diagnosis is a new branch of medical science. The "Medical Record" is authority for the statement that the odor of new mown hay is an indication of pyaemia, typhus is indicated by an ammoniac smell, jaundice by a musky one, yellow fever by the odor of a gun-barrel, hysteria by a suggestion of violets or pineapples, intermittent fever by the smell of fresh-baked brown bread, and measles by one like fresh-picked feathers. It seems somewhat incongruous that the smell of the plague resembles honey.

The newest of queer religious sects is the "Association of Christian Brethren," which, according to the New York "Sun," is "sailing down the Mississippi in a modern imitation of the Ark to tell people that the millennium is surely coming in 1941." "Megiddo" is the name of the boat, and nearly one hundred persons, men, women and children, are aboard of her. The president of the sect is L. T. Nichols of Minneapolis, and he launched his craft at the end of November. He holds himself mainly responsible for the support of his followers, who are planning to live on the "Megiddo" until the day of the millennium.

Men sometimes dream of enormous wealth stored deep in the earth, below the reach of miners, but according to the statements of Professor C. R. Van Hise at the Denver meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, there is little or no ground to believe that valuable metallic deposits lie very deep in the earth's crust. Such deposits, he said, are made by underground waters, and owing to the pressure on the rocks at great depths, the waters are confined to a shell near the surface. With few exceptions, ore deposits become too lean to repay working below 2,000 feet. Nine mines in ten, taking the world as a whole, are poorer in the second thousand feet than in the first thousand, and poorer yet in the third thousand than in the second.

An article in "Ainslee's Magazine" contains this passage: "The world has never seen, and in no other part of the world is there now to be seen anything like America's jewel-madness as shown by the conditions of to-day, when more than three hundred New York establishments are engaged solely in the importation of precious stones, when agents of American dealers are searching Europe for the white gem and hopelessly endeavoring to supply American appeals for rubies and emeralds, and when six thousand men in South Africa are toiling to obtain diamonds more than half of which are to add to the beauty and happiness of the American woman. It is she that has caused the United States to become the greatest diamond market in the world. For her we have imported in a single year $30,000,000 worth of precious stones; for her, at one period we smuggled them in at the rate of $7,000,000 a year; for her we annually buy something like $12,000,000 worth of diamonds, and thus, for her sake, heartlessly leave, of the world's total output of diamonds, only some $8,000,000 worth to satisfy the vanity of all the rest of the women on earth."

When Crispi Was Lucky in Being Penniless.

THE late Francesco Crispi, the great Italian statesman, once escaped arrest as a revolutionist because he did not have a sou wherewith to buy a candle. The story is told in the "Courrier des Etats-Unis" (New York):

"On January 14, 1858, Francesco Crispi, the recently deceased Italian statesman, then a political refugee in Paris, received from an Italian friend connected with the Paris opera two gallery tickets for the performance of that evening, which the Emperor and Empress were expected to attend. Crispi and his wife were on the point of starting for the theater when the latter exclaimed: 'Francesco, where shall we get a candle?' They were in such destitution that they had neither candles nor matches, nor yet the wherewithal to buy them. Going to the opera would involve groping for their room at midnight and going to bed in total darkness. Too proud to confess their condition and to borrow a few sous they regretfully denied themselves the promised treat, remained in their room, and retired before the twilight had faded.

"On the following morning they learned of Orsini's attack on the Emperor, the police raids, and the arrest of all Italian revolutionists found in or near the theater. If Crispi had been in the house he would certainly have been among the first arrested, for he was known as an ardent disciple of Mazzini.

"The possession of a tallow candle and a match might have altered completely not only his own destiny, but also that of Italy!"

Max O'Rell on "Discontent."

MAX O'RELL never neglects to say a good word for the ladies whenever opportunity serves. At the same time, he does not shut his eyes to their faults, but is only "a little blind," as witness what he says about "The Discontented Woman":

"We all know that woman, not unkind, not exactly sour, but sad, depressed and depressing, who is well off and might enjoy life, but who looks as if there was not one pleasure left in the world to make it worth living in.

"She may feel ever so well, she will never confess it. She hates to be told that she looks well. She thinks you are wanting in sympathy. She loves to be pitied, and has no objection to being called 'Poor Mrs. A.!' Yet she is very susceptible, and resents any attentions that are paid to other people in her presence. She was jealous of her sisters when a girl; now she is jealous of her children, jealous of the ladies who call, jealous of her husband's secretary or typewriter. She has no reason for being jealous, she knows it, but it is a habit, and she likes to keep her hand at it.

"She is fond of calling on sick people, and, as she has had every mortal disease or indisposition you care to name, she gives the people whom she visits her own experience of their disease, and they have to listen to all the minute details of the sufferings she had to go through. She hopes that you will get better.

"Meanwhile she tells you of all the people she knows who have died of the disease with which you are afflicted, but reassures you by stating that some people have been known to recover.

"She is the town crier of bad news. If there is a sad event of which she hears early, she immediately orders a carriage and goes on a round of visits to announce it. When her friends see her arrive unexpectedly they look at each other and say, 'We shall hear some bad news.'

"She is a prophet of ill-omen. She loves the sad, and revels in it. It is her life. She has not a cheerful feature about her. She is a hair in your soup, a crumb in your bed, an unmitigated bore.

"She never enjoys what she has, but spends her life regretting what she does not or cannot have. If she lose a £4 bill and her husband says to her, 'Never mind; here's another,' she goes on sighing and whining, for she thinks that if she had not lost that £4 she would now have £8.

"There is no cheering her up, and when a real misfortune befalls her you feel inclined to exclaim: 'Good, serves her right, now she has something worth crying over.' But this seldom happens, if ever, for it is a remarkable fact that this kind of woman is the very one who never has real troubles—except those of her own manufacture."

Alleged Canadian Jests.

A WRITER in the "Pall Mall Gazette," who claims to have had much to do with colonial newspapers and colonial letters, has collected therefrom a number of what he chooses to call "Sea-borne Jests." Canada seems to supply him with the most material, but either he has evolved most of his Canadian jokes out of his own inner consciousness or else they have been curiously refracted in passing through the prism of an English mind. In any event some of them would never be looked upon as jokes in this country. For example: "Why does Dicky Ducky want to be M. P.?" asks the jester of a far Western paper. "Because he now has one P too many," is the answer, which, as the "Pall Mall" writer says, it is tolerably certain made dozens of big men in miners' boots laugh till they bent like jack-knives when that inscrutable conundrum was first let loose in British Columbia. Here are some better attempts—the alleged sayings of a ten-year-old boy, who is credited to Toronto:

I.—Teacher's question: "What is grass?" Boy's answer: "What you keep off."

II.—Question: "Who was the first man?" Answer: "Wolfe!" Reply: "Great Snakes! It was Adam!" Repartee: "Oh, well, if you count in foreigners!"

III.—Question: "What were the Greek marriage customs?" Answer: "Ev'ry man had one wife, which they called monotony!"

Another story told by the "Pall Mall" writer is that of a little doctor from a reserve in the North-West Territories. The doctor in question was a mooniaa (Anglice, "green") graduate from the East, and had just been appointed to look after the health of the Indians dwelling there or thereabouts. On his first visit to the reserve he found that everybody was suffering from a mysterious disease, the symptoms of which were very obscure. All the patients got a box of bread pills or a bottle of colored water—it is best to be on the safe side, and faith has cured many a mysterious epidemic among Indians—with the exception of the last comer. "This Indian," said he, laying his hand on his stomach, which was a chief's, "when he drink cold water feel cold pain here." Then the agent remembered that the doctor's predecessor had prescribed a bottle of good port in the hard case of an old squaw suffering from "the grippe," complicated with no-flour-for-six-months. We confess we fail to see much of a joke lurking in this story.

Too Bad.

"YES, I have watched her career with a great deal of interest." "She is a brilliant woman, isn't she?"

"She has been. I can't say that she is. As a girl she developed remarkable precocity. It was not so much in her literary proficiency that she displayed her qualities, as in that wide sense of her ultimate mission, in the broad conceptions she so early entertained of the crying needs of our social system. When only eleven, she had written a striking paper on sex relationships. At thirteen, her monograph of 'The True Prerogatives of Woman' had attracted wide attention. At fifteen, her essay on 'The Silent Vote' marked an epoch, and when, at twenty-two, she delivered her 'Motherhood of Man,' it became evident that a new force had risen. What a pity that now, after all, her life should be a failure."

"But how can it be a failure? What has she done?"

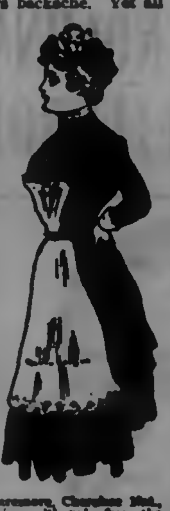
"Why, the miserable thing has gone off and got married!"—New York "Life."

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the [illegible]

The Weak Spot.

If you are sitting in a restaurant where waitresses are in attendance, you will note now and again some young woman put her hand to her back, and straighten herself up, while her lips are tightened as if by pain. It's backache. Yet all day long she must be on her feet, lifting, carrying, hurrying.



That weak spot, the back, can be made strong by the use of Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It cures the womanly diseases which cause headache, backache, sideache, nervousness and sleeplessness. It makes weak women strong and sick women well.

"Favorite Prescription" contains no alcohol, and is absolutely free from opium, cocaine and all other narcotics.

"I wrote you for advice February 4th, 1899," writes Mrs. Lona Halstead, of Claremore, Cherokee Nat., Ind. Ty. "I was racking with pain from the back of my head down to my heels. Had hemorrhage for weeks at a time, and was unable to sit up for ten minutes at a time. You answered my letter, advised me to use your valuable medicines, viz., Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and 'Pleasant Pellets,' also gave advice about injections, baths and diet. To my surprise, in four months from the time I began your treatment I was a well woman, and have not had the backache since, and now I put in sixteen hours a day at hard work."

THE MYSTERY OF BHOTAN.

A Weird Tale From The East.

PHIL and I were going to India, that far-away land of which so much has been written. We had talked the matter over for many a year, and now our hopes were about to be realized, as in a few days we were to set sail for the enchanted realms of the Orient. Phil was a companionable fellow—fearless, yet withal gentle and lovable. His equal could not be found in a week's march.

The object in view in taking this long journey was to personally study the habits of that peculiar and ancient race—the Hindus—and to gather specimens of fauna and flora which we, as scientific men, so much desired to add to our respective fine collections already gathered together from different sections of our own America and Europe.

Our trip across the Atlantic was uneventful. We reached Calcutta in due time without mishap. We first sought out one of those necessities to travelers in a strange land, a guide. A couple of onagers or burros were also secured, and on the third day after our arrival we were ready to proceed inland. We laid our route to the northward, through the Bengali district, whence we would proceed to the mountains of the Himalaya range and spend most of our time in and around Bhotan.

We journeyed leisurely and found much that interested us. We had been fortunate in securing for our guide a native who was thoroughly acquainted with the territory through which we desired to go. He and Phil became fast friends.

We had a very successful trip without incident until we neared the borders of Bhotan, some three hundred miles distant from Calcutta. Here Poonjah confessed that he did not care to go further toward the north; said we could go to the east or to the west, or anywhere else, but not there. We coaxed, cajoled and entreated; but he stood firm. Finally, when pressed for his reasons for refusing to continue the trip into the territory which we had selected, he graphically portrayed to us by speech articulate and pantomimic that it was a land of evil spirits, and that the Bhotanese were sorcerers and in league with the demons of the air. If we insisted on going there we would take our lives in our own hands. Furthermore, he personally had been warned away from there severals years ago, and was told that should he ever return anywhere within the borders of Bhotan his life would pay for his temerity; that he was a marked man, and though he should escape the watchful eyes of the people, he would still be in danger, for the spirits would seek him out and slay him.

The vivid portrayal of Poonjah's feelings and fears impressed us both deeply. But before us were the coveted prizes that this land held, and which we had come so far to secure. To retreat now before an imaginary foe was galling to our pride. We sympathized with our benighted guide, and we argued that he belonged to a superstitious race, and that if we could but prevail upon him to proceed with us all would be well, and we could later convince him of the folly of his fears.

As we were then in an interesting district we let the matter drop so far as Poonjah was concerned, but took it under advisement between ourselves for several days.

Our silence upon the subject had about convinced our faithful guide that we would not attempt to go farther north, and he had in the meantime regained his usual happy demeanor and gentle composure.

One morning Phil suggested that we once more broach the subject to him. We could not then give up our further trip, and if our arguments with him should not prevail we would dismiss him to return to his own land, while we pushed on alone to the goal of our desires.

"Come here, Poonjah," said I, as he was passing near our tent. "We are about to take up our journey to the northward, with or without you, as you please. We have thoroughly discussed the situation, and while we deeply sympathize with you in your dread of this land, we cannot forego our trip in consequence of it. If you are afraid to continue we will go on alone, and you may retrace your steps without us."

I had unwittingly struck the keynote to his pride. He listened to me in silence. When I had finished speaking he straightened up his lithe form, and in measured tones said:

"A Hindu is not a coward. Poonjah knows no fear for himself. He can but die. It is for you that he has feared and has dared to rebel. But as you are determined to go, Poonjah is but your slave and will go with you. May Buddha save you from all harm."

With a gracious salaam he quitted our presence.

This matter being settled, we set about preparing to take up our line of march, our destination being Tasagong, the principal village of Bhotan, where we hoped to be hospitably received by the natives.

At break of day the following morning we were astir. Poonjah had our burros ready, and not a line of fear or hesitation was visible upon his mobile countenance. In fact, he appeared more voluble and cheerful than usual, and he and Phil became more attached than ever.

Two days later we were upon the lofty table-land separating British India from Bhotan, and by another day we hoped to be in the latter country—the reputed land of evil spirits.

I must confess to a feeling akin to superstitious dread as the night closed around us, and for the first time my thoughts reverted seriously to the many rumors which I had heard and tales that I had read respecting the people with which we were to sojourn during the next few weeks.

"A fellow-feeling makes us wondrous kind." I could now more fully feel for Poonjah. He had been reared and educated in a land of darkness, superstition and occult mysteries. My training had been altogether in a different atmosphere, where superstition had no habitat, and wherein it would have been an evidence of ignorance and cowardice to have betrayed a semblance of dread of the supernatural. Yet here I found myself upon this borderland actually imbibing the fears of our benighted guide.

I mentioned not a word to either Phil or Poonjah that would betray to them my sensations; neither did I discover in either of the twain aught that would lead me to believe that they were at all worried over the prospect.

That night I slept the sleep of the just, and it was broad daylight when I awoke. Poonjah and Phil had been astir long before me, and breakfast was already prepared.

I had become much attached to our Hindu guide; but between him and Phil a friendship had sprung up that was more than ordinary. The two were almost inseparable.

As I emerged from the tent I noticed them in animated conversation, which ended in a warm embrace as they saw me approaching. Phil afterward told me that his friend still had misgivings about the safety of the party, and they had mutually pledged eternal fealty come what would, but did not want to worry me about it.

We were on a peaceful errand and hoped it would have a peaceful ending, and if we should find the natives to be warlike or resentful at our approach we would try to win them over by kindness and a liberal distribution of small treasures among the chiefs.

Two days more and we had reached Tasagong. We were not molested on our way thither, but were eyed with much curiosity by all. We repaired first to the chief of the village and through our guide told him what we desired. We gave him several pieces of silver and gold, and we were taken into His Majesty's good graces at once. He tendered us the use of one of his bungalows, which was dry and comfortable, and, thanking him for his courtesy and generosity, we were shown to the place.

It was one of the typical bungalows of that section, only larger, and contained three rooms, with flooring and matting. It was elevated like others, as a protection against creeping and crawling things abounding in that country. It furthermore possessed doors, which could not be said of all structures used as habitations in Tasagong.

The chief gave orders among his people that we be not molested, and tendered us the freedom of the place.

We were all very weary and sought rest at an early hour that night. A large bed, well supplied with skins of wild beasts abounding in that region, lured us quickly to sleep. Phil and I occupied this bed, and Poonjah a smaller one in an adjoining room or alcove.

It seemed to me as though I had just closed my eyes in slumber when I awoke with a start, and instinctively felt the presence of another person in our room. The room was dark—very dark. I was spellbound. I could neither move nor speak. There was something or somebody moving stealthily along in front of our bed. A clamminess came over me that chilled me to the heart. I essayed to move or speak, but my limbs remained rigid and my tongue clave to the roof of my mouth. It was a sensation impossible for me to describe. An uncanny chilliness pervaded the room. The thing moved with a rustling sound that was bloodcurdling. I waited for a denouement which I felt must soon come. Whatever or whoever it was, it quickly withdrew, and I breathed freer. It had made the circuit of the room two or three times as though in search of something. When it finally departed it apparently vanished through the floor, for no door was open to allow of exit that way.

For a few moments I remained in a horrified state, but soon felt the return of my faculties and was about to waken my companion and tell him of my experiences, when I felt him move, and, rising upon his elbow, he almost yelled:

"Professor, did you hear that?"

"Hear what?" I ejaculated, sleepily, as though just aroused from slumber and annoyed at being disturbed.

"There has been someone in this room, and now he has gone!"

"Nonsense!" I rejoined. "You are afraid of spirits and have had a bad dream. Lie down and go to sleep again."

But he would not have it so, and insisted that he had been fully awake. He then went on to relate in detail just what he had heard, and it agreed exactly with my experiences. We arose at once and lighted a taper, and began an exploration of the place. Not hearing a word from where Poonjah lay, we went there first. He was awake—his face distorted with agony. When at length our presence had somewhat reassured him, he repeated to us the same unearthly tale.

We searched the three rooms of the bungalow. There was no hole large enough for even a cat to crawl through. The doors were securely fastened as we had left them on retiring. Referring to our watches, we found that it was just past midnight.

Outside all was deathly still except for the distant laugh of a hyena or the howl of a jackal.

There was no more sleep for any of us the balance of the night, and we heartily welcomed the first glimmer of dawn.

We said nothing to anyone in the village about our experiences. We even dreaded to speak of them among ourselves.

We spent several days following with great profit and pleasure to ourselves. The venerable chief and his tribesmen were exceedingly friendly, and aided us greatly. Our fears had been by this time allayed, and we had attributed our unpleasant experiences of the first night to overwrought imagination and the fatigue of a long tramp the day previous.

However, we never relaxed vigilance, and loaded pistols were kept under our pillows while we slept, we more than half believing that our nocturnal visitor might come again and prove himself to be real flesh and blood, in which case we would be able to successfully cope with the fellow.

But our troubles were not destined to end so happily as we had hoped. One night I was again awakened as suddenly as on the previous occasion, and there was no mistake about what I heard. There was that same dreadful, indescribable presence in the room. Strive as I might to move, I could not. It was as though I had been chained to the spot by the links of Prometheus. Phil was perfectly quiet, and silence reigned except for the beating of my heart and the swish, swish of garments as though trailed along. The cold perspiration stood out in great beads on my face. The thing came toward the bed. I could now feel its chill and terrible breath upon my cheek, and how I survived the ordeal and remained sane I know not. When the Thing at last left us, it, as before, apparently disappeared through the floor.

Phil had heard it and was ready to assist again in the search. The hour was midnight. Poonjah, his eyes nearly bulging from their sockets, welcomed our presence and accompanied us in our search. But it was vain. No clue had been left behind, and we were more mystified than ever.

We could not bring ourselves to desert the bungalow while working in that district, and we were not yet through there. Besides, we could offer to the chief no reason for rejecting his hospitality while still remaining in his country. But we determined to leave just as soon as we could decently do so.

We remained there for two more weeks without further adventure worth speaking of, and had packed up our belongings, prepared to start on our southward journey the next morning.

Phil and Poonjah were in ecstasies. We had had a most successful trip, and we were returning freighted with precious treasures—some of them priceless. The chief was to give us safe conduct to the border, and we had much to be thankful for.

It was late that night when we retired, and we were not long awake after reaching our beds. It is a sleepy, drowsy climate, and we were never troubled with insomnia while there.

The bed which was occupied by Phil and me was placed against the inside partition and elevated some two feet from the floor. I usually slept on the front side of the bed, and did so in this instance.

My mind is perfectly clear as to my exact position. I went to sleep lying upon my right side, facing the room. When I awoke, shortly after, I was still in the same position. All my senses were alert. I felt that same horrible and gruesome presence again! It was near our bed and advancing toward us. On, on, nearer and nearer, slowly, like a cat upon its prey!

An unutterable sensation crept through my veins. I felt that something terrible was impending. What it could be I had not the slightest conception.

I would have given all my precious treasures could I at that moment have spoken or even moved. But my voice and limbs refused their offices, and I lay there as helpless as a child.

The strain was terrible. Had there been a visible enemy with whom to do battle it would have been different. But here in a strange land, said to be infested with evil spirits, and in the midst of a night whose darkness could be fairly felt, I was face to face with some intangible Thing that was advancing upon me unseen!

Suddenly it drew back slightly, and then, with a lunge forward, it appeared to strike a mighty blow at my sleeping companion.

With this movement came release for me, for I was no longer bound.

"Buddha! Phil! Buddha!" and he was then silent.

Phil rose up in the bed, screaming:

"My God, it has struck me!" and with a peculiar gurgle, as though being strangled, he fell back upon his pillow and uttered not another sound.

Quick as a flash I now rose up in the bed, only to come in contact with a form that appeared like a man's. I grappled with it, all fear having fled. I felt the strength of a Samson in my sinews. It was as real to me then as though I could see the intruder. Only one thought pervaded my mind—to capture this thing or die in the attempt.

My arms closed around it as firmly as would the coils of a python, and with a power born of desperation I brought them closer and closer, tighter and tighter. I could feel it in my grasp struggling to free itself, but it might as well have fought against the embraces of an octopus! I was getting the better of my unknown antagonist. My arms came together relentlessly, and before I could utter a word they cleaved the object in twain and came together, when I found in my arms—nothing

I jumped from the bed more dead than alive. I cried aloud to Phil in my terror, and then to Poonjah. But no response came from either.

I struck a light as quickly as my nerveless condition would allow and looked around me. One glance at the spot where Phil lay told a tragic story. His features were distorted and livid, and it did not require a second look to convince me that he was dead.

I reached over and tenderly touched the tortured face, but there was no response. The vital spark had fled.

With a cry of despair I rushed to where our guide had slept, half-fearing that in some way he might have been responsible for this terrible and mysterious tragedy. But I had wronged the poor fellow. He, too, was beyond the power of man, and lay on his cot in his last, long sleep.

I looked at my watch, and it was just past midnight. I examined the bungalow carefully, but found all secure.

I now opened one of the doors. Outside the air seemed oppressive. My brain reeled, and I fell to the ground in merciful unconsciousness.

• • • • • •

There are two lonely graves upon the hillside near Tasagong. A slab stands at the head of each. One was marked by me in English simply "Phil," the other, "Poonjah." But after my departure (which fact I learned from the missionary who had given them Christian burial) a cabalistic inscription was placed on each by some person unknown, which translated signifies, "The spirits are avenged!"

The Old Man's Occupation.

The old man of the following story lived, presumably, in England, since we copy his words from an English journal, but we are not quite sure that his counterpart might not be found on this side of the water.

"It's a queer world when you come to look it over," said the old man. "You know I eddicated Jim for a lawyer."

"Yes."

"An' Bill for a preacher."

"Exactly."

"An' Tom for one of them literary fellers."

"Yes."

"An' Dick for a doctor."

"Yes."

"Well, now, what do you reckon I'm a-doin' of?"

"Can't say."

"Well, sir, you might not believe it, but I'm a-supportin' of Jim an' Bill an' Tom an' Dick, an' it keeps me a-goin' from daylight to dark."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

This was something like romance. — sitting under the spreading shade of the green trees, listening to the singing of the brook and the birds, with this handsome hero with her — his dark eyes full of unspoken love riveted on her face.

She was but a child, or a handsome face would not have had power to fascinate and charm her so.

During the conversation he had told her his name, and that he was from that great big city, New York, that seemed like a strange world to Daisy, who had heard such strange stories concerning it.

"If I should guess your name," he added, laughingly, "I should say it must be that of some sweet flower, you have just the face that would indicate it."

"I am named after a flower," replied Daisy, blushing to the very roots of her waving golden curls. "You are quite right."

"If I were to select a name by which to be permitted to call you, it would be Lily," he said, with a sly twinkle in his eye.

"Do you like that name better than Daisy?" she asked wonderingly.

"It is a thousand times more lovely, as is the peerless white flower that bears its name, to the common roadside blossom. Yes, pray permit me to call you Lily if I may."

"Certainly, if you like that name so much," stammered Daisy, in confusion, hardly knowing what to say.

But from that moment in which this handsome stranger spoke so lightly and sneeringly of the name "Daisy," she lost all pleasure in the simple sweetness of her own name.

Never in her life had the hours passed so quickly to Daisy, but she remembered at last that it was time to go back to the house, or Margy or her father would be coming out to search for her.

She walked quickly home — somehow the world seemed a little changed to her. Of course it was the same path she had known for years, but this morning it seemed different; the light of the sun seemed more golden — the fragrance from the flowers in the orchard as she passed by seemed more sweet; even the birds in the branches seemed to be singing a new song.

Margy was surprised at the lovely flush on her face and the happy light in her blue eyes as she entered the kitchen.

"Has the child been lonely?" asked Farmer Gordon, anxiously, of Margy, that afternoon.

"No," answered Margy, slowly, "she has quite forgotten the keen disappointment of being left behind; she has been singing like a bird all the afternoon," and the farmer smiled quite contentedly, little dreaming what made his beautiful young daughter so happy.

The days that followed flew by on golden wings to Daisy. It so happened that no day passed in which she did not see Harold St. John.

It was never by appointment —always by accident as Daisy supposed. And she grew to look forward to seeing him with an eagerness that even she little dreamed of herself.

Oh, foolish, beautiful hours spent by the brook- side or wandering through the glen. The fortnight had almost slipped by, on the morrow was to be the great lawn- fete at Briar Hall, and the following day Hatty and Olive were to return.

Looking into that lovely childish face, Harold St. John was not quite sure whether she loved him or not, and the thought was shaping itself in his heart whether or not he should ever be able to win her —or if he should have to leave her at last.

He loved her for herself, but for all that he would have passed her by, if it had not been for the three millions.

CHAPTER IV.

Only a Farmer's Daughter.

At first Harold St. John became interested in pretty Daisy Gordon, because she was so indifferent to his homage; but as the days flitted by he learned to love her with an intensity that surprised even himself. To youth, love's sweet dream comes quickly; yet there was a reason—ay, and a grave one —why he should have gone on his way and not braved fate by loving this fair young girl.

It was the last day but one before the lawn- fete, and Harold stood with Daisy at the old trysting-place beneath the peach tree, telling her the time had come at last when he must bid her farewell.

"Shall you miss me when I am gone?" he asked. "I am going away tonight, and the keenest pain I have ever known will be leaving you, Daisy."

The startled expression in the lovely blue eyes, half veiled by those long, curling, golden lashes, answered him as no words could have done. Poor Daisy! a great wave of desolation and sorrow swept over her. After tonight it would be all over — this beautiful friendship, these happy hours, these sunny days that she had thought would have no ending. Her dimpled face grew white, and her hands trembled. What would life be to her after he went away!

Permanent Cures of Cancer

We here give a few cases, where the efficacy of our constitutional treatment in curing Cancer is established beyond all question. We have plenty on fyle.

There is ample proof that where our remedy cures, it cures to stay and saves people from the torture of knife and plaster.

CANCER OF THE BREAST—A lady had Cancer of the Breast, which rendered her right shoulder and arm almost helpless. Our remedy cured her over five years ago, and there is not the slightest return of the trouble.

CANCER OF THE FACE—This case of a gentleman who was so bad that his right cheek was almost eaten off with the disease. Plasters aggravated his trouble. Our treatment cured him five years ago and he has been all right since.

CANCER OF THE STOMACH—Doctors pronounced the trouble cancer of the stomach. There was vomiting of material that looked like coffee grounds. Great weakness and prostration. Cured over four years ago and well to-day.

CANCER OF THE NOSE—A severe case which was cured by our remedy in 1891 and has never returned to this day.

Full accounts of the above cases, together with the names and addresses of the persons, are given in our new book, "Cancer, its cause and Cure," sent to anyone, in plain wrapper, on receipt of two stamps. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

THE LATE JOHN CADIGAN

A Highly Esteemed Citizen, of Ashburnham, Passes Away.

The death occurred on Friday evening of John Cadigan, aged 69 years, who for the past 15 years has resided in Ashburnham. For a number of years previous to coming to town he lived in Ennismore, the land of his birth. Deceased has been suffering from rheumatism and kidney trouble for some years and has been unable to take any very active part in business. For some time he was watchman at the Grand Trunk bridge at the locks. Deceased was married three times, one daughter, Mrs. Burke, of town, by his first wife, and one son and two daughters by his third wife, who also survives him, are left to mourn his death.

The news of his death comes as a shock to a large circle of friends by whom he was greatly esteemed.

The funeral takes place this morning at 8 o'clock from his late residence, James Street, Ashburnham, and will proceed to St. Peter's Cathedral, thence to the Roman Catholic Cemetery for interment.

DEATH OF MR. JOHN WAREHAM

of Hancock, Well Known in Peterborough—Died in Newberry Hospital from a Paralytic Stroke.

A telegram was received yesterday from Hancock by Mrs. Robt. Shera, bearing the sad news of the death of her brother, Mr. John Wareham, at Newberry Hospital, U. S. A., from a paralytic stroke. Mr. Wareham was known among a large circle of friends in town, and was a highly esteemed resident of Hancock. He paid a visit to town last summer, and renewed old acquaintances.

The sorrowing friends have the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

HIS CERTIFICATE RETURNED

Capt. Charles Calcutt Can Now Follow His Profession as Master

Hon. James Sutherland, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has returned to Captain Charlie Calcutt, his masters certificate which was cancelled last summer by the Ministers on account of alleged carelessness of the captain in not seeing that his boat was properly equipped with gang planks. The minister considered that the punishment already inflicted was sufficient and will be a warning to him to exercise greater care in the future.

The many friends of captain Calcutt will be pleased to hear that he is at liberty to take charge of his boat again and will hope that he will be on his route this summer.

BASKETBALL.

A good game of basketball was played at the Y.M.C.A. on Saturday evening between two local teams, the Brownies and the Harriers. It was one of the best games played this season, and was witnessed by a good crowd.

From the start the play was hard on both sides, with the best combination play shown by the Brownies, but the advantage of weight with their opponents. At half time the score was 13-6, in the last half the boys all played to win, but when time was called it was found that the Brownies were victorious by a score of 19 to 15. The game was refereed by Mr. H. E. Ayers, Physical Director; and the Umpires were,—for the Brownies, Mr. F. Trollope, Port Hope, and for the Harriers, Mr. Walter McGuire.

The proceeds amounted to about $34, and go to the Children's Aid Society.

Admirers of the game, and those who have never seen it played, should not forget the game which will be played next Saturday evening, between the local Y.M.C.A. team and a team from the Association in Ottawa.

FEDERATION OF MUSICIANS

The 57th Band Has Become Affiliated with The American Federation of Musicians

On Friday evening the 57th Regiment Band decided to become affiliated with the American Federation of musicians, an organization which affords great advantages to a band in the same way as it assists the Federation of Labor.

At the regular meeting of the Federation of Labor on Friday evening a large number of new members were initiated. Mr. J. Flett, Organizer was present. Arrangements were made for a meeting to be held this evening to organize a Trades and Labor Council. Some discussion arose over the proposed separation of in door labor from the local union and to establish a union for them. The matter was left over until the next meeting for further discussion.

The regular weekly meeting of Union 6940 will be held on Thursday evening of this week instead of Friday, on account of the holiday.

THE LATE MRS. BLOMFIELD

One of Lakefield's Best Esteemed Citizens Passes Away After a Short Illness

Many people in town will be shocked to learn of the death of Mrs. C. J. Blomfield, of Lakefield, which sad event occurred at her home on Saturday morning. The deceased had only been ill about a week, suffering from pneumonia and in spite of all that medical skill could do her condition became very serious on Friday and hopes for her recovery were given up and death came on Saturday morning.

The deceased was well known in Lakefield and Peterborough and was held in very high esteem by a very large number of friends who will mourn her demise and extend their deepest sympathy with the sorrow-stricken husband and family in their great sorrow.

The funeral will take place this afternoon at two o'clock.

How One Million is Spent.

Not less than one million dollars is annually spent by people seeking an absolute cure for catarrh, bronchitis and consumption. Numerous are the remedies, but the one standing pre-eminently above all others is Catarrhozone. It cures these diseases because it is sure to reach them. Catarrhozone is inhaled into the lungs, throat, and nasal passages, and bathes every part of the diseased membrane with its germ-killing, healing vapor. You simply breathe Catarrhozone and it cures. Price 25c. and $1 at druggists, or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Hon. J. R. Stratton Nominated

dollar, while in Ontario it is only 9 6-10 mills—less than one-half of the taxes paid by citizens in the States. In several places in the States, the taxes on farm property are as high as 47 cents per acre. The average is 35c per acre in Michigan, and in New York State it runs from 35c to 40c for all purposes. Professor Clark, of the State Agricultural College, of New York said that 50c per acre would be a fair average there per acre. In this province, the farmers pay from 15c to 19c per acre as taxes on their land. This is less than one-half the amount paid in the States. The Government of Ontario pays out nearly 50 per cent. of the annual expenditure to assist the different municipalities. If it were not for this the taxes to the farmer would be more than double what they are to-day. This policy has been adopted by the Government since Sir Oliver Mowat became Premier. The result is, that the taxes have been relieved about 50 per cent. During this time the Government has spent over $6,000,000 for educational purposes alone. The expenditures of the municipalities have been increased from 25 to 47 per cent. There had been a great deal of opposition raised by the Conservative party to the policy pursued by the government in dealing with the manufacture of pulp and pulp wood. The government had granted certain concessions to assist in this great industry. The first was at Sault Ste. Marie which meant an expenditure of $400,000. The company pays 40c per cord for the privilege of cutting down the timber, and furnishes employment for a large number of hands; at Sturgeon Falls they spent $1,000,000; employment is given to 240 hands there. At Spanish River $500,000 had been expended; employment was given to 250 hands. The Opposition had strongly objected to the aid given, contending that the government was giving the country away. This was not so. The companies paid for the privilege to cut the timber, nothing more. When the land was cleared of the timber it reverted to the government and could be sold or given away in free land grants to settlers. There was no agreement to take only 40c per cord for the wood. The price could be raised at any time to $2 or $3 per cord. A settler going into the unbroken country had the privilege of doing what he wished with the wood on the land. If this policy had been pursued by the government some years ago, the province would have been better off. They would have had a market at their own doors for the wood. This policy must be fully approved of by everyone. So fair and just has it been that at the recent session of the House, Mr. Marter, who for years was the leader of the Opposition, in a very forcible speech, denounced the leader of the Opposition on Saturday last, for the policy he pursued, as it was most detrimental to the best interests of the people. He strongly denounced Whitney and his colleagues and such a scene as ensued has never before been seen in the Ontario House.

We have to-day the Algoma Central Railway extending from the Soo to Michipicoten, and which it is intended to run off to James Bay. This was denounced as the most gigantic steal and robbery on record, but the establishment of the large mills at the Soo, entailing the expenditure of $12,000,000 to $20,000,000; the growth of the population to 8,000 or 10,000 persons, has convinced the public of the wisdom of the plan. In no portion of the country has foreign capital been brought in as here by Mr. Clergue and his colleagues. When we made a land grant of 7,400 acres per mile to this railroad, Mr. Whitney denounced it most emphatically, but later when we gave 10,400 acres per mile to the line from Meaford, he stood on the floor of the House and said he had nothing to say in opposition to the Bill, but that it was in the best interests of the province. With a railway across the Bruce peninsula, connecting with the Algoma Central, the trade from the new section should be diverted to Old Ontario, where it belongs, instead of going across to the United States. The Rainy River Ry., with a line of steamers from Michipicoten to Port Arthur, completes a competing line with the C.P.R., 150 miles shorter. This line might be operated the year round by utilizing the St. Joe Railway, connecting at North Bay with the C.P.R. and G.T.R. Some time ago the government sent out exploration parties and these found that some 16,000,000 acres of agricultural land lies west of Temiscaming, which we intend to have opened up for our lads that they may make homes there. For the benefit of settlers going in here the government has built the Algoma Central and the Manitoulin and North Shore Railways; and no government ever made contracts more to the interests of the province, than the Ontario Government did in these two contracts. Nor do the settlers need to fear that exorbitant rates will be charged, as is the case of some railways built under the Conservative government.

I wish also to say something of a most important question now before the Ontario electors. I refer to the referendum; the Bill passed by the Manitoba Legislature, approved by the Privy Council, and now submitted to the people of Ontario. The policy of the government on this question is a united policy, there are no divisions. It is easy to criticise, but we take the whole responsibility for our action. The Government has decided that no other measure of prohibition shall be given than that approved by the Privy Council, and which will be voted on on Dec. 4th next. We believe such action has been demanded by the people of Ontario. And we also take the responsibility of the ratio of votes required. There are in Ontario between 500,000 and 600,000 persons entitled to vote at the Provincial elections. Some 420,000 votes were polled at the last general elections of the province, and we have decided that if from a population of 2,500,000, 420,000 of whom voted at the last provincial elections, 212,000 will go out and vote for this measure, the Government will assume the responsibility of enforcing the Act. I ask the temperance men of the province who are not the party advocates on either side, if it is not the best measure of prohibitory law ever introduced in the province?

If this proportion of votes cannot be secured in support of the measure, would we be justified in making it a statute of the Province? Would we have the public opinion behind us in its enforcement? We believe we have acted wisely and as the people would wish, so that Liberals and Conservatives can go out and vote untrammeled by any other question, as they believe to be right. We believe the position of the government is the best possible position, and we are not afraid when the time comes to submit to the people. We hear said the Government is tumbling; we have heard that cheat and almost from Confederation. When the cabinet was reorganized, and I was offered the Provincial Secretaryship, you kindly returned me by acclamation. Hon F. R. Latchford, made Minister of Public Works, was returned by the election of South Renfrew, by a majority of some 450. In South Ontario where Billy Smith had bought out Mr. J. Dryden, we returned it into a victory. In Renfrew we secured a victory, and in Kent we were equally successful. They say the tide shows which way the wind is blowing, and we are satisfied that the progressive, go-ahead policy of the Government will meet with your approval. But for Sir Oliver Mowat and his colleagues, 160,000 square miles of splendid land would not now have been part of this Province. No greater onslaught was ever made on the rights of the people than the attempt of the opposition to wrest this from them; and if for no other reason, I say they should never be allowed to control the affairs of the Legislature. If you would know how the time of the House is taken up the explaining Bills, for their lack of energy in posting themselves you would agree with me that no body of men were ever entrusted with the business of a Government, so incapable as the gentlemen seated to the left of the speaker in the Provincial Legislature. No leaders of any party ever sat in the Legislature who knew so little of Bills passing through as the leaders of the Opposition of Ontario to-day. When we look back over a period of 70 years and see the few mistakes made by the present administration, I feel sure that intelligent electorate will say, we will give them an opportunity of carrying out the great destinies which they have mapped out for themselves and for the people. We are human, and have made mistakes, but we have made an honest effort to govern your affairs in the best manner possible.

I thank this meeting for the nomination; I am in a different position from that of four years ago, as a member of the Government. If you had confidence in me at that time, surely you may have increased confidence now, because of increase of influence. If we progress in the next 10 years as we have in the past, we will be as a city what we are to-day as a town. There is no place in Ontario, outside of Toronto, Hamilton, London and perhaps Brantford, where greater progress is being made. Though we have lost some of our best men as Hon. Senator Cox, who is with us to-day, we feel we have a great future ahead of us as a city.

In my representation of this constituency, I have known no man's politics, but have shown as many kindnesses to Conservatives as to Liberals; and in doing so, I am doing what I believe to be right and just. My motto shall be first, the town and county of Peterborough, and second, the Province as a whole, you will probably have an opportunity of showing in the near future that you do not fear the ability of the present administration to make this the first Province of the first Colony of the first Empire in the world. (Cheers)

Hon. Geo. A. Cox

In response to a call from the chair said, Chairman and Gentlemen,—I did not come here to-day for the purpose of making a political speech as I am [illegible] out of political circles. I came here at the invitation of Hon. Mr. Stratton and am pleased indeed to be here and to look into the faces of so many of my old friends. I desire on this occasion to thank the voters in this riding for their support in past years; I am proud to work for the interests of this town which all in my power to assist it in any way I can. I am proud of the man who has won any fame for many years and to do bring your representative in Parliament for so many years. He is an old Peterborough boy, was born and brought up in this town and to-day stands as one of the leading men in our Province. He has been instrumental in getting many things for this town. The honors of bringing the Cereal Company to this town, and who are now spending thousands here should be divided between Mr. Stratton and myself. Through business dealings I persuaded that Company to locate here and had it not been for the assistance given by Mr. Stratton in helping to arrange some details they would not have located here. The Company did not ask any bonus or exemption from taxes as an inducement, but we were able to have an agreement fixing the rate of taxation for the next forty-two years confirmed by Parliament.

I hope the Ross Government will be sustained and can see no reason why it should not. The Province has made great advances under the government for the past thirty years that they should be allowed to direct the affairs of the country for a few years longer any way. I thank you one and all for the very attentive hearing you have given me and trust that when the election comes that you will return Mr. Stratton with a very large majority (applause).

Hon. Senator, Mr. Hugh, of Lindsay, and Mr. Pattullo, M.P.P. for South Oxford, addressed the meeting at some length and presented very strong arguments for sustaining the Ross Government.

Mr. J. H. McClelland addressed a few words and thanked the electors for what they done for him in 1898 and although not successful he hoped the next time that the vote would change. He heartily endorsed Mr. Stratton for member for West Peterborough. He had not the slightest doubt but that the Ross Government would be returned at the coming election. He urged them all to work for all their might and return Mr. Stratton, not with 300 but with 1000 majority.

The meeting closed with three cheers for the King, the Candidate, Mr. Stratton, and Support the Ross Government.

OMNIOUS WAR CLOUD DARKENS THE HORIZON

The Gravest Rumors of War Now Current Throughout All Europe

RUSSIA AND FRANCE ARE ACTIVELY PREPARING.

America will Not Interfere Should War Break Out—A Grave Condition of Affairs Admitted by Leading Papers

Special Telegram to The Times.

London, March 25.—That grave fears are entertained for the peace of the world is everywhere manifest. While it is impossible to obtain inside information, it is nevertheless believed that Europe is on the brink of an awful catastrophe.

It is true that France and Russia have sent a joint note to the powers declaring in effect that they are allies whose cooperation can be relied upon to resist aggression by Great Britain and Japan in the east.

They notify the powers that they will take such measures as appear to them prudent to protect their own interests in China or Corea or in the event of hostile action by any other power or should there be a repetition of internal disorder in China.

The recent hastening of Russian troops over the Siberian railway is now accounted for. The note announcing the treaty is timed to lend additional prestige to the visit President Loubet is about to pay to Russia.

The most interested reader of the note is undoubtedly the emperor of Germany. The kaiser cannot fail to appreciate the importance which he suddenly assumes in the new international arrangement. Japan and Great Britain will scarcely dare to molest German interests, which are increasing in the east, so long as it remains in the power of the kaiser to cast the moral, if not physical, support of the triple alliance on the side of Russia.

The Post says,—The action of Russia at this juncture looks ominous for the peace of the world. If Russia and France have made up their minds to fight, the war will be brought on quickly, while Britain is engaged in South Africa.

New York, March 25.—The Sun says,—The United States have no more interest in the pact between Russia and France than in that between England and Japan. American interests abroad are without menace.

There is no reason to expect that they will incur hostility from any quarter so long as the government at Washington observes the traditional policy, honesty and of friendship to all the other powers of the earth.

President Roosevelt is aware that evidence exists showing Secretary Hay to be either incapable or unwilling to observe this policy. His action regarding the treaty between Great Britain and Japan was an open insult to Russia and so far as it was in his power a pledge of the support of the United States to Great Britain in its international conduct.

It is entirely reasonable to say that 90 per cent of the people of the United States desire that their government shall refrain from intermeddling in the affairs of other nations. In this sentiment it cannot be said that party lines exist. The sooner President Roosevelt realizes this fact the better for his administration.

CORONATION IS NOW THE LEADING TOPIC

All London Preparing for the Great Which is Soon to Take Place

IT IS ONLY THREE MONTHS OFF

The Details are Being Arranged—The King and Queen's Jewels—His Majesty Preparing For the Great Event

London, March 25.—Just three months from to-day London will be in the dizzy whirl of the coronation fetes. Three months is a short time in which to complete the arrangements for the great ceremony and those upon whose shoulders rests the responsibility have taken their coats off and are working ceaselessly at their gigantic task of preparation. The coronation is the one topic of conversation among all classes. In the clubs and drawing rooms the smart set discusses the approaching ceremony and in the public house the workingman discuss over their ale the details of the arrangements, with which the press is filled. The periodical literature covering the time of Queen Victoria's coronation is in great demand by persons who desire to inform themselves of the etiquette and ceremonials of the occasion. King Edward himself has read and reread the accounts of his mother's coronation and doubtless has obtained therefrom many valuable "pointers." For instance, in selecting the design and quality of his coronation robes, the king doubtless kept in mind the account of the late Lord Salisbury, one of the royal train bearers, who declared that the weight of the robes gave them all "a Turkish bath of some hours' duration."

The same inconvenience and discomfort from the weight of the robes was encountered by George IV., at his coronation. The king, it is said, bore the infliction with all the dignity of which he was capable.

Before deciding to have an entirely new crown with eight jewelled arches and the Koh-i-Noor, which is expected to make more impression on the great Indian princes than all the rest of the coronation display. Queen Alexandra is said to have examined at least thirty or forty different designs specially prepared for her inspection. Her Majesty has given quite as much attention to the selection of her coronation robes, the details affording a wide field of choice, which was enlarged by the freedom to determine upon purple or crimson, as taste might dictate

Just a Cold in the Head

But if followed by another cold, or some extra exposure, is liable to result in nasal catarrh. Unless a radical cure is obtained, the throat, bronchial tubes and finally the lungs become affected. Nothing cures colds so quickly and pleasantly as Catarrhozone. The Inspector of mines for Nova Scotia, Mr. Neville, says, "Catarrhozone is the best remedy I have ever used. It cured me of catarrh of the head and throat, and I am pleased to recommend such a satisfactory remedy." Catarrhozone is a safeguard against colds, coughs and catarrh. It can be used while at work, in the church, theatre or street cars. Simply inhale Catarrhozone and it cures. Price $1.00. Small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

COLONIAL ARMY NOT UNDERSTOOD

Mr. Brodrick's Army Reform Proposals and the Colonies

NO OFFICIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Details Will be Kept Secret Until the Coronation Conference in June Next

London, March 25.—It is evident from cablegrams received from Canada that a misconception exists in some quarters in the Dominion as to the proposals of the Secretary of War in reference to Imperial defence. Mr. Brodrick did not, as some Canadian correspondents seem to think, intimate to the House of Commons that he had any cut and dried plan of colonial co-operation in the reform of the army. His only reference to the colonies in his great speech of Tuesday last, when he outlined his army reform scheme, was contained in the following passage:

"Before I sit down I would ask the House in one more matter to give me sympathetic support. We cannot close any record of the year without remembering that even to a larger extent than last year we have had the support in the field of our colonial forces. I trust it may be possible that some arrangements may be made by which the whole force of the Empire may be made available in case of a war in which the interests of the whole Empire are involved. An opportunity for conferring with our colonial friends on this subject will occur on the visit of colonial statesmen to this country for the coronation. We shall then have an opportunity of seeing how far the scheme in our mind commends itself to the colonies, and how far they are willing to undertake a responsibility which will more closely link together the different parts of the Empire."

AN UNOFFICIAL STATEMENT

This was followed by the publication in a Portsmouth newspaper — unofficial and in no way supposed to represent ministerial opinion—of what was alleged to be the scheme which it is intended to submit to the colonial delegates in June. According to this newspaper, the scheme will provide for the largest army in the world. Great Britain and Ireland will produce and equip six army corps, three of which, representing, with a cavalry brigade, a force of 150,000, will be prepared to take the field in defence of the colonies or against any European power. This will leave a home defence force of a similar number, besides a large number of militia, yeomanry and volunteers allotted to coast and garrison defence. India is to provide an army corps from each of the three Presidencies. Lord Kitchener is to reorganize the Indian army when he can be spared from South Africa. South Africa will raise two army corps, one of which will be available for service. Australia is expected to provide two, and New Zealand one, whilst Canada will have four militia army corps, which could be wholly used if required. All the army corps will be provided with the latest pattern of artillery armament. There is to be a large extension of the system of garrison regiments, in which the royal marines will co-operate when they are removed from the ships.

The proposals assume that if the Imperial service is made sufficiently attractive there will be no difficulty in securing abroad all the deficiencies of recruiting now experienced at home. Some of the crack regiments will tour in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa. A battalion of the Guards is to be stationed at Cape Town. These regiments will be allowed to recruit beyond their ordinary establishments, the surplus being drafted to other battalions during the carrying out of the annual reliefs. Men will be free to join any branch of His Majesty's army in any part of the British colonies, and will be sent at the public expense to join such army when opportunity occurs.

THE COLONIES CRITICISED

It is hard to believe that Mr. Brodrick or any of his subordinates would launch such a ballon d'essai as outlines above. The probabilities are that it is altogether guesswork. It is not likely that anything official will be stated until after the Coronation Conference. Meanwhile, the pro-Boer members of Parliament and the pro-Boer press are not missing the opportunity of criticizing the colonies. For instance, in the House of Commons last night, Mr. Robertson, the Radical member for Dundee, said: The self-governing colonies had made themselves responsible for the continuance of the war. It had been repeatedly said that the war must not be stopped on pain of offending public opinion in the colonies. Simultaneous and similar resolutions had come from the colonies, pointing to a common origin somewhere else, denouncing those in this country who were opposed to the policy of His Majesty's Government, and in particular condemning his right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition. That course was approved by hon. members sitting behind the Government. It was a dangerous course for self-governing colonies to take, and it imposed upon them the obligation to do something more. Their share of the expense of the war would be one-fifth. He asked whether, when the Colonial Premiers came here, after this wholesale denunciation of a party in the country, they would be asked to bear one-fifth of these estimates, one-fifth of the enormous debt already incurred in the war, or whether we are to grovel at their feet after the fashion of the Colonial Secretary, accept their dictation as to the duty of patriotism, and shrink from the duty of asking them how much they were going to contribute to the Imperial burdens.

Mr. Brodrick declined to be led into any discussion of the attitude of the colonies. He said he would be perfectly ready to stand bail for this fact—that the Colonial Secretary would not meet the Colonial Premiers in the spirit which the hon. gentleman had exhibited.

MR. BRODRICK'S PROPOSALS

It may be well to set out in condensed form the chief alterations in the British army system proposed by Mr. Brodrick:

1—To encourage recruiting, every soldier on becoming efficient will receive 1s a day clear. He will also have the advantage of a new form of enlistment (except the Household Cavalry) by which he will serve three years with the colors and nine years in the reserve, or if at the end of two years he is an efficient shot and a man of good conduct he may elect to serve eight years with the colors and four in the reserve. If he takes the second choice he will get an extra 6d a day, or 1s 6d a day in all. Should he be a man of good conduct, but not a good shot, he will get 4d a day extra instead of 6d until he becomes efficient. This reform will come into operation on 1st April, 1904, and it is estimated to cost per year £1,046,000 for Great Britain and £786,000 for India.

2—There is a reform as to good conduct pay of some complication, but of not much importance.

3—A reserve of volunteers is to be formed of men of four or more years' service, who will undertake to shoot their course once in two years, and to be available in emergency for home defence.

4—A reserve of yeomanry is to be formed on much the same lines. In the case of yeomanry up to 5,000 there will be an offer of £5 a man per year, on the condition that he is ready to serve abroad if required.

5—The militia reserve, mentioned last year, consisting of 50,000 men, was referred to, and the artillery regiments are to be increased.

6—The engineers are to be better paid, and their officers are to have better facilities for education by attending the Staff College, and serving with line regiments.

7—Colonial Forces—The War Office has drawn up a scheme which will be submitted to the Colonial Premiers this year, with the object of bringing the colonies in closer touch in defence of the Empire.

8—The army medical and the nursing departments are to be reformed, and steps are to be taken to lessen the expenses of officers entering the army.

TO BE HANGED TO-DAY

Charles Bullock to Mount the Scaffold for Murder in Last April

Edmonton, N.W.T., March 25 — At Fort Saskatchewan to-day Charles Bullock is to be hanged for the murder of Leon Stainton in the Battle River country in April last.

The dead youth, Leon Stainton, had left his home in Kalamazoo, Mich., to take a position with the Union Pacific Railway at Aspen, Wyo. There he met Charles Bullock and a young man from his state of Michigan. Bullock's parents lived on a farm in the Battle River district of Alberta, N.W.T., and they had written to their son to come there and get land. Bullock asked Stainton, who was barely nineteen years old, to accompany him. When they left Aspen Bullock had $42 and Stainton $220. The two started together, but Bullock reached home alone. He had plenty of money when he arrived, and gave his family $65, more than he had when he left Aspen. He stayed only three days, going away to British Columbia as he said. Instead he went to Montana and changed his name. Two months later a body was found half buried in a bluff near the Bullock farm. The body was identified as that of Stainton, and after weeks of hard work the police unraveled the whole story. A long search located Bullock at Great Falls, Mont., where he was arrested and brought back to Edmonton. A speedy trial resulted in his conviction and the death sentence.

PILGRIMS FLOCKING TO ROME.

Holy Week Brings Thousands of Pilgrims to the Holy City

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Rome, March 25.—Foreigners have flocked to Rome for holy week. The city is filled with pilgrims and sightseers of all nationalities. The various churches are crowded at all services. Pope Leo appears in excellent health and later in the week is expected to preside at an informal meeting of the college of cardinals.

A NEW DEPARTMENT

Department of Commerce to be Added to Washington Executive

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Washington, D. C., March 25.—The House committee on interstate and foreign commerce to-day began hearings on the bill for the creation of a new department of commerce. Friends of the measure are exerting every effort in its behalf and have hopes of carrying it to success despite the opposition of those Congressmen who oppose it on the ground of necessary economy.

HOTEL MEN'S ANNUAL JAUNT

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Palm Beach, Fla., March 25.—Well-known bonifaces from all the large cities of the United States and Canada, members of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, gathered at the Hotel Royal Poinciana to-day and held their twenty-third annual meeting.

After a brief session, devoted to the transaction of routine business the members adjourned to partake of the pleasures afforded by the entertainment program. This evening the association holds its annual banquet and to-morrow the members will depart on a jaunt through Florida which will embrace Ormond, St. Augustine and other famous resorts.

TOO LARGE A WHEAT CROP

The Western Elevators are Unable to Handle the Enormous Quantity of Wheat

Duluth, Minn., March 25 — Apparently Manitoba and Assiniboia are suffering from too large a crop of wheat. So much grain was raised in these provinces last fall that there is no way of getting it to market, and no possibility of storing it in terminal elevators. The farmers and grain buyers of the provinces have applied to Minneapolis and Duluth for help, and their surplus wheat is now coming into this state at the rate of hundreds of cars a day. It is expected that the exportation surplus of wheat from Northwestern Canada will reach 50,000,000 bushels this year, many millions of bushels of which will be brought here before the opening of navigation.

EIGHTY-THREE TO-DAY

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge Will Receive Congratulations

London, March 25 — The venerable Duke of Cambridge will celebrate his eighty-third birthday to-morrow. His Grace is the first member of the British family, at least in modern times, to attain that age. Queen Victoria, the Duchess of Gloucester, and George III all attained the age of eighty-one, but died before attaining the age of eighty-two. The only other member of the royal family who lived to be an octogenarian, was the first Duke of Cumberland, who succeeded Wm. IV as King of Hanover. He died in his eighty-first year. The Duke of Cambridge has held his title for more than fifty years, during all which time he has been a member of the House of Lords. The Duke of Richmond and Gordon is the only other Duke who has been in the Upper House for more than forty years.

GENERAL OTIS RETIRES

The Late Commander at the Philippines Quits Active Service

Washington, D.C., March 25—After many years of active service, including active participation in three wars, Major General E. S. Otis was placed on the retired list to-day by operation of the law requiring the retirement of army officers on their sixty-fourth birthday. Since his return from the Philippines the most of Gen. Otis' time has been spent in command of the Military departments of the Lakes with headquarters at Chicago, and of Dakotas, with headquarters at St. Paul. General Otis will make his future home in Rochester, N.Y.

The retirement of General Otis results in the usual number of transfers and promotions. Major Gen. Arthur McArthur, another veteran of the Philippine campaign, is transferred from the Department of the Colorado, with headquarters at Denver, to the command of the Department of the Lakes, while Brigadier Gen. Frederick Funston succeeds to the command of the Department of the Colorado. The command of the Department of Dakota is to be assigned to Brigadier Gen. W.A. Kobbe. General Funston is at present on leave of absence and for the time being the command of the Department of the Colorado will devolve upon Brigadier Gen. Bates, commanding the department of the Missouri at Omaha.

PEACE RUMOR AGAIN AFLOAT

Boer Leaders Have Gone South to Interview Lord Kitchener

Pretoria, March 25.—Acting President Schalkburger, accompanied by Commandants Lucas Meyer and Keogh, passed through this town yesterday morning on their way south. The fact that the railroad was kept open for them and that everything was done to facilitate their trip and give them safe conduct is accepted as an indication that arrangements have been made for an interview with Lord Kitchener, who is in the field south of the Vaal River, directing the operations against De Wet and Delarey. It is learned that the Boer leaders came into Balmoral under a flag of truce and were received by the British troops there under special instruction from headquarters as to their object of visit.

POSITION WAS UNTENABLE.

London, March 25.—The Pretoria correspondent of the Standard says that the Boer position at [illegible], where Schalkburger and his associates have lately been stationed, has daily became more untenable owing to the aggressive operations of Col. Park and other British leaders. Schalkburger once had a narrow escape from being captured.

BOHTA NOT IN IT.

London, March 25.—The universal opinion is that the prospects for peace are brighter than they have been for many days, although The Daily Telegraph points out that General Botha holds himself aloof, and says that General De Wet is not likely to feel himself bound by the conditions which may be proposed.

AN ANTI-CORONATION DEMONSTRATION.

London, March 25. — According to a despatch to The Standard from Brussels, Dr. Leyds, the Boer diplomatic agent, is about to organize an international demonstration by American and Continental sympathizers of the Boer cause on the day that King Edward is crowned in London. The despatch adds that it is doubtlessly true that the Transvaal Legation has for several months been receiving regular reports from South Africa, probably by way of Lorenzo Marques. One of the last despatches from Acting President Schalkburger states that the Boer losses from October 1, 1900, to October 1, 1901, were 400 men killed and 700 wounded. No mention is made of prisoners.

NO FURTHER ACTION.

Cape Town, March 25.—Owing to the serious illness of Mr. Cecil Rhodes, the members of Parliament who interviewed Prime Minister Sprigg last Monday in reference to the suspension of the constitution in Cape Colony have decided to take no further action at present.

MURDERED AT BRANTFORD

Proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, Said to Have Been Foully Slain

Brantford, March 25.—The dead body of James Quirk, athlete and proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, was found last night in the hotel stables. The bell boy heard groans in the barn, and informed the cook, who proceeded to the stable and at the foot of the steps leading to the hay loft found Quirk lying in a pool of blood.

It is supposed that Quirk went out at midnight to see some game chickens in the stable loft, and when entering the loft was attacked and hit on the head several times with a blunt instrument, as his head was badly bruised.

The culprit, it is supposed, escaped through the gate leading to Dalhousie street, as the hostler had before retiring bolted the gate, which was found open after the deed was committed. The police are working on the matter.

The late Mr. Quirk has a daughter attending Loretto Abbey, Toronto, and was a brother-in-law of Fred Westbrook who will at an early date take charge of the Ebener Hotel. He was well known in the sporting world as a runner.

DR. SWALLOW'S TRIAL

Great Interest Awakened in the Most Sensational Trial Ever Held in the West

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Bellefonte, Pa., March 25.—Scores of delegates and visitors have arrived for the thirty-fourth annual session of the Central Pennsylvania Conference of the M.E. Church, which opens here to-morrow night. Unusual interest is manifested in the proceedings from the fact that the conference is to try Dr. S. C. Swallow, the Prohibition candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania in 1898, on charges which have been preferred against him. Dr. Swallow, being under suspension, and not entitled to the free entertainment accorded other ministers, has engaged several rooms at the Bush House, and is on hand with his legal counsel prepared to fight for what he terms his rights. Among the delegates on the field there is much discussion as to the manner of procedure to be accorded the Swallow trial. Many object to the Swallow matter being ventilated in open conference, and urge that a special committee be appointed to hear all the evidence. To this mode of procedure Dr. Swallow is averse and, should he fail in this, will demand that the committee's findings be accorded the privilege of open discussion in conference before a vote is taken.

Interest in the matter is heightened by the report that Dr. Swallow has come prepared to file counter charges and specifications against the Rev. Dr. J. W. Hill, of this city, who was foremost in the prosecution of the doctor before an ecclesiastical court. Dr. Swallow's accusation against Dr. Hill is said to cover a wide range, including perjury, lying, fraudulent transactions, slander and libel. It is intimated that Dr. Swallow has been raking up the alleged record of Dr. Hill at Fostoria, Ohio, Minneapolis and Ogden, Utah, where he was formerly stationed. Altogether, with the charges and countercharges, Bishop John M. Walden, of Cincinnati, who will preside over the conference, will undoubtedly have his hands full.

ITALY TO SEIZE TRIPOLI!

Rome, March 23.—Preparations are still proceeding at Spezzia, Naples, and other ports in Italy for an expedition of some kind on a large scale. It is presumed that the objective point of the expedition is Tripoli.

Ten steamers have just been chartered from the Italian General Steam Navigation Company, and are being fitted out for the transportation of troops. Great activity prevails in the War Department, and not a day passes without the leading generals conferring with the Minister of War.

All the circumstances certainly justify suspicion, but another week will probably elapse before the mystery is solved.

PRO-BOER DISPLAY FOR CORONATION.

London, March 25.—A despatch to the Standard from Brussels says that Dr. Leyds, the diplomatic agent of the Boers, is about to organize an international demonstration by American and Continental sympathisers on the day King Edward is crowned. All pro-Boer societies will be asked to display the flags of the Transvaal and Orange Free State, and to telegraph to Mr. Kruger.

The despatch adds that it is doubtlessly true that the Transvaal Legation has for several months been receiving regular reports from South Africa, probably by way of Lorenzo Marques. One of the last despatches from Acting President Schalkburger states that the Boer losses from October 1, 1900, to October 1, 1901, were 400 men killed, and 700 wounded. No mention is made of prisoners.

RHODES' ILLNESS INTERFERES

Cape Town, March 25.—The members of Parliament who interviewed Prime Minister Sprigg last Monday in reference to the suspension of the constitution in Cape Colony have decided to take no further action owing to Mr. Rhodes' illness.

NAVIES TO CHECK RUSSIA.

Wellington, New Zealand, March 23.—Speaking at a banquet here Prime Minister Seddon said he was in favor of the increase of the Australian squadron. He declares that Russia was plainly attempting to secure a large seaboard in China.

The Anglo-Japanese agreement was made in order to prevent Russia from becoming the controlling power in the North Pacific. The Japanese navy and the British-Chinese squadron, the Prime Minister declared, would be sufficiently strong to combat the Russian influence.

The Australian squadron would have to protect the trade of the colonies. Some of the cruisers now in service were out of date and would have to be discarded and replaced by better ships.

SUEZ CANAL BLOCKED.

London, March 25.—A despatch to Lloyd's from Port Said states that the steamer Norite, which caught fire in the Bitter Lake section of the Suez Canal, has canted over, and oil from her is covering the lake. Traffic has been stopped.

SHOT AT THE ROYSTERERS.

Hamilton, March 24.—While four or five young men who had been in the city Saturday night, were returning home on the mountain they were creating a great deal of noise, and disturbed Mr. Charles Jolley, a well-known city householder, resident on the mountain brow. It is said Mr. Jolley became greatly annoyed at them and fired a shotgun to frighten them. One of the young men, Charles Hunt, received some shot in his face, and one of his eyes was injured. Alfred Taylor, another of the party, was wounded but not seriously.

QUEEN WILL NOT TRAVEL.

The Hague, March 23.—The Amsterdam Handelsblad announces that Queen Wilhelmina will not pay her usual visit to Amsterdam this year, because her Majesty is in a condition which would make the visit too fatiguing.

SEQUEL TO AN ELOPEMENT

Montreal, March 24.—In August last Joseph St. Jacques ran away with the fifteen-year-old daughter of Mr. Napoleon Jasmin, a gardener of Cote St. Paul, with whom he was employed. He came to the Archbishop's Palace in this city, and applied for marriage, but was refused on account of the extreme youth of the prospective bride.

At this time the father was on the chase, and located the runaways and took the girl back home. In the evening a meeting was had between the would-be husband and the wronged father, in which the father consented to the marriage but afterwards changed his mind. The father then warned the young man to keep away from his house, but this warning was unheeded and an arrest on the charge of abduction followed. The case was afterwards dropped, and Mr. St. Jacques brought action against Mr. Jasmin for $10,000 for false arrest.

The case was dismissed on Saturday by Mr. Justice Curran.

GEN. KITCHENER AGREES TO CANCEL BANISHMENT

Associated Press Says That This is One of the Conditions of Boer Surrender

TRANSVAAL GOVERNMENT DESIROUS OF PEACE

Pall Mall Gazette Would Like to Belive That De Wet and De La Rey Have the Same Moral Courage.

London, March 25.—The Associated Press has good reason to believe that Lord Kitchener, in his interview with Mr. Schalkburger, agreed to withdraw the banishment proclamation issued in September if Gen. De Wet and the other Boer leaders surrendered.

COMMENT IN LONDON

London, March 25.—There is little disposition in London to regard too hopefully the news that Acting President Schalkburger, Secretary Reitz and Commandants Meyer and Keogh had entered Pretoria under a flag of truce and had gone south into the Orange River Colony. Officials express the doubt, held throughout, of the ability of Schalkburger and the other civilian leaders of the Boers to induce such men as Generals De Wet and Delarey to surrender. Possibly they think the representatives of the Transvaal Government are desirous of suing for peace, but there is nothing to show that they have any authority to impose submission on the commanders in the field. The most hopeful sign they see is the announcement that Lord Kitchener permitted Mr. Schalkburger and his companions to proceed to the Orange River Colony, the contention being that unless the British commander-in-chief in South Africa, who is on the spot and therefore almost thoroughly conversant with the situation, recognized the possibility of fruitful results and believed in the good faith of the Transvaalers, he would not have permitted the visitors to continue their pilgrimage to the headquarters of their Orange River Colony allies. The same cautions reserve permeates the newspaper utterances, and the comment in well informed circles. Some significance is attached to the fact that, in approaching Lord Kitchener, Mr. Schalk Burger and those associated with him have carried out to the letter the advice given by the British Foreign Secretary, Lord Lansdowne, in his reply to the peace note of the Netherlands Government, that the quickest and most satisfactory means for arranging a settlement would be by direct communication between the leaders of the Boers and the British Commander-in-chief in South Africa. But there is no sign that the Transvaal mission received any mandate from the fighting generals, or that the latter are prepared to recognize the authority of their acting President, Mr. Schalk Burger, to negotiate terms for peace. Presumably the latter satisfied Lord Kitchener that he had certain clearly defined proposals to submit to his ally. President Steyn. But, the best information from South Africa deprecates any belief in the likelihood of a simultaneous surrender of the burghers still in the field, on the order of the Boer Government. Almost the best to be hoped for is that the present overtures will so modify the situation as to bring peace nearer.

The Westminster Gazette this afternoon urges that any peace proposals should be regarded on the merits, pointing out that the ungenerous assumption that the previous Boer overtures were signs of weakness contributed largely to the failure of the negotiations.

The Pall Mall Gazette would "like to think that the brave, skilful commanders, De Wet, and De La Rey, have arrived at the height of moral courage once attained by General Lee, and have realized that the truest patriotism does not consist in the prolongation of a hopeless struggle." But the paper confesses that the military situation is not auspicious for such a change of mind.

The St. James Gazette extracts from the unilluminative despatches thus far received from Pretoria the theory that Mr. Schalk Burger and the other members of his party have possibly already surrendered and have been released on parole for the purpose of seeing President Steyn and Gen. De Wet.

The news from South Africa had a generally good effect on the stock exchange.

CAUSE OF THE CONFERENCE.

London, March 25.— In the House of Commons to-day the War Secretary, Mr. Brodrick, announced that a fortnight ago Mr. Schalkburger intimated to Lord Kitchener his desire to be granted a safe conduct through the British lines and back, in order to see Mr. Steyn with reference to the possibility of peace proposals. Lord Kitchener, with the consent of the Government, had acceded to the request.

VIRULENT SOCIALIST ATTACKS HIS HOLINESS

The Pope--Britain May be Elbowed Out--Irish Nationalists in Difficulties

London, March 25.—A despatch from Brussels to The Times says that in the Chamber of Representatives, M. Demblon, Socialist leader, attacked the Pope in virulent terms after arguing that the crimes of certain Popes of the Middle ages discredited the papacy. He proposed the suppression of the Belgian Minister to Rome, but the motion was negatived.

BRITAIN MAY BE ELBOWED OUT.

London, March 25.—A despatch from Shanghai to The Times says a Belgian syndicate is negotiating for a concession for the Shanghai-Nanking Railway, which was granted to the British four years ago, but not carried through. The correspondent urges the necessity of the British Government supporting the commercial enterprises of China lest the British are elbowed out by hostile continental influences.

IRISH DIFFICULTIES.

London, March 25.—A despatch from Dublin to The Times says the Nationalist press is issuing appeals for funds for the Irish Parliamentary party. In spite of the elaborate organization for collecting money through the United Irish League, it seems that financial difficulties are overtaking the party. The fact is the peasantry in the west and south have been squeezed dry, and the richer Nationalist cities and the midland agricultural districts refuse to subscribe funds.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 25, 1902.

GERMAN INCONSISTENCY

The German contention that Canada, being, economically speaking, an entirely autonomous state, is thereby prohibited from discriminating in favor of Great Britain without inviting foreign retaliation, is hardly a happy one. If Canada were to be considered as an economic unit, no question would yet have arisen between Germany and ourselves. The treaty which was denounced was not written between the Dominion and Germany, but between the Empire and Germany, and so long as it was in force, Germany went upon the assumption that, economically speaking, we were an integral part of the Empire. And so long as that theory worked in her favor, Germany was content enough with it.

Now, we have not rejected it. We have but more emphatically asserted it. We say that, being economically a part of the Empire, we can give to the rest of our Empire such tariff treatment as suits us without meaning any offence to or discrimination against the rest of the world. That is, we deny that we are to be considered as a commercial unit, and we assert that we consider ourselves to be a member of the British commercial family.

If Germany had not been profiting for years by acceptance of this very doctrine respecting our status, she would be in a better position to try to impose upon us now a precisely opposite doctrine, especially when the only change we have made in the circumstances affecting the case is the multiplication of the proofs that we regard ourselves as commercially a part of the Empire. If Germany continues to treat us in the present conspicuously unfriendly manner, she must not be astonished if in time we are driven to plain retaliation.

Britain and Japan can muster a stronger naval force than any two other powers in the world. Their combined strength is represented by 62 battleships, 146 cruisers and 116 destroyers, all modern. Russia and France can muster 48 battleships, 64 cruisers and 37 destroyers. Russia and Germany have a naval force of 66 battleships, 38 cruisers, and 59 destroyers. The two island kingdoms will make a very strong combination for any combination of the powers to meet, especially as the interests of the United States are identical with the Japo-British alliance in any matters affecting Eastern Asia.

Do Not Carry Your Load of Disease Into the Spring Season

Paine's Celery Compound

Makes Rich Pure Blood, Strong Nerves and Gives a New Lease of Life

Too often people drag with them into the spring season a load of disease that has proved a heavy burden during the winter months. Impure and poisoned blood, eczema, salt rheum, boils, eruptions, neuralgia, rheumatism, kidney disease, liver trouble, dyspepsia and nervous complaints claim thousands of victims throughout the land.

The cleansing, healing, and life-renewing work of Paine's Celery Compound in the past should be a sufficient guarantee to every sufferer that it will surely and quickly overcome every form of disease just referred to. In every case Paine's Celery Compound is the one remedy that will completely and permanently bring back health, make pure rich blood, regulate and build up the weakened nervous system. Mrs. Adamson, Head of Millstream, N.B., who, after years of sickness and suffering, at last found a new life in Paine's Celery Compound, writes thus:

"I feel it a duty to briefly testify regarding the value of Paine's Celery Compound. Since childhood I suffered from sick headaches, neuralgia and constipation. Had attacks once a week which kept me confined to my bed. Have been treated by a number of physicians without any beneficial results. I procured six bottles of Paine's Celery Compound which was strongly recommended to me, and after a short time I found that new life and health coming that I had so long wished for. Two years have passed and I have not had a return of my old troubles. I can never say too much in favor of Paine's Celery Compound."

A Defect of Reformers.

THE newspaper despatch from Topeka, Kansas, about Mrs. Charles M. Sheldon's hired girl has been very popular, and acres of comment have appeared about it. The story is that the hired girl, who was new, had read in one of Mr. Sheldon's the-world-made-over stories that it was a good plan for the servants of a household to take their meals with the rest of the family, so she expressed to Mrs. Sheldon her willingness to follow that course, but Mrs. Sheldon dissented, and the girl left. This is thought to be a joke on Mr. Sheldon, but, remarks New York "Life," really it makes him appear in a good light as a reformer who respects the rights of others, and does not try to compel even his immediate family to share his social experiments. That is the way it is in the family of Tolstoi. He lives the ideal life, and goes barefoot, and cobbles shoes for recreation, but his wife and most of his children respect conventional customs, and live a life modified, but not stunted by his ideals.

A great and common defect about ordinary reformers is that they are not content to let their light so shine, but insist that every one whom they can control shall emulate their good works. Says the Women's Christian Temperance Union to the army, "We think it's wicked to drink beer, and you shan't have any." Says Mrs. Carrie Nation to Apollo Belvidere, "It is an outrage that you have no trousers on. Let me smash you!" Mr. Sheldon's way is better. He goes in for precept, and, maybe, example, but not for constraint. If the Women's Christian Temperance Union followed his example it might still distribute tracts to the army, but it would not legislate away the canteen, and Mrs. Nation, acting Sheldon-wise, would be content to say to Apollo Belvidere, "Wear trousers, like me."

Good Hearts and Bad Manners.

An exchange tells about a judge more noted for his bad manners than his knowledge of law. He continually insults lawyers, litigants and witnesses—especially women—in the most outrageous way, and spares no one except certain members of the bar whose political influence he fears. Recently a young lawyer, having more backbone than discretion, perhaps, was bullied by His Honor beyond the limit of endurance, and began to talk back. With the aid of a cool head and a polite but sarcastic tongue the young practitioner soon had the bencher apoplectic and nigh to frenzy and yet lacking ground for holding the lawyer guilty of contempt.

When the case had been decided against the young man an older member of the bar said:

"You did not take the judge in the right way. He is cranky, but you should have humored him. At heart he is a pretty good man."

"His heart may be good," said the young man, "but his manners are bad; and I'm tired of humoring people whose hearts are so good that they feel privileged to be bullies and curmudgeons."

"Castles of Sand."

I.

Castles of Youth and Hope, and Joy,
Castles of Love without alloy,
Built in the heart of a woman; there
They were fashioned with tender care.

Built to withstand the blows of Fate,
Built to rebuff the hand of Hate,
With towers of silver, and turrets of gold,
And all the Love that the walls could hold.

'Twas a woman's hand that built them there,
And a woman's thought that made them fair;
For a woman's Faith had strengthened their walls,
And a woman's beauty would grace their halls.

But Youth is gone, and Faith is betray'd,
And Joy in its lonely grave is laid,
And Love has come, and laughed, and flown,
And a woman's life is lived out alone.

For a heart grew cold, and slain was Trust,
And the silver and gold all crumbled to dust;
And these castles built by a woman's hand
Are only some mounds of shifting sand.

Castles of sand on a sunny shore
Of golden grains like a hoarded store,
Mounds of shining, glistening sand
That built up the Castles of Day Dream Land.

Make Way For the Ladies.

In Michigan there is an Indian school where the children of the more or less noble redman are instructed in Anglo-Saxon graces and civilization. One of the teachers says:

It is very interesting to study these children, especially as we have them from four different tribes.

The boys have a sense of humor. In my flag-drill last Friday the partners were a boy and a girl, and where the lines intersect to form a cross I taught the boys to let their partners go first; and much trouble I had to do it.

After the exercises Isaac Crane came up to me, and in his solemn way said:

"Miss B., in letting the girls pass in front of the boys you have struck at the root of an Indian national custom."

"How so, Isaac?"

"It is the custom for the man to go first, carrying his dignity, and for the woman to follow, carrying everything else."

Expensive Revenge.

Mankind is so constituted that it is sometimes not able to forget readily any slights or rebuffs endured, and the disposition to seek revenge is frequently uppermost in the thoughts. In Sheffield, England, it is said, there is a manufacturer who became furious with the local post-office people because of certain regulations they insisted he should follow in the matter of registered mail. After calming down, the manufacturer concluded he would have to toe the mark if he wanted his mail forwarded, but his revenge he would have, too. So every day for a month or more he sent each of his two hundred employees to the post-office to buy a single penny stamp. The employees were decorated with red tape, and seemed to enjoy hugely the making of their daily purchase.

Dooley on Country Life.

"I WANST spint a night in th' counthry, Hinnissey. 'Twas whin Hogan had his villa out near th' river. 'Twas called a villa to distinguish it fr'm a house. If 'twas a little bigger, 'twud be big enough f'r th' hens, an' if 'twas a little smaller, 'twud be small enough f'r a dog. It looked as if 'twas made with a scroll saw, but Hogan manny-facthered it himsilf out iv a design in th' pa-aper. 'How to make a counthry home on wan thousan' dollars. Puzzle: find th' money.' Hogan kidnapped me wan afthernoon an' took me out there in time to go to bed. He boosted me up a laddher into me bed-room adjinin' th' roof. 'I hope,' says I, 'I'm not discommodin' th' pigeons,' I says. 'There ain't anny pigeons here,' says he. 'What's that?' says I. 'That's a mosquito,' says he. 'I thought ye didn't have anny here,' says I. ''Tis th' first wan I've seen,' says he, whackin' himsilf on th' back iv th' neck. 'I got ye that time, assassin,' he says, hurlin' th' remains to th' ground. 'They on'y come,' he says, 'afther a heavy rain or a heavy dhry spell,' he says, 'or whin they's a little rain,' he says, 'followed be some dhryness,' he says. 'Ye mustn't mind thim,' he says. 'A mosquito on'y lives f'r a day,' he says. ''Tis a short life an' a merry wan,' says I. 'Do they die iv indigisthion?' I says. So he fell down through th' thrap-dure an' left me alone.

"Well, I said me prayers an' got into bed an' lay there, thinkin' iv me past life, an' wondherin' if th' house was on fire. 'Twas warrum, Hinnissey. I'll not deny it. Th' roof was near enough to me that I cud smell th' shingles, an' th' sun had been rollin' on it all day long, an' though it had gone away, it'd left a ray or two to keep th' place. But I'm a survivor iv th' gr-reat fire, an' I often go down to th' rollin'-mills, an' besides, mind ye, I'm iv that turn iv mind that whin 'tis hot I say 'tis hot, an' lave it go at that. So I whispers to mesilf, 'I'll dhrop off,' I says, 'into a peaceful slumber,' I says, 'like th' healthy plough-boy that I am,' says I. An' I counted as far as I knew how, an' conducted a flock iv sheep in a steeplechase, an' I'd just begun f'r to wondher how th' las' thing I thought iv came into me head, whin a dog started to howl in th' yard. They was a friend iv this dog in th' nex' house that answered him, an' they had a long chat. Some other dogs butted in to be companyable. I heard Hogan rollin' in bed, an' thin I heerd him goin' out to get a dhrink iv wather. He thripped over a chair before he lighted a match to look at th' clock. It seemed like an hour before he got back to bed. Be this time th' dogs was tired, an' I was thinkin' I'd take a nap, whin a bunch iv crickets under me windows begun f'r to discoorse. I've heerd iv th' crickets on th' hearth, Hinnissey, an' I used to think they were all th' money, but anny time they get on me hearth I buy me a pound iv insect powdher. I'd rather have a pianola on th' hearth anny day, an' Gawd save me fr'm that! An' so 'twas dogs an' mosquitoes, an' crickets an' mosquitoes, an' a screech-owl an' mosquitoes, an' a whippoorwill an' mosquitoes, an' cocks beginnin' to crow at two in th' mornin', an' mosquitoes, so that whin th' sun bounced up an' punched me in the eye at four, I knew what th' truth is—that th' counthry is th' noisiest place in th' wurruld. Mind ye, there's a roar in th' city, but in th' counthry th' noises beats on ye'er ear like carpet-tacks bein' dhriven into th' dhrum. Between th' chirp iv a cricket an' the chirp iv th' hammer at th' mills, I'll take th' hammer. I can go to sleep in a boiler-shop, but I spint th' rest iv that night in Hogan's, settin' in th' bath-tub.

"I saw him in th' mornin' at breakfast. We had canned peaches an' condensed milk. 'Ye have ye'er valise,' says he. 'Aren't ye goin' to stay out?' 'I am not,' says I. 'Whin th' first rattler goes by ye'll see me on th' platform facin' th' peace an' quiet iv th' counthry, f'r th' turmoil an' heat,' I says, 'an' food iv a gr-reat city,' I says. 'Stay on th' farm,' says I. 'Commune,' I says, 'with nature,' I says. 'Enjoy,' I says, 'th' simple, rustic life iv th' merry farmer-boy that goes whistlin' to his wurruk before breakfast,' says I. 'But I must go back,' I says, 'to th' city,' I says, 'where there is nawthin' to eat but what ye want, an' nawthin' to dhrink but what ye can buy,' I says. 'Where th' dust is laid be th' sprinklin'-cart, where th' iceman comes reg'lar, an' th' roof garden is in bloom, an' ye're waked not be th' sun, but be th' milkman,' I says. 'I want to be near a doctor whin I'm sick, an' eat eatable food whin I'm hungry, an' where I can put me hand out early in th' mornin' an' hook in a newspaper,' says I. 'Th' city,' says I, 'is th' on'y summer resort f'r a man that has iver lived in th' city,' I says. An' so I come in."

My Love.

I love the blue and sunny sky,
And every blue bird that doth fly
Among the whisp'ring greenwood trees
Breathing forth soft ecstasies.

I love the sunny, golden beams
That dance and play o'er silvery streams;
I love the silent stars that shine,
Shedding an influence divine.

I love each broad, expansive field
That doth a golden harvest yield;
I love the clinging, clustered vine
That yields the rich and purple wine.

I love the music of the rills
That ripple down the rocky hills;
I love the violet where it grows,
In wastes that shield the wild, red rose.

I love to hear when I'm alone
The wild winds deeply sigh and moan,
And feel the ocean's great heart beat,
While white-capped waves their plaint repeat.

—Minnie Louise Thomas.

The Deacon's Exhortation.

A white minister was conducting religious services in a colored church in North Carolina recently. After exhorting a bit, he asked an old colored deacon to lead in prayer, and, according to the Roanoke "News," this is the appeal which the brother in black offered for his brother in white: "O Lord, gib him de eye ob de eagle dat he spy out sin afar off. Glue his hands to de gospel plow. Tie his tongue to de line ob truth. Nail his ear to de gospel pole. Bow his head way down between his knees, and his knees way down in some lonesome, dark and narrer valley, where prayer is much wanted to be made. 'Noint him wid de kerosene ile of salvashun and sot him on fire."

Character in How You Smoke.

"Royal Magazine."

A MAN may possess a most secretive nature. He may have a face as destitute of meaning as a stone wall and a manner of speech absolutely non-committal; but watch him over his cigarette; note his manner of holding it between his lips or his fingers; see how he puffs the smoke out of his mouth, what he does with the ash, if he consumes the cigarette to a mere stump or throws it away half finished, and, sure as fate, you will read his character like a book. Cigarette, I said, for a cigarette, and a cigar in a lesser degree, are much better character revealers than a pipe. A man sticks a pipe into the side of his mouth and puffs away, and there's an end of it. You discover next to nothing, unless, indeed, he happens to puff very violently, which is a certain indication of a nervous, irritable temper. From the filling of a pipe, to be sure, many luminous little hints may be gathered. You see a man stuff his bowl quickly and lavishly, letting loose threads of tobacco dangle over the brim while he applies the match; if he be not good-natured, generous to a fault, careless, indolent, quick to make friends, quick to forget them, I shall be much astonished. One notices men very often taking their cigars from an upper waistcoat pocket into which they have been stuffed. Too poor to buy themselves a cigar-case? Not a bit of it, but too untidy to keep one or too lazy to arrange their cigars into one. And the same men almost invariably bite the tips off their cigars, instead of using a penknife or a cigar-clipper—a shocking habit that not merely fills the mouth with tobacco grit, but disarranges the outer leaf, often spoiling an otherwise excellent smoke.

The cigar once happily prepared for smoking, observe how your man holds it between his teeth. But stay! The operation of lighting has also its interest. The tobacco epicure grips his cigar not merely with his teeth when applying the match, but with the finger and thumb of his left hand also, and between every third puff draws the weed from his mouth and examines the glowing end, in order to make sure that it has been ignited equally all round.

The majority of men hold their cigars with the front teeth and puff the smoke out on either side of it. A large minority hold them in the corner of the mouth, so that if you happen to be walking behind them on a dark night you catch sight of the glowing end protruding just below the ear. Others, again—and these, as a rule, are persons of vivacious temperament—seldom keep their cigars for two consecutive moments between their lips. They take a few puffs, and then the cigar is given a rest between finger and thumb.

A man of determined character, energetic, pugnacious, impatient, often betrays himself by giving his cigar an upward tilt while consuming it—a favorite method with the Yankee, to whom the above epithets are distinctly applicable. The contemplative, dreamy individual will let it droop towards his chin; while level-headed persons—and fortunately they form the vast majority—hold theirs horizontally. Naturally insolent people frequently omit to remove the cigar from their mouths when speaking to you, while others of a sullen, brooding disposition chew the end into horrible pulp. And is there anything more eloquent of stinginess than the habit, largely indulged in by Germans, of sticking the stump of a cigar on the small blade of a penknife and consuming it until the glow almost touches the lips?

Expensive Loss of Temper.

Mr. D. of Boston, a devotee of the wheel, was not long ago visiting in one of the small towns of Western Massachusetts. He was taking a spin about its streets shortly after his arrival, when he was run down, as he afterward declared, by a negro, and knocked off his bicycle. The fall not only ruffled his dignity and his clothes, says "Harper's Magazine," but broke his skin and his wheel.

These combined injuries made a breach in his placidity, and he picked up a stone and threw it with accurate aim at the colored man and brother. This infraction of the peace resulted in his arrest and in his conviction in the local court of justice.

"I fine you five dollars," said the judge. "Have you anything to say?"

"Nothing," replied D., unmollified, "except that I wish I had killed the fellow."

"That remark will cost you five dollars more," rejoined His Honor.

D.'s temper was not improved by this fresh dispensation of justice, wherefore the bitterness of his rejoinder was plainly apparent.

"Conversation seems to come high in this court," he observed.

"Five dollars for contempt," promptly responded the bench. "Have you anything more to say?"

"I think not," answered the defendant. "You have the advantage of me in repartee."

Payment of the fines closed the case.

Grandma Went Skating.

One day last winter a little boy who attended a Walnut Hills school, according to the Cincinnati "Enquirer," arrived in the schoolroom not only half an hour late, but very dirty.

"Willie," said the teacher, "why are you late, and why is your face not washed?"

"Please," explained Willie, "my grandmother was out skatin' last night, and she was too tired to get up this morning and get me ready for school."

So absurd an excuse naturally excited the teacher's wrath, and she started an investigation, threatening punishment for Willie's supposed untruthfulness.

To her amazement she found that the boy had told the exact truth. The old lady, who had been an expert skater in her youth, had been tempted to join a skating party. The result was that she felt the next morning, as the boy expressed it, as if her bones were "cracking like a horse-fiddle," and it took the services of three neighbors to pry her out of bed.

A Street Scene.

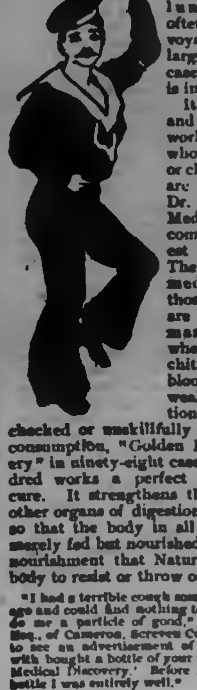
Child—Oh, mother, stop; I want to look at that man just run over by the car. "Come along, do! There will be another presently a little further on."—"Life."

Stuck to It.

In a school for colored children there was a little boy who would persist in saying "have went." The teacher kept him in one night and said: "Now, while I am out of the room you may write 'have gone' fifty times." When the teacher came back he looked at the [illegible]

Jolly Jack Tar.

"Jolly" is the word generally associated with the jack tar. He is the picture of health, and the health bubbles over in mirth and merriment. When people are sick, especially when sickness attacks the lungs the doctor often advises a sea voyage. But in the large majority of cases the sea voyage is impossible.



It is to the men and women of the workaday world to whom sea voyages or change of climate are impossible, that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery comes as the greatest earthly boon. The effect of this medicine upon those whose lungs are "weak" is remarkable. Even where there is bronchitis, spitting of blood, emaciation, weakness, conditions which if unchecked or unskillfully treated lead to consumption, "Golden Medical Discovery" in ninety-eight cases out of a hundred works a perfect and permanent cure. It strengthens the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, so that the body in all its parts is not merely fed but nourished. And it is by nourishment that Nature builds up the body to resist or throw off disease.

"I had a terrible cough something over a year ago and could find nothing to stop it, or even to do me a particle of good," writes J. M. Farr, Esq., of Cameron, Screven Co., Ga. "I chanced to see an advertisement of yours, and forthwith bought a bottle of your invaluable 'Golden Medical Discovery.' Before I had taken half a bottle I was entirely well."

Anecdotal.

A Yorkshire miller, noted for his keenness in financial matters, was once in a boat trying his best to get across the stream which drove his mill. The stream was flooded, and he was taken past the point at which he wanted to land, while further on misfortune again overtook him, to the extent that the boat was upset. His wife, realizing the danger he was in, ran frantically along the side of the stream, crying for help in a pitiful voice, when, to her sheer amazement, she was suddenly brought to a standstill by her husband yelling out: "If I'm drowned, Molly, dunnot forget that flour's gone up two shillin' a sack!"

In the year 1871, when the Government of Monsieur Thiers was at Versailles, and before the National Assembly had decided whether the new constitution of France was to be monarchical or republican, the late Comte de Paris visited the palace at Versailles. Just as he was about to enter, M. Jules Simon met and recognized him. Bowing low, Monsieur Simon said with much gravity: "If we are a republic, count, you are in my house, and I shall be delighted to do the honors; but if we are a monarchy, then I am in your house, and cannot play the host." The Comte de Paris laughed and took Monsieur Simon's arm. "Ah, monsieur," he said, gaily, "let us go in together!"

A Philadelphian tells the story of a waiter at a restaurant in the Quaker City, who has lately announced that he has begun to study French. "Do you find it necessary here?" asked the customer. "Not here, sir," said the waiter, "but I've been offered a steady job in Paris at one of the hotels if I can learn French." "But Paris is full of French waiters," said the gentleman. "I'm afraid you're being deceived." "Oh no, sir!" said the man, with much earnestness and absolute simplicity. "It's a perfectly straight thing. The proprietor of the hotel says the waiters he has can't understand French as we Philadelphians speak it, and that's what he wants me for, you see."

"Who," asks "The Candid Friend," "does not recollect Lord Hardwicke, the Glossy Peer, immaculately tailored, riding an almost priceless horse in the Row of a morning, or walking down Piccadilly, his hat at an angle which defied the laws of gravity? Spontaneously witty, with that talent for repartee which is as rare as it is delightful, Lord Hardwicke was the best of good company, and one of the unforgettable social leaders of London in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. No one will have forgotten his famous answer to a well-known tailor who had been asked to stay in the house of a noble patron, and complained to Lord Hardwicke that the 'company was mixed:' 'Good Lord, man, you didn't expect to find 'em all tailors?'"

The late Joseph Cook was celebrated for his positiveness, which those who did not admire him termed "cocksureness." The Boston "Pilot" relates several stories in illustration of this. It says that when he went over to Scotland to demonstrate by practical experiment the dangerous effects of alcohol on the human brain, he beat up the white of an egg with spirits until the mass coagulated, but it did not convince his audience as he had expected. On the contrary, it only evoked from Professor Blackie the quiet remark: "That seems to prove that whiskey must be good for softening of the brain." But the cruelest sarcasm said of him was when Bill Nye demurely wrote: "I understand that my friend the Rev. Joseph Cook has completed a thoughtful essay entitled 'A Bird's-Eye View of the Kingdom of Heaven?'"

In the early Indiana days, when both judges and attorneys literally "rode the circuit," a newly elected judge, noted for his lack of personal beauty, was plodding along on horseback between two county-seats one fine summer day. Suddenly he was confronted by a hunter, who unslung his squirrel-rifle from his shoulder, and ordered the horseman to dismount. Somewhat startled by this peremptory command, the jurist began to remonstrate. He was quickly cut short, however, by the remark: "It's no use talking. I long ago swore that if I ever met a homelier man than I am, I'd shoot him on sight." The judge, sizing up the situation, promptly got off his horse. Folding his arms, he faced his assailant, and said: "If I am any homelier than you are, for heaven's sake do shoot, and be quick about it." Needless to say, his wit saved him.

Her Revenge.

This amusing story is told by the president of a New Bedford bank, and is repeated in a Boston paper. One day not long ago he and other officers and directors were engaged in a business meeting, held in the directors' room of the bank, and as they believed themselves secure from intrusion, were much surprised to see a poor little waif enter the room, something which a man of business affairs would not dare to do under such conditions. The little girl, shabbily clothed and pinched looking, had all unconsciously entered on forbidden ground, but this she didn't realise, and at once went to the men seated about the big table, offering them small cakes of soap for sale. The very first director whom she approached shook his head, impatient at the interruption of business, and said sharply, "I never use it." The tiny peddler, unabashed, went from man to man, all the others, out of pity for her wan little figure, buying of her. As she started to leave the room, after thanking each purchaser, the girl hesitated a moment in front of the director who never used soap, according to his own declaration, and, looking him over from head to foot, said, disdainfully, "Well, yer look it!" and then she swept out like a duchess.

Some Hints For the Bride to Be.

NOW that the season of summer weddings is over, brides all over the country have leisure in which to contemplate. Among their many contemplations are those which pertain to the acknowledgment of wedding gifts. To acknowledge the receipt of one hundred and fifty presents, to thank the donor of each in a way that carries proof of life-long gratitude with it, and to find one hundred and fifty different styles of expressing the same sentiment can not be classed with the easy tasks of earth. Unless she was party to an elopement, no bride ever lived in modern times who did not experience during the last quarter of her honeymoon the difficulties of polite correspondence. Those who were married last June have passed through the trying ordeal, but by those of next June, or next October, a few suggestions of timely character will doubtless be appreciated.

Although at the outset it appears difficult, the job of acknowledging wedding gifts is really one of the simplest known. It does not require even ingenuity or originality, all that is indispensable being a box of note-paper, a pen and a bottle of ink. When the young bride sits down to contemplate her array of presents, her first perplexing thought is what she shall say to the donor of each. Nothing easier! Uncle Peter, for instance, has sent a heavily upholstered chair with a spring rocker. What could be more fitting than this as a reply to Uncle Peter?

My Darling Uncle:—

I can not thank you half enough for your beautiful chair. It was awfully like you, so soft and easy. Every time we sit in it—Charley and I—we think of you. You must come around soon and sit in it yourself.

Your loving niece, Clara.

P.S.—Charley and I had a perfectly lovely trip. It didn't rain a day while we were away.

That, dear girls, is the idea in crude shape. Your feminine tact can doubtless improve the quality of expression. The principle, however, will soon become apparent to you. No matter what the gift is, always effusively invite the giver to come around and try it. "Dear Kate, drop in any time and have a sip from your darling tea-cups." "Dear Aunt Carrie, be sure and stop whenever you are out this way and let us pour you a drink from your charming decanter." "Dear Cousin Tom, your cuckoo clock is a dream; don't forget to set your watch by it whenever you're in our neighborhood." And so forth. No trouble. Sips from tea-cups and vinegar cruets; seats in chairs and divans; catnaps on lounges at all hours and food from forks. If a rich uncle gives you a house tell him to come down and live in it whenever he feels like it. Follow this plan and rest easily. Your temper will keep sweet and no one outside will be offended.

Carrying the idea a step further, it will remain for some enterprising bride-to-be to send out supplementary notes with all her wedding invitations. Well known is it that the gift feature of a modern ceremony is far from being perfect. Duplicates continue to come in, despite the most judicious hints thrown out beforehand by the bride-to-be and her near relatives. Finally, when seven water-bottles and six ice-cream sets arrive in one day, the limit is reached and the pretty-soon-bride realizes it. Still, what can she do? It is too late to remedy the matter, so the duplicates hold the fort.

With what ease, however, could such annoyances be averted by the adoption of the Surprise Party system; the method which incloses with each invitation a request to please furnish cake or to please bring lemonade. Applied to a wedding, this method would work like a charm. Duplicates among the presents would be impossible, and a bride would find her new home well-nigh furnished with gifts, if proper discrimination was observed and enough cards sent out. Uncle Paul, who cornered the market once, should be asked to please furnish a set of bronzes. He can afford them, and the note relieves him of the necessity of thinking. Consideration, of course, should always be observed, and the value of the present asked for should be measured by the pocket-book of the relative to whom the invitation is sent.

If next June's crop of brides, whether they belong to the blushing class or not, will adopt these well-meant suggestions, they will stave off many an attack of Americanitis.

Baseball in France.

Now that baseball has been introduced officially in France the scenes we may expect to mark every game have been described as follows:

The Umpire—I say ze man is out-out-out! Now do you onnerstan?

Alphonse—Sare, you are no shentleman

Henri—Par-r-don me, but you are of se canaille!

Alphonse—Oh, did you hear zat, my poor fr-r-riend?

Henri—Alphonse, my brossaire, he has insolted you

The Umpire—Oh, go and sit on ze bench and let ze game pr-r-roceed.

Alphonse—You will hear fr-r-rom me!

Henri—You will hear fr-r-rom us!

The Umpire—Certainly, sares. I will geeve you satisfactione whenever you weesh. Only you must put eet off for a least tree weeks—I haf so many ozzaire duels of ze same sort zat all my time is taken up day an' night. Is it agreed? Tray bong, messieurs.

They all bow extravagantly, and Alphonse and Henri kiss each other on the cheek as they retire to the bench. The game then proceeds.

Katie and Willie are twins, aged five. During a recent visit to their grandparents, who live in the country and keep chickens, the twins were cautioned in their strife to see which could find the most eggs, never to take away the nest eggs. One morning Katie reached a nest first, and, seizing the forbidden egg, started for the house. Willie hurried after her, shouting: "Grandma! Grandma! Katie's got the egg the old hen measures by."

A Fable For Fathers-in-Law.

MINISTER WU TING-FANG, the ambassador of China to the United States, was one of a number of speakers at the Presentation Day exercises of the Gallaudet College for the Deaf, recently.

Mr. Wu frankly confessed to some degree of embarrassment, this being his first experience in addressing an audience composed largely of deaf persons. He further intimated that the presence of the president of the college by his side, interpreting his remarks, sentence by sentence, to the mutes, was not calculated to lessen his discomposure.

Mr. Wu declared that deafness, though a handicap, is not so serious an affliction as is commonly supposed, and further, that the mysterious law of compensation steps in and bestows other talents and blessings.

Continuing, the minister said: "To most of us a little deafness at times would be a distinct advantage. I can, perhaps, more clearly illustrate this point by relating a Chinese story.

"About twelve hundred years ago a revolution raged in China, and the reigning king retained his throne chiefly through the sagacity and valor of one of his generals. The king deeply felt his obligation to the general, and in token of his gratitude consented that his daughter should wed the general's son.

"The wedding was duly solemnized, and the happy young couple commenced housekeeping in their own home. For a time everything was harmonious; then the course of true love became disturbed, as it sometimes does even at this advanced date in America. The young wife became haughty and referred to her ancestry; she was the king's daughter, while her husband was only the son of a general. The young man, nettled at this, reminded his wife that but for the aid of his father she would be the outcast daughter of a deposed king and that he was therefore as good as she.

"The young wife hurried to the king and poured the sad tale of her woes into his ear, not forgetting to emphasize her husband's allusion to him.

"The youth went to his father and told what he had said about the king.

"The general was instantly overwhelmed with the gravest apprehensions, fearing the vengeance of the king when he should learn of the treasonable utterances of the young man, and he made great haste to call upon his sovereign to forestall punishment.

"The king listened to all the general had to say, and then, in a fatherly way and with a twinkle in his eye, remarked:

"'That's all right, general. We fathers and mothers of young married folk must be deaf and dumb a good deal of the time.'"

The Up-to-date Chirography.

Gladys Helene Montague, her transparent gold ochre hair glittering in the sunlight, sat at her mahogany desk writing her answer to Reginald Fitzmaurice's proposal. Gladys's chirography was of the fashionable young ladies' seminary style, with three characters to perform the duty of twenty-six.

"My Dearest Girl: Your answer has made me the happiest man in the world. How did I dare to hope that you would stoop to bless such as I? I pray God that I may be worthy of you, my darling. I long to press you to my heart. Ever thine, Reginald."

"My Dear Miss Montague: On Wednesday I sail for Europe. If at any time you should change your mind, a word from you will bring me to your side. My address will be Brown, White & Co., London. Faithfully yours, Reginald Fitzmaurice."

"Dear Gladys: After a sleepless night spent in the vain endeavor to decipher your note, I have written these two answers. Will you kindly return immediately the one which does not fit the occasion? I cannot stand this strain much longer. Your anxious Reginald."—Detroit "Free Press."

Just a Glimpse.

Papa—By the way, who is the lady that bowed to us as we left the carriage?

Dorothy—The one with the black silk skirt, and rose petticoat, plaid blouse, purple colarette with silver clasp, tan hat, black hat with purple tips, carrying a silver-mounted card-case?

Papa—Yes.

Pat on the Hot Weather.

"Shure, I am just drippin' wid swate;
Me shirt an' me collar is wet.
I've a 'kerchief that cum from the stare,
An' I've mopped at me face till it's sore.
Now I'm afther thinkin'
In weight I'll be shrinkin'
If of this heat we have more.

"Shure, I was a grumblin' fool;
Not contint wid the weather whin cool.
Faith, I've got me pay,
Fur it's hotter to-day,
Thin I iver seen it afore.
Now Pat's going to grumble no more."

Farming Told on Him.

It was not a Canadian farmer of whom an English paper tells a story, although the incident might possibly be matched in this country. The agriculturist in question had been to a rent dinner to enjoy himself among men of his own walk in life, while his hard-working wife stayed at home and saw to it that the farm suffered no loss in his absence.

"I'm aboot tired out," was the man's greeting upon his return. "Is t' cows in t' barn?"

"Yes, long since," replied his spouse, hardly stopping a moment from her duties to glance at him as she spoke.

"Is t' hosses unharnessed and fed?" he enquired.

"Yes."

"Fowls locked up?"

"Yes."

"Wood chopped for mornin'?"

"Yes."

"Them ducks plucked and dressed for market?"

"Yes."

"Wagon-wheel mended and ready to start in t' mornin'?"

"Yes."

"Oh, then," concluded the good man with a sigh of relief, "let me have my supper and turn in. Farmin' is beginnin' to tell on me."

Literary Pretense.

IF all of us who in these latter days have acquired some repute of knowledge of literature were to be tried before a jury of real experts, it is to be feared, writes Guy Carleton Lee, that the vast majority of us would win this sentence: "Guilty of having gained a reputation under false pretenses." Let us be candid with ourselves, since the confidence need go no further. Have we really made ourselves familiar with English masterpieces? It were damning to confess ignorance of Chaucer, for example; let all who have read the "Canterbury Tales," to take but a portion of his works, mentally hold up their hands. The resulting show might not carry an election in the smallest election precinct.

Perhaps we have taken an unfair test. Chaucer is difficult reading to any but the scholar, and the quaint old words are apt to interfere with any pleasure in the reading. Let us return, then, to writers of a later date, whose language holds no obscurity of form. How many of us have read "The Faery Queen" from beginning to end? Perhaps some few, to whom literature is a profession, not a recreation; but of the rest of us who so glibly discuss Edmund Spenser and his influence upon poetry, and who talk learnedly of the Spenserian stanza, the vast majority are utter strangers to the works of the poet they praise.

The early dramatists, again. Most of us are vaguely aware that Marlowe wrote plays called "The Jew of Malta" and "Tamburlaine," and a dramatic poem entitled "Doctor Faustus;" but our knowledge of him stops there. Massinger, because of the occasional presentation on the stage of "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," is more familiar to us; but our acquaintance with him is strictly limited to that one work. Beaumont and Fletcher are by name "familiar in the mouth as household words," but some of us would be sorely puzzled to quote a line written by these old collaborators. Ben Jonson we know by his epitaph; but by his works we know him not. Shakespeare—ah! there we are safe; all of us have read him. Have we so? Along comes some villainous prier-into-secret-places and questions us of our knowledge of the "Sonnets;" and straightway we wish that we were dead or that Shakespeare had never been born to write twaddle that is called literature.

Dryden, again. He is sometimes talked of nowadays; is he ever read? And the dramatists of the Restoration—Wycherly, Congreve, Farquhar, Vanbrugh? And—to retrace our steps for the moment—Sidney and Harvey and Rochester and Herrick—oh, yes, we all know the quotation from the latter concerning the little feet which stole in and out; but, singular as it may appear, these lines were not the sole production of Herrick.

Pass on. Is Pope ever read nowadays? Who of us can ever give a list of his principal poems? It would be a good wager that ninety-nine out of a hundred among us, being asked to do this, would promptly exclaim: "The Essay on Man," and then continue: "Er—and—'The Rape of the Lock,' you know—and—h'm—oh, well, and all the rest."

Cowper—didn't he write something about a sofa? Southey? Oh, yes, he wrote "How the Water Comes Down at Lodore," and—and other things. Richardson? Addison? Steele? We seem to know these names—we are before our jury of experts now—but we can not recall their writings for the moment. Swift? Oh, he wrote "Gulliver's Travels;" we read that when we were young; yes, we have entirely forgotten it, and recall no political satire in it. We know that Fielding and Smollett were very coarse writers; we do not remember any other characteristics. Ever read them? No, but we have read of them.

But, the attorney for the defence may urge, these are not names of giants; knowledge of their works is not indispensable. Waiving this point, the prosecuting attorney sternly demands if we have never claimed acquaintance with these men, if we have never referred to them with an air of easy nonchalance calculated—and intended—to impress our auditory with the fact that we were profoundly versed in their works. How many of us pretenders can honestly answer "No"?

"Now," says the prosecuting attorney, "I have but one more question to ask you. You have often sneered at Byron as out of date and monotonous; have you ever read 'Childe Harold's Pilgrimage,' or that magnificent dramatic poem, 'Cain'?" And we answer desperately: "No; Byron is no poet; he is not literature; it would be waste of valuable time to read his stuff."

And then the attorney for the defence, in despair at our admissions, yet still fighting his case, asks us to name the works with which we are familiar, that we may show that our reputation is deserved. Sure of our ground, we go trippingly on with a list of the "Trilbies," the "Ladies of Quality," the "Richard Carvels," the—but here our attorney hastily bids us leave the stand, and submits the case without argument.

Is the picture overdrawn? We fear not.

A Volatile Community.

"What kind of a town have you here?" enquired a recently-arrived tourist from New England.

"Lively!" enthusiastically replied the landlord of the Atlantic and Pacific Hotel, at Boomopolis, Oklahoma. 'Lively, stranger! Thar's a lynchin' 'most every night, and balls, shootin's, tar-and-featherin's, and other rallifkaboos, about as often as you can turn out to 'em; a couple was married in a balloon last week, two prominent preachers shot each other considerably at the Sabbath school picnic day before yesterday, and thar was a cyclone less than a month ago; new buildin's are bein' erected right along, we've got an enthusiastic county-seat fight on hand all the time, thar's a show in the Op'ry House once in a while, the O. K. barber shop put in a bathtub lately, the post-office was burglarized a spell ago—the front of the buildin' was flung half-way across the street, the safe blown wrong side out, and the children have been busy ever since pickin' postage stamps off'n the gum weeds whar the wind distributed 'em. You can git any kind of a game you like at any time or stir up any sort of trouble in a minute, by just lettin' your wants be known. They call this yere town the Paris of Oklahoma, and don't you forgit it!"—"Life."

Belle—You look worried, dear. Do something to occupy your mind. Why not read a little fiction?

Violet—I do, dear; I get a letter from my husband every day.—Moonshine.

"We shall have to try again," said the photographer, inspecting the result of the first sitting. "You seem to have had one eye shut."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Wilful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

"Oh, how I wish," he cried, "that I dare tell you something else! I feel like a man whose life is at stake. I long, yet fear to speak. Have you read the beautiful play of 'Romeo and Juliet?'—how love came to Romeo like the swift dart of an arrow the first time he ever looked upon the face of fair Juliet? He loved her as truly as though he had known her long years."

"Yes, I have read the play," she murmured; and looking eagerly into the sweet, downcast face, he took heart of grace, he bent his dark, handsome head over the little white hand, whispering softly:

"Ought I to go away in silence, and let a secret longing eat out my heart? Ah, yes; I know that is what I should do, but I cannot—I must speak. It is this:—What happened to Romeo has happened to me; my heart has left me and has gone out to you. Oh, are you very angry, dear?"

He saw her lovely, dimpled face flush, and the beautiful blue eyes that had been regarding him so wonderingly drop swiftly in the sweetest girlish confusion. Still she was not angry, and that was one point gained. If she would only listen to his pleadings, to the eloquent love stories he knew so well how to tell, he felt sure that he would win her.

"It is true," he murmured, emboldened by her blushes. "I—love—you; won't you tell me my love has not been in vain? Tell me, do you care for me? Does my going bring one pang to your heart?"

For a moment a dead silence fell between them. Daisy's heart throbbed so loudly she felt sure he must hear it. To have won a heart so completely, so entirely, so quickly, was a grand thing to have done, it seemed to her. It was like the romantic stories she had read of. She was pleased, flattered; but it was at the same time very embarrassing. Daisy did not know in the least what to do or say; still it was delightful to have this little change in her monotonous young life, of which her gay, restless spirit had grown so weary.

"Shall you miss me when I am gone?" he asked, drawing a little nearer to her.

"You know that I shall miss you, Mr. St. John," she answered simply.

His going was like the setting of the sun and the gloom of night to the flowers.

He caught the little hands in a very transport of joy.

"I believe you do care for me, my Lily," he cried. "I am going to put it to the test. Grant me the favor of letting me see you just once again. Meet me tonight here where we are parting now. Just for one brief half hour when the moon is shining. It will be for the last time," he pleaded. "I wonder how desperate the prayer of a dying man is? I should like to make mine the same; it is life or death to me. Will you come, sweet Lily? Let me see you for one brief half hour."

Her better sense said "No," but he looked so handsome, so agitated, and it was all so novel, so piquant, so romantic.

"Perhaps I may come," she answered timidly.

"Ah, you will come!" he cried, and the next moment he had bent his handsome head and kissed her, and for long hours after he had gone that kiss, the first ever pressed upon them by a lover, burned her scarlet lips.

That afternoon, when she was alone in her own little room at the farmhouse she took down the well-worn copy of Shakespeare from the shelf—yes, her romance had been very like Juliet's.

It was sweet to be wooed in such a fashion; it was very pleasant to listen to tender, caressing words from a lover's lips; but whether she loved him with such a love, as deep as Juliet's for handsome Romeo, she could hardly tell; she was afraid not.

Farmer Gordon was smoking his pipe on the door-step when Daisy emerged from the house that evening, her straw hat hanging from her arm by its blue ribbons.

"Only down to the peach orchard, papa," she answered, a little confusedly, her bright eyes drooping beneath his gaze.

"Do you want me to go along, pet?" he asked.

"No, indeed, papa," she answered in dismay.

"Poor little lass, she's lonesome without Olive and Hetty," he mused, as he watched the slim, graceful figure flit away in the moonlight.

With swift feet Daisy sped onward; as she neared the orchard she saw a tall figure pacing impatiently up and down in the moonlight.

He heard her quick step and turned.

"My Lily!" he cried, starting forward in joyful eagerness and clasping her hands, "how good of you to come! I know I was asking the greatest possible favor. I hardly dared hope that you would grant it."

"I can stay but a few minutes," she answered timidly. "Papa will miss me shortly, and if I do not return soon he will come out into the grounds in search of me, Mr. St. John."

"Won't you call me Harold?" he asked eagerly; "the name of Mr. St. John sounds so formal."

Permanent Cures of Cancer

We have give a few cases, where the efficacy of our constitutional treatment in curing Cancer is established beyond all question. We have plenty on fyle.

There is ample proof that where our remedy cures, it cures to stay and saves people from the torture of knife and plaster.

CANCER OF THE BREAST—A lady had Cancer of the Breast, which rendered her right shoulder and arm almost helpless. Our remedy cured her over five years ago, and there is not the slightest return of the trouble.

CANCER OF THE FACE—This case of a gentleman who was so bad that his right cheek was almost eaten off with the disease. Plasters aggravated his trouble. Our treatment cured him five years ago and he has been all right since.

CANCER OF THE STOMACH—Doctors pronounced the trouble cancer of the stomach. There was vomiting of material that looked like coffee grounds. Great weakness and prostration. Cured over four years ago and well to-day.

CANCER OF THE NOSE—A severe case which was cured by our remedy in 1891 and has never returned to this day.

Full accounts of the above cases, together with the names and addresses of the persons, are given in our new book, "Cancer, its cause and Cure," sent to anyone, in plain wrapper, on receipt of two stamps. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

POLICE COURT NEWS

At the County Police Court on Saturday, John Irwin appeared to answer a charge of malicious destruction of property in Ashburnham some years ago. Pending a proposed settlement between the parties, the case was enlarged until Saturday next, Irwin giving bail for his appearance then.

At the police court yesterday a young boy came up before the magistrate, charged with stealing parcels from the Post Office. After hearing the evidence, and considering the youthful appearance of the boy, he was handed over to the Children's Aid Society, who will look after him and endeavor to teach him how to behave properly.

COUNCIL IN SPECIAL SESSION

A Deputation to Go to Ottawa—Tenders for Street Watering

The Town Council met in special session at five o'clock yesterday afternoon. Those present were, Mayor Denne, Ald. Best, Rush, Edgcumbe, Corkery, Hatton Morrison, Cinkscale and McGregor.

The object of the meeting was to decide what action the council would take in response to a communication from Mayor Howland, of Toronto, who asked the council to assist either by deputation or letter in having a bill at present before the Dominion Parliament, respecting the Bell Telephone Co. changed. The way the bill stands at present it gives the company the right to place poles &c at any place along the highways or streets without the consent of the Municipality. There will be a large deputation to go to Ottawa from different towns and cities to oppose the bill. Mayor Denne and Ald. Morrison will represent the Town Council.

Ald. Hatton handed in a report giving the estimated cost of repairs required in the town waggons and water carts. He was authorized to have the necessary work done at once.

The clerk was instructed to call for tenders for street watering in the same districts as last year.

PETERBOROUGH BIRDS WIN

A Well Known Local Sport Several Hundred Dollars Ahead

There was a very exciting cocking main pulled off last week, in which Peterborough and Lindsay birds were pitted against each other. The Times representative was present incog. and took the names of the principals in the affair. Eleven mains were fought, the Lindsay birds winning four and the local birds seven. About $500 changed hands.

Chief Nevison, of Lindsay, secured the names of the sports, and it is understood that Chief Rozzel will be consulted with a view to the punishment of the parties.

PETERBORO SPRING ASSIZES

OPENED YESTERDAY BEFORE MR. JUSTICE LOUNT

Presented With Pair of White Gloves—He Advocates the Erection of a County Poor House.

The Spring Assizes of the High Court of Justice, opened yesterday afternoon before Hon. Mr. Justice Lount. The bar was represented by the following gentlemen:

Messrs. E. B. Edwards, K.C., R. M. Dennistoun, E. A. Peck, F. D. Kerr, A. E. Dixon, Geo. Edmison, A. P. Poussette, R. F. McWilliams, G. M. Roger, W. F. Johnston, G. J. Sherry, Norwood; Hugh O'Leary, Lindsay; G. H. Watson, K.C., Toronto.

There being no criminal cases on the docket, Mr. Justice Lount was presented with a pair of white gloves.

The Grand Jury was empannelled as follows:

J. J. McBain, foreman; merchant, Peterborough.

Thos. J. Flood, farmer, Ennismore.

J. J. Hartley, bricklayer, Peterborough.

Jas. Ingram, farmer, Harvey.

W. H. Johnston, farmer, Smith.

Alex Knox, farmer, Otonabee.

David Kerneghan, grocer, Peterborough.

W. G. Morrow, Secretary, Peterborough.

Geo. S. Matthews, manufacturer, Peterborough.

R. B. McKee, merchant, Peterborough.

Richard Patterson, farmer, Dummer.

Wm. Scott, merchant, Ashburnham.

Benj. Shortly, merchant, Peterborough.

Justice Lount, in his address to the jury, stated that their duties would be very slight. There were no criminal cases, a fact on which he congratulated the county. Their duty would be to visit the jail and those public institutions receiving Government aid, and to ascertain that everything was kept in order and cleanliness, which is the duty of those in charge, and also to see what improvements or alterations were necessary. He referred to the headway that smallpox had made in Ontario, and pointed out that the greatest and best preventive was cleanliness. After a few further remarks, the jury were dismissed to visit the jail, hospitals, etc.

The first case taken up was that of Card vs. Dickson Company. Dennistoun, Peck & Stevenson for plaintiff; Roger & Bennett and G. H. Watson, for defendants. The case was not concluded when court arose last night, and will be continued this morning.

THE WORD "RINGER"

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—What does the slang term "ringer" mean? I overheard the expression "He's an old ringer," a few days since.

ENQUIRER

Ans.—Those dictionaries that contain the word define it as a horse not entitled to run in a certain race, but entered fraudulently. It would seem to be a horse that is known to the betting ring—which is what a ringer actually is.

TO MAKE A BLACKBOARD

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—As you invite contributions to the Times, let me tender my mite: I notice that many school children use blackboards at their homes on which to work out their school problems. Many parents cannot afford to buy these boards, and I therefore give the following receipt: Take any black paint mixed in oil, drain off all the oil on top, if there is any, add enough powdered whiting to make a good, stiff putty. Then thin with turpentine till like cream, stir well and brush out thin; four coats, allowing each to dry before applying the next. Wood, cloth or pasteboard for a base. The turpentine makes a dead finish, the whiting makes it "bite" or take the chalk.

PAINTER.

EYE GERMS ARE ON RAMPAGE

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—A report comes from Chicago that the ailment called "pink-eye" is troubling thousands of Chicago residents, and is epidemic. According to Chief Medical Inspector Spalding, disease producing germs get into the eyes with the dust stirred by the winds. The inner surface of the eyelid is similar to the lining of the throat, and these germs readily find lodging there. The citizens of Peterborough have suffered every spring from the dust, containing disease producing germs, but which might, could, would or should have been obviated if our Council had done its duty. If they have no foresight, one would suppose that they would learn from experience and make timely provision for the laying of the dust and not wait for one month before taking action. I am not a prophet or the son of a prophet, but I venture to predict that they will again trot out the same old excuses that have done service every spring for a number of years in the past, such as, the tenders are not let, the watering cart needs a coat of paint, or needs to be repaired, etc., etc.

Even yet, might it not be well to stir them up a little, so that the season of suffering may be shortened, for it has already commenced, and there is nothing in sight to show that they are making any preparation. Yours, etc.,

CONCERNING CERVERA'S FLEET

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—Will you please inform me, through your valuable paper, if any of the Spanish ships of Admiral Cervera's fleet, which fought at Santiago, were saved, and if so, please name which one?

H.C.A.

Ans.—Not one of Admiral Cervera's fleet was ultimately saved for the use of the United States navy. The Christobal Colon was beached, practically unharmed, but it rolled over on its beam ends and its side was crushed by its own weight. The Vizcaya and Oquendo were so shattered by explosions following the fires set by the American shells they were beyond repairs. The Maria Teresa was on fire when beached, but the crew opened the sea-valves and the water flooded the magazines, preventing explosions. This cruiser was raised, patched, pumped out, and was expected to be saved as a prize. It was started in tow for Norfolk Navy Yard, but when off the Bahamas was overtaken by a hurricane, broke loose from the towing steamer and was driven ashore on the island of the Bahamas, too badly wrecked to admit of further effort. The Reina Mercedes, a smaller cruiser which was in Santiago harbor before Cervera arrived, and which was set on fire and sunk in the harbor by the Spaniards when the attempt at escape was made, was raised and brought to Norfolk. But it was not a modern, high-class cruiser like the others, and it was badly damaged by fire. After a careful survey it was decided it would not pay to expend the large sum needed to rebuild it, as it was not of a specially desirable type. So the Reina Mercedes is kept at the Norfolk Navy Yard as an object of interest to visitors, but probably will never be repaired and put in commission.

GOLF.

The annual meeting of the Ladies Golf Club will be held this evening. It is hoped that the meeting will be well attended as there are a number of important subjects to be discussed relating to the work of the approaching season.

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Golf Club was held last night in the offices of Messrs. Hatton and Bradburn. A large number of the players were present. The chair was ably occupied by Mr. Peter Campbell and Mr. C. Bradburn filled the position of Secretary. A number of reports were presented which showed the club to be in a prosperous condition. This year they have a small deficit to face. Arrangements will be made whereby the club will have a lease of the grounds at present used by the club. A number of other subjects came up for discussion after which the meeting adjourned.

BASEBALL.

The season for baseball will soon be open and already a number of players are talking of forming a city league of the different teams in town, of which there will be a large number. Most of the large manufacturing concerns will have a team this year besides a number of other teams. There will be a senior team, chosen from the best players in the different clubs. To bring out the best men and also to encourage new blood the formation of a city league would be most beneficial and would also increase the interest taken in the game.

A meeting will be called during the next week or so when the matter will be fully discussed and definite action will be taken. The date of the meeting will be announced as soon as possible.

BELGIAN ORGANS DISAGREE WITH EX-PRES. KRUGER

They Hold that to Insist Upon Boer Independence Would be Folly.

GERMANY MAY RESTRICT THE INVASION.

She Will Follow Russia's Lead—Spanish Decree Disregarded by All the Associations

London, March 26.—A despatch from Brussels to The Times says that enlightened opinion in Belgium is not in accord with Mr. Kruger and the Boer delegates on the question of independence. The leading Belgian papers say that to try to preserve independence would be folly. The arrangement now advocated is that the republics be made British colonies, with sufficient autonomy to preserve a semblance of nationality. It is urged that Britain should not insist on the idea of dominion in the terms of surrender.

SPANISH DECREE DISREGARDED.

London, March 26.—The Madrid correspondent of The Times, writing with reference to the Spanish decree ordering the registration of religious associations, says the term of six months which was allowed expired on March 26, but that no association had complied with the requirements. Although in some quarters it is believed that the Government intends to vindicate its authority, it is difficult to see what can be done until the Government comes to a definite understanding with the Vatican.

GERMANY MAY RESTRICT THE INVASION.

Paris, March 26.—The Berlin correspondent of the Paris edition of the New York Herald says the Emperor and the owners of the trans-Atlantic lines were constantly in conference at Potsdam concocting measures to prevent the Americanization of the lines. The Emperor is moving to induce German capitalists to subscribe stock to the lines and not to allow capital to come in from the United States. The correspondent gives a warning that Germany will follow Russia's lead and enact a restrictive rule preventing foreign shareholders from voting in certain concerns.

FINES AND LONG IMPRISONMONT

Some Convicts Must Serve Ten Years For Being Rebels—Others Who Aided Boers Must Pay $20,000 Each as a Penalty

Durban, Natal, March 26 — The civil treason court has been disbanded. Hereafter persons charged with treason will be tried by court-martial. Of the estimated 800 rebels in Natal 500 have been tried. Their sentences ranged up to ten years' imprisonment and the fines to which convicted men were also sentenced amounted in some cases to as high as $20,000.

Montreal and Stratford Shops will be Busy

The Grand Trunk management have decided to build twenty-five new locomotives, 100 coal cars and 300 flat cars, at a cost of $700,000. The work will be distributed among the shops at Montreal and Stratford. General Manager Hays says they are not for any special need of the moment, but to keep the rolling stock in a first-class condition. There is another feature to it and it is that it will provide work for the Grand Trunk employees and keep them busy for some time.

NAVIES TO CHECK RUSSIA

New Zealand Premier Discusses the Far Eastern Situation

Wellington, New Zealand, March 26—Speaking at a banquet here to-night Prime Minister Seddon said he was in favor of the increase of the Australian squadron. He declared that Russia was plainly attempting to secure a large seaboard in China.

The Anglo-Japanese agreement was made in order to prevent Russia from becoming the controlling power in the North Pacific. The Japanese navy and the British-Chinese squadron, the Prime Minister declared, would be sufficiently strong to combat the Russian influence.

The Australian squadron would have to protect the trade of the colonies. Some of the cruisers now in service were out of date and would have to be discarded and replaced by better ships.

NEW CHARTERED BANK

The Latest will be Known as the First National Bank of Canada

Toronto, March 26 — Notice has been given by a Toronto solicitor that application will be made to the Dominion Parliament at its present session for an act to incorporate a new chartered bank, to be known as "The First National Bank of Canada." This would make the third new bank entering the Canadian field. The Sovereign Bank of Canada is now in process of organization and will shortly be in active operation, while notice has been given of application for a charter for another bank, to be known as The Metropolitan Bank of Canada.

Eating a Question.

Pleasurable Anticipation,
When Proper Food is Used in Moderation.

If you are one of those who have eaten too freely of Grape-Nuts and have been satiated, we have a word of help and advice for you. It is a concentrated food, and the system requires and can handle only a small amount at a time.

If too much is taken nature revolts against the overloading. Be moderate and enjoy the food day by day. It is too valuable to your system and to your sturdy health to give over. It is a common fault for people to overeat candy or any other delicacy, at some time in life, and from an excess be driven to abstinence. But with Grape-Nuts it will richly repay you to start again on the fixed allowance of not more than three heaping teaspoons for the cereal part of the meal, and so long as you use the food in moderation you will stick to it, and look forward to the meal with pleasurable anticipation. Remember, Grape-Nuts furnishes the most delicious tasting cereal food known, and contains the certain elements nature uses for repairing and rebuilding the brain and gray matter in the nerve centers. The steady and moderate user of Grape-Nuts can depend upon daily nourishment of the kind that gives one that feeling of reserve strength, so essential to a successful, active brain worker. Do not try to cook this food. It is thoroughly and completely cooked at factory, and is ready for instant service.

SEES WAR FOR ENGLAND

"Spectators" Serious View of the Eastern Situation

AN OMNIOUS WAR CLOUD

The Great British Newspaper Paints a Dark Picture of the Future

Russo-French Answer to the Anglo-Japanese Treaty a Notice That There Can Be No One Power War in China or Corea—Rivals for our Favor and Germany's

London, March 26—Widely different views are taken throughout Europe of the Franco-Russian declaration in regard to the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The easiest and the simplest interpretation of the declaration is that it is an indorsement of the principles on which the Anglo-Japanese treaty was based and that it furnishes an additional guarantee of peace.

This apparently pacific utterance contains, however, an announcement which arouses grave apprehensions in England. These fears find a clear expression in a serious article in the Spectator, which says:

"The sting of the Russo-French communique is in the tail. The last clause reads, 'Nevertheless, they themselves being also obliged to take into consideration the eventuality of aggressive action on the part of a third power, or of fresh troubles in China, jeopardizing the integrity and free development of that power, and becoming a menace to their own interests, the two allied Governments reserve it to themselves to consider in such case means of assuring their protection.'

"This, obviously, can mean only one thing. The third power whose possibly aggressive action is contemplated is, of course, Japan. In other words, we are warned that if Japan from any cause gets involved in hostilities the war will be with two countries—Russia and France. If it comes to war it will be the two-power war contemplated by the treaty. In other words, the Russo-French declaration finally and entirely disposes of the fond illusions which have been entertained so widely here that in spite of the alliance with Japan there is little danger of our being involved in dangerous complications. It has been argued that even if Japan got into war with Russia we might feel quite secure, because the very last thing the French would do would be to come to Russia's assistance. They, it was supposed, would politely tell Russia that they wished her well, but that it would be a cruel kindness to help her, and so bring England into the melee, and, therefore, as true friends, they intended to stand aside.

"The Russo-French declaration puts an absolute stop to all of this. It is a clear notice that there can be no single-power war in the far east. We said when the alliance was first announced that we must make up our minds to that alliance bringing with it the possibility of war with France, and we pointed out also that the alliance left our foreign policy at the mercy of Japan. Japan might and probably would prove merciful, for Japan is governed by prudent astute statesmen, but that could not alter the fact that we have placed our foreign relations, not merely in the far east, but our foreign relations in regard to Russia and France, generally, at the mercy of Japan. We may disguise the fact by diplomatic sophistries and we may refuse to recognise the fact, but the fact remains that we and Japan have ourselves ranged opposite to Russia and France and that our interests may some day plunge us into a war which will be fought in the Channel and the Baltic. We do not, of course, suggest that the risk of war must never be run if vital interests so near home are involved, but we do think that such risks require grave thought and consideration."

This pessimistic opinion finds echoes on the Continent. Thus the Cologne Gazette yesterday asserted that Russia and England were strenuously endeavoring to draw the United States to the side that they respectively represent in the threatened conflict. The fact is that America's position in the present situation is an absolutely commanding one. France is completely committed to Russia in the event of hostilities from any cause. Russia finds herself forced to decide definitely whether she will abandon her plans in Manchuria and the far east generally or force them to fruition. If the latter she must act quickly, while England is still engaged in South Africa and while Ireland is seriously seditious.

One point must be settled before it is possible to make any decision that will lead to war. What will America do? It is perfectly understood that no Anglo-American alliance is possible, but would America remain in a strictly neutral attitude if England and Japan were engaged in a war in the defence of principles with which America was in hearty sympathy? That is the question which Russia and France would seek to have answered before venturing upon any bellicose policy.

The following despatch from Berlin is from a source upon which reliance may be placed:

"Germany has been approached by both groups of the allies, but the Imperial Government has declined to entangle itself in any way. Assurances have been received here from Washington which indicate that the American Government will take a similar attitude. It is represented on behalf of both Russia and France that since the Anglo-Japanese treaty was made public Japan has been detected in intrigues which seriously threaten peace."

Valuable Advice to Rheumatics

Eat meat sparingly, and take very little sugar, avoid damp feet, drink water abundantly, and always rely on Polson's Nerviline as an absolute reliever of rheumatic pains. Being five times stronger than other remedies, its power over pain is simply beyond belief. Buy a large 25c. bottle to-day, test it, and see if this is not so. Polson's Nerviline always cures rheumatism.

TRANSVAALERS FAVOR GENERAL SURRENDER

Impression at Wolve Hoek is That Schalkburger and Party are in that Frame of Mind

GEN. KITCHENER'S AIDE WITH SCHALBURGER

Five Other Members of the British Commander-in-Chief's Staff are Also on Their Way South

Wolve Hoek, Orange River Colony, March 26. The train having on board Acting-President Schalkburger and his party passed this place on its way to Kroonstad yesterday. The Transvaal Government officials were accompanied by Captain Marker, Lord Kitchener's aid de camp, and five other members of the staff of the British commander-in-chief in South Africa. The impression here is that the Transvaalers favor a general surrender of the Boer forces.

REASON FOR CONTINUED RESISTANCE.

Amsterdam, March 26.—Abraham Fischer, the Boer delegate, in an interview to-day, gives a variety of reasons why the Boers in the field should be in a mood to continue the war rather than accept terms less advantageous than those previously demanded. The latest report from President Steyn, received under date of February 15, says:—"Last year we fought hopefully; now, we are fighting with confidence, not to the bitter end, but to a happy end." The Boer forces have plenty of everything except clothing.

A BRIEF INTERVIEW.

London, March 26.—The Daily Chronicle learns that the interview between the Boer delegates and Lord Kitchener at Pretoria was of the briefest and most formal character. Mr. Schalkburger and his colleagues simply reporting themselves to the British Commander-in-Chief and then proceeding southwards to Kroonstad. The exact place of the meeting between ex-President Steyn and De Wet and the Transvaal representatives has not transpired, but, unless altered, it is to be somewhere in the Reitz district, where the members of the Free State Executive have long found shelter. While the negotiations are in progress there will be a complete cessation of hostilities. All offensive operations against De Wet, Delarey and Botha will be hung up, and the three principal Boer generals have on their part agreed to honorably observe the armistice. It is believed that the delegates before committing themselves to a second meeting with Lord Kitchener wil' first of all acquaint General Botha with the result of their mission to the Orange River Colony.

BRODRICK'S STATEMENT.

London, March 26.—The stock market was stimulated by the rumors of peace, and the street was more cheerful than for many days. Mr. Brodrick minimized the importance of the despatches which the censor had allowed to pass promptly out of Pretoria, but was not wholly successful. His explanation that Mr. Schalkburger had been armed with a safe conduct for the purpose of consulting ex-President Steyn seemed to imply that Lord Kitchener and Milner had not emerged from the background, and that peace negotiations between the British and Boer camps had not been resumed formally and in earnest. The impression produced on members by the studiously moderate and cautious statement was that he might have said a good deal more, and that the prospect for peace was more hopeful and clearer than the Ministerial statement indicated.

Three reasons could be assigned for the belief. First, the captured correspondence between the Boer leaders proved several months ago that Mr. Schalkburger was making a strenuous effort to induce ex-President Steyn to consent to a suspension of hostilities. Secondly, Lord Lansdowne in his correspondence with the Netherlands Government contended that the quickest method of arranging a settlement would be direct communication between Lord Kitchener and Messrs. Schalkburger and Steyn. Thirdly, that a belief that peace negotiations were in progress and the end of the war in sight has been current in The Hague for a fortnight among Boer refugees.

BOASTS OF HANGING BOERS

Sergeant Paish Returns to London to Arouse Jingo Admiration

London, March 26 — The latest returned South African hero is Sergeant Paish of the Glamorganshire militia. He hanged with his own hands four Boers accused of breaking their parole, a punishment which in itself is a breach of civilized usages.

What specially aroused jingo admiration was Paish's description of the "pretty scene" created by the wife of one of his victims when she saw him practising the hanging beforehand with an old anvil. This practice was carried on in a public place so the women could not fail to see it.

BUILDS NEW ENNGINE OF WAR

Philadelphia Man Says His Machine Will Abolish Big Army

Philadelphia, Pa., March 26 — Captain Charles H. Hoffstetter, of 6006 Girard avenue, plans to reduce Uncle Sam's army to 2,400 men within five years. With that insignificant number of troops, aided by the engine of war invented by him, Captain Hoffstetter says the United States can "lick all creation" in the most approved style.

Captain Hoffstetter's "engine" for human destruction consists of an automobile fort, which can go over the ground at the rate of an express train, disbursing hot lead from twenty rapid fire guns and two breech loaders of the artillery type. Each engine, the captain says, can do the work of a regiment as the army is now organized, and only twelve men are needed to man each machine.

Two searchlights will dissipate the darkness ahead of each engine, and make the enemy an easy target.

The captain has been working on the machine more than two years. It will be built on four wheels, to be operated either by electricity or gasoline. It will be ten feet six inches long and six feet six inches wide and three feet high. A wooden framework will be covered with armor, and the guns will be mounted on arms, which will protrude from the sides.

Catarrh is a Germ Disease

Science, armed with the microscope, has established it a fact, and this conclusion renders obsolete the practice of treating asthma, catarrh and bronchitis by stomach drugging, sprays, snuffs, etc. Such treatments are an utter failure because they cannot penetrate the delicate air cells of the lungs, or permeate the air passages of the nose and bronchial tubes where the germs of catarrh have their stronghold. Catarrhozone is the only certain remedy. It is inhaled by the mouth and after spreading through all the respiratory organs is exhaled through the nostrils. Catarrhozone kills the germs, heals the inflamed tissues, clears the head and throat in two minutes, and cures in a few hours. Nothing is so effective, pleasant and simple as Catarrhozone. Two months' treatment, $1.00. Small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

SMALLPOX AMONG TROOPS

Col. Evans Reports Four Cases of Smallpox—Measles were Epidemic

Toronto, March 26.—H. M. Mowat, K.C., received a letter yesterday from Col. Evans, dated Feb. 12, and written on the Victorian shortly before landing. In it he says: "Just a few lines before we land. Very cold and rough for the first five days; result, about fifteen horses died. Epidemic of measles —16 cases, more or less. Then one case of smallpox. Fortunately, as yet no new case of smallpox has developed, and I am hopeful that we shall get through without any more. It was rather a nasty shock when the case was reported. He is a French-Canadian. He is isolated down near the screw with a sentry watching the door of his cabin. Things have gone well. The men's conduct is uniformly A 1, and everybody cheerful and happy . . . We are all very comfortable on the ship."

In a letter to a friend at Ottawa Col. Evans reports the development of three more cases of smallpox. There is nothing to indicate where the troops are now, but they are supposed to be in quarantine at Durban. A letter received by an official of the Militia Department at Ottawa from his son, who is in the 2nd Mounted Rifles, states that the men suffering from smallpox are four of the trackers, who were especially engaged at Lord Kitchener's request.

FROM THE MANHATTAN.

Ottawa, March 26.—Surgeon-Major Duff, in writing from Durban Feb. 17, gives an account of the voyage of the Manhattan. He says: "We have had a very satisfactory, if a very long, journey, with a good deal of sickness, but no deaths. We had 80 cases in hospital, 11 of which were measles. We disembarked two cases at Cape Town. One had been seasick the whole voyage, and was very weak and disabled. The other was convalescent from pneumonia after measles, and had had a severe hemorrhage. We also sent off one of the ship's crew, a dangerous lunatic, who gave infinite trouble on the journey. The trip from Cape Town to Durban has been a most pleasing one. We will have three patients to transfer at Durban, one of whom sustained a severe fracture of both bones of the right leg about three inches above the ankle. We have only lost eight horses during the voyage, which is a wonderful record."

STATE OF CAPE COLONY IS HIGLY DANGEROUS

Sir George Goldie Says the Most Serious Difficulties will be Encountered There

THINKS BOERS WILL NOT COME TO TERMS.

Eminent Publicist Says That He Has Not Met any Boers Who Will Admit Themselves Beaten

London, March 25. — Sir George Goldie, vice-president of the Royal Geographical Society, and founder of Nigeria, who has just returned from a thorough investigation of South Africa, where he conferred with Lord Milner, Lord Kitchener, Cecil Rhodes, Sir Walter Hely-Hutchison, the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, and numbers of other influential men, brings home rather pessimistic ideas of the general situation from a British point of view. The conditions in Cape Colony he regards as especially dangerous, and he considers that the most serious British difficulties will be encountered there in the future, as at present. In the course of an interview with a representative of the Associated Press, Sir George Goldie, while recognizing the possible importance of Acting President Schalkburger's step, said he was convinced that the question of peace or war rested in the hands of President Steyn, and that Mr. Kruger and the other Boers in Europe no longer represent Boer opinion. The real difficulty in the path of peace is the question of granting amnesty to the Cape and Natal rebels, and Sir George says the vague promises of the British Government have not the slightest weight while the fighting burghers are in their present state of mind. Sir George Goldie advocates granting amnesty to the rebels, but he insists that everyone must be disfranchised for life. This, he claims, would go far towards allaying the bitterness of the loyalists. Sir George deprecates any attempt to permit the use of a dual language. He says English alone must be the official language, and adds that the fact that practically the whole of the rising generation of the two republics are now in the concentration camps, and are rapidly learning English, will be of great aid in this direction. He estimates that 100,000 armed men will be needed in South Africa for some years after the conclusion of peace. Sir George Goldie failed to meet any Boers who yet recognised that they had been finally beaten, though some of them admitted that they had been temporarily overweighted by numbers.

METHUEN RECOVERING.

London, March 25.—Despatches from Johannesburg convey the information that General Lord Methuen, who was wounded at Tweebosch, is progressing very satisfactorily. It is not known yet whether the General will be crippled as a result of the serious wound.

CANADIAN SICK.

Ottawa, March 25.—His Excellency has received a cable from Mr. Chamberlain, announcing that Charles Wesley Machina, of St. Mary's, Ontario, is dangerously ill of enteric fever.

—Mr. A. Maybee, of Toronto, is relieving Mr. Complin of his duties as accountant in the local branch of the Bank of Commerce during the latter's absence on a three months' trip to England.

A FATAL LIBERTY.

Bombay, March 24.—Walter Hoffman, a German Boer, was shot by the British sentry while attempting to escape from the prison camp at Bellary, on the island of Ceylon. The wound was fatal.

PAY FOR LOSSES.

London, March 24.—A member of the South African Constabulary, writing home, says that some of his comrades were recently made to pay for the horses, saddlery, rifles and ammunition lost when they were surrounded and compelled to surrender to a force of Boers about fifteen times stronger than the British force.

DR. DUPONT'S REPORT.

Amsterdam, March 25.—In a report recently issued by Dr. Dupont, superintendent of the Dutch ambulance with DeWet's column, it is stated that a detachment of Red Cross men were captured by a British force near Bethlehem. This is the first mention of the capture of DeWet's Dutch ambulance. The members of another Dutch ambulance captured earlier in the war are now in Ceylon. Letters were found upon the latter showing that they were giving other than medical assistance to the Boers.

London, March 25. — General Sir Leslie Rundle, who commanded the troops who came to grief at Tweefontein, is on his way home to England. The Central News correspondent at Pretoria, says that the Boers, after the camp was rushed, would not have got off with their booty but for a lapse of duty on the part of a telegraph operator. General Rundle, directly he learned of the affair, wrote a message for Eland's River camp, ordering up the Imperial Light Horse. The operator, however, declined taking the message, stating that he was worn out with extra duty. Two valuable hours were thus wasted, the message being sent by galloper. The operator was subsequently tried by court-martial. He said he had been thirty hours on duty, but that did not save him from a sentence of two years' imprisonment.

ANOTHER WAR CLOUD NOW IN THE HORIZON

The Trouble in Afghanistan Likely to Lead to a Conflict

London, March 25 — The rumors of coming trouble in Afghanistan, which have been discussed in recent journals, receive confirmation from the fact that the troops have not been paid since the new Ameer came to the throne, and are very restless. In view of a revolt, the Novosti, of St. Petersburg, says such a prospect cannot be regarded with indifference either in Russia or Great Britain. Russia, it declares, offers no encouragement to the pretenders to the throne of the Ameer. But the outbreak of revolt would compel the Russian authorities near the Afghan frontier to spend a great deal of money to maintain the troops necessary to preserve order. But, on the other hand, it is just as advantageous for Russia and Great Britain to desire the maintenance of the status quo in Asia. Afghanistan possesses enormous importance, inasmuch as it separates Russia from India. The Ameer of Afghanistan, therefore, must either be powerful enough to maintain independence between the two great neighboring empires or he must become the vassal of one of them. It is no longer possible, continues the Novosti, to hold that Afghanistan is outside the Russian sphere of influence, although the latter has neither diplomatic agents nor consuls in that country. During the reign of Abdurrahman, Russia co-operated in the maintenance of the status quo in his states, because he knew how to preserve order and maintain suitable relations with the Russian and British governments. His son does not appear to be able to follow the paternal example, and Great Britain and Russia will, therefore, have to determine the attitude which they will observe towards Afghanistan should civil war become inevitable. The Novosti thinks it may be a mistake to suppose that troubles in Afghanistan must bring about an Anglo-Russian conflict, for these powers, being now practically neighbors in Asia, have no advantage in quarreling about a question which permits of an easy settlement to the benefit of their mutual interests. The nature of the settlement the Novosti leaves to the imagination. It is tolerably safe to surmise that it would begin with military occupation, just to keep the peace.

More Canadian Troops

Ottawa, March 26.—Lieut.-Col. Sam Hughes is anxious to smell the powder once more. He has made an offer to the Minister of Militia to raise a contingent of 2,500 men in Canada to go to South Africa and help put an end to the war. There are certain conditions attached to this offer. The first condition is that Lieut.-Col. Hughes will command, and the other is that he will be responsible only to Lord Kitchener or some other competent officer, who would appreciate the value of Canadian troops. When interviewed the lieutenant-colonel said he made the offer on March 18, and that he did it on account of the way things were going in the Southland. The offer has been acknowledged, but nothing more.

Canada may send another regiment to South Africa on the same terms that the 2nd Mounted Rifles went. It has been reported that the Imperial Government has written to this Government asking on what basis more Canadian troops could be used, but this is not officially confirmed. If peace overtures take place, it is not likely that this force would be needed. At present the need is apparent to allow the old regiment rest after prolonged campaigning, and to provide for a thorough policing of many districts, a work which the Canadians are singularly suited for.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 26, 1902.

WEST PETERBOROUGH NOMINATION

If we are to regard the great mass meeting of electors assembled in the Opera House on Saturday, which was as big in enthusiasm and energy as in numbers, as a criterion, we are amply justified in regarding Hon. J. R. Stratton's election as certain as his nomination. The Times has never seen a meeting of the kind that contained greater elements of encouragement to a candidate, nor one that showed a more united front. In spite of bad roads and distance, the friends of Mr. Stratton and the Government from every part of the constituency, were in the Opera House, and when they got there they showed a spirit of confidence and determination to "get there" in another sense, which must encourage friends and dismay opponents. We do not know who, or if anybody, will be brought out to oppose Mr. Stratton, but this we do know, that whoever his opponent may be, the Provincial Secretary will as a result of the coming contest be again the representative of West Peterborough. Mr. Stratton has made a good representative; his career has been so much in the interest of the town and county that it would not be wise to consider the advisability of trying for a change—better let, not only well enough, but very good, alone. In consideration of the excellent service Mr. Stratton has given the town and West Peterborough, and in view of his power to continue such service at a time when the growth of the town and its interests need the most staunch and influential friends, we think that it would be a wise as well as a graceful thing to allow him to be returned unopposed. Another thing in favor of this is the fact that opposition will be useless so far as preventing his election is concerned; and putting up opposition will partake very much of the nature of factiousness, for the nomination of a candidate in opposition will be for opposition's sake, not with the hope of success, and will mean the sacrifice of some aspiring innocent.

The Times is not a hide-bound believer in extreme partisanship. There are better things for a town and country than party triumph, and that is being represented by a man who will represent the solid good sense and loyalty to important interests of an electorate which can in the public interest rise above party consideration. The Times has great sympathy with Mr. G. F. Marter, of North Toronto, who separated himself from his party on one or two issues and resolved to "go it alone," in what he considers the public interests. In his address to the electors of North Toronto he says;

"For some years, particularly the "past two, the conviction has been "steadily growing upon me that ex"treme partyism, at any rate in Pro"vincial politics, is neither desirable "nor wise, but, on the contrary, often "positively foolish and injurious."

We don't blame party politicians of either stripe for working for a party triumph; it is natural and to a certain extent right. But where in doing so they sacrifice important advantages, they are more loyal to their party than to their country.

GOOD ROADS

At the Good Roads Convention in Ottawa lately, Mr. James McEwen told how Wellington County secured its 180 miles of stone roads, what they cost and how they are maintained. Mr. A. F. Wood gave similar information concerning the 400 miles of stone roads in Hastings County. That is the sort of knowledge the inhabitants of counties still afflicted with toll roads require. The time is at hand for the general improvement of the wagon roads of Ontario, and the offer of Provincial aid to the project will stimulate action. A visitor to the convention from the United States, Hon. Martin Dodge, remarked that "it was strange that the two English-speaking people on this side of the Atlantic, who had made immense progress in other respects, should be so far behind in the matter of improving highways. Although there were three million miles of highways in the United States, not much more than 1 per cent. of that distance had been permanently improved. During the last quarter of a century, in the United States, attention had been devoted to the construction of railways rather than highways, and Canada was copying this example. This could not perhaps be deemed a mistake, but if it was thought necessary to diminish the cost of long distance transmission by building railways one-half the anticipated benefit would not be derived unless the railways were supplemented by wagon roads, so as to get the reduction of cost in the short as well as the long haul. The people in the United States were awakening to the importance of this question, and now that the transcontinental lines had been built and the country grid-ironed with railways, were devoting themselves to the improvement of the highways, so as to diminish the cost of transportation by horse and wagon. Hon. Mr. Dodge then described the methods adopted under the direction of the Washington Bureau for interesting the people in the good roads movement. These consisted of object lessons in road building, with the application of labor-saving machinery, and the distribution of literature."

Mr. Pattullo expressed the opinion that the railway corporations would be willing to pay a very large amount of taxation, if the proceeds of such taxation were devoted to improving the highways of the country, because they would get the benefit of the expenditure as well as the farmers. He also held out the hope that the Legislature would offer the municipalities more money assistance than has been already voted. Both of these suggestions, in our opinion, he might better have kept to himself, since both imply raising money for road building by indirect taxation, more costly to the farmers in the end than the direct method.

A MUNICIPAL TAX ON CATS

Every man who pays a dog tax in Ontario, and anyone who should do so but does not, will be pleased to learn that a bill has been introduced in the Massachusetts Legislature empowering municipalities to put a license on cats. That this was not done long ago is what must surprise dog-owners.

Every reason advanced for taxing dogs in this city can be urged with equal force in favor of taxing cats. If dogs howl, cats yowl. If there are stray dogs, of no use to anybody, similarly there are cats. If dogs are liable to rabies, so are cats, and they are known to be more dangerous as carriers of disease germs. But the chief offence of the cat is its crying in the night, together with the fact that it will climb any fence in order to get under your window. It has also a provoking agility in escaping when you open your window seeking to do it bodily harm. If you could ever hit one of them with anything, you could forgive the species.

Perhaps, if one seeks the reason for the discrimination at present existing against the dog, it is found in the fact that dogs used to kill sheep, and a tax was imposed on them to create a fund from which sheep-owners could be recompensed for such losses. Here we have no sheep, and the tax is imposed as a discouragement to dog-owning. Why should not cat-owning be discouraged also?

"Mayhap one."

A teacher in a Texas public school received the following letter the other day:—

"Sir,—Will you in the future give my son easier some to do at nites? This is what he brought hoam two or three nites back: 'If fore gallins of bere will fill thirty to pint bottles, how many pints and half bottles will nine gallins of bere fil?' Well, we tried and could make nothin' of it at all, and my boy cried and laughed and sed he didn't dare to go bak in the mornin' without doin' it. So I had to go and buy a nine-gallin keg of bere, which I could ill afford to do, and then he went and borrowed a lot of wine and brandy bottles. We fill them, and my boy put the number down for an answer. I don't know whether it is right or not, as we spilt some while doin' it. P.S.—Please let the next sum be in water, as I am not able to buy [illegible]."

The Undeserved Evil Repute of Paris.

An interesting discussion as to the public morals of Frenchmen and "Americans" has recently been started by Jules Cambon, the French ambassador to the United States, who made a trip home not long ago, and was so much impressed by what he saw in the Paris streets, during the summer season, that he felt constrained to make an earnest protest against what seemed to him bad tendencies. He complained of the marked increase in the absinthe habit, and of the growing quantity of indecent pictures and cartoons to be seen in the public streets. Senator Berenger, another prominent Frenchman, who is at the head of the Society for the Prevention of License in the Streets, promptly admitted the justice of M. Cambon's censure, and said that the police have of late put hardly any restrictions upon the exposure, in the central parts of Paris, of engravings and cards which offend decency. He declared that this evil is always at its worst during the summer months, and that its unusual prevalence at this season is because it "springs up especially to meet the average foreigner's conception of the gay capital." Thousands of foreigners go to Paris every year for a short vacation, he adds naively, "intent on having a good time, and declaring their intention so loudly that the city takes on a particular hue for their benefit." This view has been emphatically sustained by the pastor of a French Protestant church in Paris, who asserts that Anglo-Saxon visitors are the foreigners most to blame in this matter, and Americans the worst offenders of all. He contends that the keepers of kiosks where quantities of "lurid photographs" are sold told him that "Americans" are their best customers, purchasing handfuls of vicious papers and cards, which they distribute widely in their own country.

According to the New York "Evening Post," striking testimony to the truth of all this has just been furnished by a member of the United States Congress. Representative Gillett of the Springfield (Mass.) district, a man of high standing and proved independence, has been traveling for some weeks with Speaker Henderson of Iowa, in England and on the Continent. In a recent letter he remarked that the shops, the hotels, and, above all, the class of amusements which we call "Frenchy," and which "Americans" flock to Paris to see, seemed to him "artificial and made to order to meet the taste of American visitors." He frankly admitted that "it's no credit to us what they think our taste is," and bluntly declared that he had been "thoroughly disgusted to see not only American men, but ladies, too, trying to be amused by sights which they would think both stupid and low at home." He added that it seemed to him as though "quite a proportion of the Parisians were engaged in exhibiting as their natural life and recreations a pretence of high spirits and risky abandon which was all affected, a constant bore to the participants, and only interesting and endurable to strangers so long as they are deceived into believing it is the custom of the country." There is thus virtual agreement on the part of the French legislator, the United States congressman and the French clergyman that foreign visitors, and particularly "Americans" tourists, are giving Paris a worse reputation than it deserves—in fact, making the city worse in the summer months of their presence than it is during the rest of the year. The clergyman quoted clears the resident American colony of blame, pronouncing it exemplary, but he thinks it "impossible to deny that visiting Yankees do Paris far more harm than Paris does them."

Discretion Better Than Valor.

A New Yorker, the owner of a magnificent yacht, had for his guests on a recent trip three very clever young men, all of them suitors for the hand of his beautiful daughter. The young woman could not determine which she liked the best, they were equally good looking and equally eligible as to wealth and position.

"I tell you what I'd do, Miss, if I were you," he said. "The next time we are in a safe place you fall overboard. I will stand by to see that no harm comes to you, and then you can see which is the best man of the lot."

The plan was agreed to, and a day or two later the young woman slid off the plank into the water. In a second two of the young men were in after her and she was heroically rescued. As soon as possible the heroine sought the captain.

"What am I to do now?" she asked. "I have two of them still left."

"Well, I would say this," replied the captain. "If you want a good, sensible husband, you take the one that did not jump after you."

The Soda Fountain Clerk.

Consider now the meek and humble soda fountain clerk.

Who draweth off the moistened air with nimble turn and jerk.

For then he hath vanilla on the bosom of his vest, and streaks of red raspberry make his trousers seem a jest.

While chocolate and ginger give a tiger-like effect to the balance of the garments in which he's proudly decked.

His hair is limp and languid, and is parted square and true

Because he hath to linger in the acid and the ice, to fix up funny mixtures for the one that hath the price.

He maketh strange concoctions in the line of fancy drinks, and all the while he watcheth for persuasive sorts of winks.

From early morn he twisteth at the soda water spout, and turneth the ice-crusher till the ice hath given out.

He diggeth in the ice cream and he rusheth with the glass, while his deadly hated rival buys the soda for the lass.

Yea, verily, the soda clerk, he hath a sorry time, for he must know the way to get nine cents out of each dime.

And he must be a hustler, that there will not be a loss of ice or gas or water, or he'll tremble at the boss.

How often, oh, how often, doth a calm and peaceful smile go flitting o'er his visage when a drink goes out of style.

But ah, alas, my son, sometimes he feeleth very bad, and then is when the ladies come with garments rich and glad.

The ladies fill the rockers and the doorways and the stools, and insist upon a liquid that both elevates and cools.

And one declareth that she'd like some chocolate with cream, and when he draweth it, straightway "Oh no!" the maid doth scream.

And then she voweth that she hath already changed her mind, and wanteth just a phosphate with a piece of lemon rind.

And yet, again the other maids declare they do not know just what they wish—and on and on their mild objections flow.

The weary soda fountain clerk suggesteth this and that, from plain old lemon phosphate to a dose of anti-fat.

Now, when he draweth all the drinks, his troubles are not done—

Nay, verily, my trusting child, they are but half begun;

For each and every maiden there doth straightway rise and say:

"Now, girls, I'll think it's awful if you do not let me pay!"

And all protest, and all object, and all their plans defend,

And not a one takes out her purse her lovely cash to spend.

Now, finally, the soda clerk suggesteth that each maid shall pay for what she drank—and then beginneth the tirade.

For all the ladies vow in wrath—yea, yea, they almost sob—that they will his employer see, and take from him his job.

And then they take their parasols, and sternly go away, and not a cent of all that bill do they take steps to pay.

The gentle soda fountain clerk, he falleth in a daze, and leaneth on the vichy tube, and wicked things he says.

Is this not true, just as we have composed it, with much work?

It surely is—and if you doubt, go ask the soda clerk.—Baltimore "American."

The Restlessness of Women.

In the July "Cosmopolitan" Ella Wheeler Wilcox, with characteristic force and directness, deals with what she regards as a very serious and growing evil now prevalent among her sex in this country, at least among those who belong to the well-to-do and upper classes of society. She says:

"One who studies American womanhood with any care must be alarmed at the growing restlessness of the sex.

"My mountain of mail is often a volcano of seething unrest. It seems a relief to many women—women, doubtless, whom the world supposes to be happy wives and mothers—to write to one they believe to be sympathetic, of the discontent that surges in their hearts.

"To turn from these letters to a social function is to encounter the same elements in another form. Beneath jeweled corsages beat restless hearts; from under the flower-laden brims of the modish hats look unhappy eyes, gazing out into the world with longing for an indefinable something—a happiness imagined but unattained.

"While I believe the tendency of humanity is constantly upward toward a higher plane, it is an indisputable fact that this restlessness of woman is a giant evil, and one of serious growth."

Mrs. Wilcox says it is puzzling to trace this great wave of feminine restlessness to its source. She speaks of the present false standards of wealth, the desire for splendid social station, and for villas at the seaside and castles in Europe, but closes by saying that "after all, a lack of good, everyday common sense is at the bottom of" it all. While this restlessness is a baleful sign of the times, rendered all the more mischievous by the almost equal restlessness of men, it is comforting to reflect that there is a large—a very large—class of women who have and who use constantly good, everyday common sense. But of course they do not belong to that growing class of women who desire to lead in society, and who dream of villas, castles and foreign titles.

Beware of Danger.

Said the melancholy man: "Do you ever look back on your life and reflect on the opportunities you have missed?" "No, sir," answered the hustler. "It would be just my luck to miss some more while I was brooding over what can't be helped."—"Waverley Magazine."

The difference between the healthy, happy mother who has healthy children to nurse and nourish, and the weak, nervous mother, with a weakling child, is mostly a difference of preparation.

The great preparative for motherhood is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It tranquilizes the nerves, encourages the appetite and induces refreshing sleep. It gives the mother strength to give her child. It imparts elasticity and strength to the organs of maternity so that the baby's advent is practically painless.

"I take pleasure in writing you to let you know about your 'Favorite Prescription,'" says Mr. E. E. Fricke, of Petersburg, Menard Co., Ill., Box 367. "My wife had been sick nearly all her life, and after trying everything I could think of I made up my mind to try 'Favorite Prescription.' I sent to Chicago and got six bottles, which my wife took, a tablespoonful three times a day, until the baby came. She felt better after taking the first bottle, and when baby was born he weighed nine and a half pounds. To-day he is six months old and weighs twenty-two pounds. He is as good a child as any one could wish. The doctor says he is as healthy as any baby could be, and also the doctor says your 'Favorite Prescription' was the cause of such a healthy baby. I feel I owed you this much for the good you did my wife and myself. I hope you will mention this to others who may be in need of such help, and you may refer them to me, as I would be glad to tell of the good of such a valuable medicine."

Curious Bits of News.

A minister in a Kansas town recently adopted a novel scheme for bolstering up the church collection, which had been diminishing. He informed his congregation, just before the plates were passed around, that the members who were in debt were not expected to contribute. The collection that day was double the usual sum.

It really turns out that the population of France has increased three times more rapidly during the past five years than it did during the preceding five, and, consequently, the recent French census is regarded as unexpectedly favorable, notwithstanding that the rate of increase has been extremely low. It is important, if the decline has passed the deepest point of depression.

The oyster trade of England has fallen in ten years from an annual total of fifteen million dollars to two and one-half millions. Sewerage schemes carried out by town boards resulted in flooding the oyster beds with sewage, and several deaths ensued from eating poisonous oysters. The alarm became widespread, and the figures quoted show the disaster brought upon the trade.

It is evident that one of the popular superstitions had no hold on the designer of Uncle Sam's silver twenty-five-cent piece. In the words quarter-dollar are thirteen letters. Thirteen letters compose E Pluribus Unum. In the tail of the eagle are thirteen feathers, and in the shield are thirteen lines. There are thirteen stars and thirteen arrow-heads, while, if you examine the bird through a microscope, you will find thirteen feathers in its wing.

According to the Birmingham "Daily Gazette," an extraordinary character has just passed away in a Carmarthenshire gentleman named Evans. Mr. Evans devoted his life to witnessing hangings, making the acquaintance of executioners, and collecting relics of murderers. In the early days of public hangings he would travel any distance to see a man "turned off." He was so fascinated by the business that on the death of Calcraft he applied for his post. As this was not granted, he set up a gallows in his own house and invited his friends to test the noose.

Exploration, says "Science Siftings," has now revealed relics of Menes, the founder of Egyptian monarchy, fashioned more than sixty-five hundred years ago. Of Zer, the successor to Menes, it is astonishing to find the forearm of his queen still in its wrappings, with four splendid bracelets intact. This brilliant and exquisitely finished group of jewelry is two thousand years older than the jewelry of Dahshur, the oldest up to then known. The arm of the queen had been broken off by the first plunderers, and had lain hidden in a hole in the wall of the tomb.

Two curious cases of the use of the magnet in surgery are attracting some attention. Dr. Garel of Lyons, France, has drawn a nail about two inches long from the bronchial tube of a boy of eighteen months from Buenos Ayres. The nail had been there for some time, causing the child to cough much. Roentgen rays showed the position of it, and an electro-magnet drew it out. Another successful operation of the same kind has been performed by Dr. Pieshaud of Bordeaux, on a child of three years. In this case the trachea was opened to get a projection from the pole of the magnet near the nail.

Too Great a Risk.

"I'm going to give up the business," said a life insurance agent with a sigh, whom the Detroit "Free Press" encountered. "I don't care whether they want it for a joke or not. It's a hard life, and people have no business trying to be funny at my expense.

"I have always prided myself upon my ability to land a man when once I succeeded in getting his attention. But I had a new experience the other day. I was working hard to convince a party that it was his duty to take out some of our insurance upon his life for the protection of his family, and I saw that I had him wavering, when I had to pause for breath, and he broke in with:

"'By the way, how much do you carry on your life?'

"While I, taken unaware by the abruptness of the question, was stammering a reply, he escaped. The incident set me to thinking. I had induced hundreds of men to insure their lives for the benefit of their families, and yet I had never thought far enough to carry any insurance upon my own life. It didn't look consistent, now that I had come to consider the question, and I resolved to remedy it at once. To think is to act with me, and I sat down and filled out an application at once for a good round sum.

"I got the application back to-day marked, 'Refused—occupation too dangerous.' The next paper they get from me will be my resignation."

The "Fake" Element in Success.

It is well enough to prate about the beauties of absolute truth and sincerity, but there is no successful merit without a little "faking" to set it off; and "faking" without merit will prosper where merit without "faking" would starve. Barnum's declaration that the public loves to be humbugged is not flippancy, but a serious criticism of human nature. Apropos, an exchange relates the following:

"Here, Willie," said one of the foremost members of the bar, the other day, to his office boy, "spill a little red ink on this will." The boy took the document, which had been neatly typewritten and backed, and proceeded to rule red lines about the margin and across the indentations and spaces; underscored initial words in paragraphs and doubly underscored divers names and phrases; and then returned the paper to his employer.

"This red ink is a little bit of 'faking' one must do to please people," remarked the lawyer to a newspaperman who happened to be present. "Most clients won't believe that a will, a deed or a contract is valid unless there is red ink on it. Once I drew a will for a rich old man. I gave the matter much care and study and drafted the instrument briefly and in very simple language. I had it typewritten, but neglected to enliven the document with fancy designs in red. Really, I was proud of the simplicity and at the same time of the clearness of the draft. About a fortnight later another lawyer, a friend of mine, con-

Pierre-Marie, who was older than his companion and had been wrecked once before, was the first to come to himself again; he looked out upon the sea and I heard him mumble a savage oath. Then, as he took off his wet woollen jacket he caught sight of the laniard of his watch; this he drew from under his belt and held to his ear.

"H'm!" he exclaimed in surprise, "it has not stopped! That—" and he tapped it lightly with his finger—"that is a good watch!"

As soon as they were dressed in dry clothes and cheered a little by the hot wine, they were eager to know what had become of the boat. Pierre-Marie flushed purple when he heard that the pilot Alexandre had hastened to the place of the accident and had righted her.

With their knees still trembling, their hair stuck to their foreheads by the salt water and the sweat of their agony, their bodies shaken with suppressed sobs at the thought of the young companion they had lost, they climbed into the boat again and sailed away. They turned the Pointe des Poulains, passed the gay little port of Desborck on their way to the pretty little port of Bordery. The Gouenantin girl had to be notified. I kept to the land and arrived at the same time as the others. It was the fateful murmur of the crowd that warned the child.

She came out on the threshold of her door, upright in her black costume, her anxious little face flanked by the white wings of her coif. From afar she saw the peasants and the fishermen who were gathering together. They were pitying her. She could see it in their looks; she could hear it in their sorrowful words and the "Alas! alas!" that the wind brought her.

Driven by some unknown force, she ran towards the slope of the road that rose between her and those who were approaching. The child's face was pale and her eyes were wide with terror. When she saw the two fishermen returning alone, she understood at once what had happened. With a cry of anguish she ran back to the house calling out, "He is dead! he is dead!" to those within.

"He is dead! he is dead!" she cried to the pictures of the two departed parents. "He is dead! he is dead!"—and she threw herself down at the foot of the black cross fastened to the white wall. "He is dead! he is dead!" she murmured, choked with sobbing, as she crouched down, her head pressed against the wall and her arms stretched up to the image of Christ.

The fishermen and peasants, their hats in their hands, stood in silence outside the threshold, unable to find any words of consolation. I was among them, and, like them, was speechless.

fided to me as a joke that the man for whom I drew the will had gone to him with the document, expressed doubts whether so simple a will could be valid, and when assured that it was valid, had gone away unsatisfied. When the old man died a will was filed, bearing date a few weeks after that which I had drawn. The document was gorgeous in red embroidery and heavy with unnecessary technical phrases. Evidently the old man had had another will drafted that pleased his eye. It is some satisfaction to me to know that the court construed the ornamental will to mean what I knew to be the very contrary of the testator's intention. Since then I have not spared the red ink."

A Touch of Doggerel.

In the "North American Review" we find an interesting article by Dr. A. W. P. Martin on the poetry of the Chinese. The Celestial poets, like our own, are mainly minor. One of them addresses his lady-love in this wise:

Twin trees whose boughs together twine,
Two birds that guard one nest,
We'll soon be far asunder torn,
As [illegible] from the West.

Hearts knit in childhood's innocence,
Long bound in Hymen's ties,
One goes to distant battlefields,
One sits at home and sighs.

Like carrier dove, though seas divide,
I'll seek my lonely mate;
But if afar I find a grave,
You'll mourn my hapless fate.

A Queer Conventionality.

The royal English family is exceedingly domestic and affectionate; but there had developed among its members and the people connected with the court a strange surface dread of meeting the Queen, which was perfectly incomprehensible to outsiders. It was quite real on the part of her children, and was probably a remnant of their rather stern bringing up. The efforts they made to vanish into thin air when the Queen came upon them unawares were most ludicrous. From them the entourage caught the same spirit, which led to many amusing incidents. Says a writer in the "Century Magazine:" We were coming home from Whippingham Church, designed and built by Prince Albert, and where Princess Beatrice had been married the year before, when we suddenly came upon a royal group walking leisurely ahead toward Osborne Cottage. Naturally we slackened our pace, when, to our dismay, we saw looming up in the opposite direction certain white ponies and outriders. Caught between two fires, we paused a moment, took in the situation, and decided quickly that we had just time to scramble in safely before the Queen's carriage could draw up at the door. Seeing that the advance party had already turned into the vine-covered porch, we gave wings to our heels and bolted in, too, and there suddenly came upon the whole company saying good-bye to one another, nearly knocking them over in our mad haste. Prince —— and H.R.H. the —— of ——, seeing our breathless condition, and at the same time hearing horses' hoofs approaching, quickly guessed what the frightful danger was and left their conversation unfinished, having in common with us only one idea, that of getting out of the Queen's sight at once." Poor people or perfect strangers the Queen never minded seeing at all. It was only those whom she knew about that she did not care to encounter, as it would put her in the awkward position of being discourteous and passing them by, or else force her to stop and talk with them, when she felt disinclined to do so. Hence, out of deference to the Queen's supposed feelings, arose the etiquette prescribing that one must never be seen on her path. This grew into a stereotyped rule.

Wisdom From the Orient.

Taking Chinese proverbs as they are found in the literature of that nation, they contain many gems of wisdom that cannot be claimed by any Western people.

A peculiar proverb exposing the works of Chinese idolatry runs as follows: "A maker of graven images does not worship the gods; he knows what they are made of." Speaking thus in regard to his make-believe gods, the Chinaman disposes of his real divinities in a manner equally quaint. The saying is attributed to Confucius: "Respect the gods, but keep them at a distance." Some of the proverbs of Cathay are remarkable for their insight. For instance, the following is by no means shallow: "The man of first-rate excellence is virtuous independent of instruction; he of the middling class becomes so after instruction. The lowest order of man is vicious in spite of instruction." Here, too, is a truth which carries far in a work-a-day world: "A single conversation across the table with a wise man is better than ten years' mere study of books." Again, the following is an example of much that might almost have been made to Socrates' order: "When the work of merit is done and reputation is coming, to get out of the way is the high road to Heaven." And, setting aside the wisdom of the wise, we find the last commentary of the pessimistic Chinaman on things in general in the following concise form: "For every soul that Heaven creates Earth provides a grave."

"L'Ouvrage."

The god of heart's desire, ignored, doth wait,
Whilst sated Wealth within the palace gate
Lures dreamless sleep in vain, and 'waits his fate.

Whilst he (to whom this god's an unloved guest),
His brawn would barter, and his hungry nest,
For Wealth's soft, silken pillows of unrest.

"Splendid and terrible, the wage I deal;
To some, a curse, for others, balm to heal:
To-day, I hide; to-morrow, I reveal."
—Richard Sereno.

A Novel Enterprise.

"Harper's Bazar" states that a young woman in a Western city is adding very appreciably to an otherwise moderate income by making sandwiches. As usual with these nondescript businesses, the occupation came by chance. It fell to her lot once or twice to furnish sandwiches as her contribution to one or two fairs and festivals, and their excellence aroused comment. Then friends coaxed her into sandwich service now and then, till at last she took advantage of her evident specialty and became a professional at it. Many of her combinations are original, one of the moment being chopped pineapple mixed with a delicate cream cheese, the variety that is made from whipped cream. She does all the work herself, even to the designing of attractive little cards decorated with a seasonable flower upon which she prints in dainty script her assortment with prices. The success of her work undoubtedly lies in the limitation which she puts upon it—she will take no more orders than she can fill herself, and each sandwich which leaves her hand is as perfect as if it were the only one. She finds a demand for her products throughout the year, picnic sandwiches being one of her most frequent orders.

Mrs. Pretty—Isn't it strange? Mrs. Beauti has not put on mourning for her husband. Mrs. Pretty—I understand that her late husband particularly requested that she should not. Mrs. Pretty—The brute! I s'pose he knew how lovely she would look in it.—[illegible]

The Actor's Summer.

This is the time of year, writes Alan Dale, the well-known New York dramatic critic, when I fretfully and enviously, read the reports of the actor's summer. These reports are always gorgeously and artistically arranged. They are calculated to make any poor breadwinner repine. At the close of his "season," after having led a gilded butterfly life, with the plaudits of enthusiastic millions ringing in his ears, tired out with all this rapturous approval, and with just strength enough to gather in the colossal mound of shekels that have been showered at him—the actor goes to his "summer home" to live for three dreamy, wistful, sweetly inactive months, until the hungry public calls him back again.

They are all most anxious for us to know how they summer. If there were a commandment saying, "Thou shalt not covet thy actor's summer," I should break it hopelessly. I always regret my fate when these beautiful, rosy reports come in. Why should the actors alone possess the magician's wand that transforms a three-room flat in Harlem to a "mansion overlooking the Hudson," or a six-dollar-a-week boarding-house in Asbury Park to a "summer home by the Atlantic?" Why should the fairy gift of metamorphosing a Bloomsbury furnished room into a palatial hotel be exclusively confined to the actor?

Some of the profession are much better actors during their summer than they are during their thirty weeks of labor. How often has my riotous soul oozed in a frenzy of covetous discontent as I have watched the stalwart leading man on Broadway, hale, bronzed and picturesquely attired in tennis clothes, who has just rushed in for a day to see his banker! The magic wand and a little brown grease paint have, perhaps, done it all. He has walked down from East One Hundred and Seventy-fifth street, where his wife and seven children are spending the summer and the winter. But I don't know it, at the time, and in the actor's column headed "In Summer Places" I have read that he was wooing inertia and recuperating after an ardent season.

They all act these press agent parts so efficiently. They summer only because it is absolutely necessary for their health. They are always on the verge of nervous prostration, owing to the strain of "one-night stands." If they have been in New York all season, it is owing to the strain of New York. Managers are after them to play all summer. No company on earth has ever been known to close for any other reason than weariness. The actors summer because they can't work any longer. It is because the actors summer that the public goes to the seaside and the mountains. If the actors did not get so awfully tired the season would go right on revolving, without beginning or end, like a circle. It is in desperation because the actors won't let us go to the theaters any more that we say, "The season is over. Let us go out of town until Romeo and Juliet have recuperated."

How different it is in other walks of life! We snatch a scanty two weeks from the interminable fifty-two—and we are never missed. Nobody cares a hang whether we come back or whether we do not. Our goose is never a swan. Lucky actor! Thrice fortunate summerer! He never discovers—as, alas! we do—that the beautiful retreat, with fruit and shade trees, is a hideous barn with the shade furnished by hanging out clothes; that the adorable farmhouse with fresh milk and unequalled eggs is a fraud, and that the only glimpse of the fresh milk and unequalled eggs is caught as they are sent to the city; that the exquisite summer hotel is ugly with the cackling, tiresome gossipers of adjacent towns. Lucky actor! Thrice fortunate summerer! I envy you.

The First Firecracker.

There lived in China, years ago,
An odd old mandarin,
Whose temper was so peppery
They called him Sin-ah-sin.

He wandered through the crowded streets
In search of daily bread,
And wore a garment long and straight,
Which once was brightest red.

But worn in all the dust and rain,
In dampness and in dew,
It stiffened slowly with the grime,
And turned a dingy hue;

And like a cylinder became,
So long, and straight, and round,
It wrapped Ah-sin from head to heels,
And in it he seemed bound.

And out upon the collar high
His yellow queue hung down,
Till nothing of that mandarin
Was seen, but just his crown.

This robe so heavy did become,
That he could scarcely walk,
And o'er the top of it he tried
In vain, alas! to talk.

The boys they chaffed, and taunted him,
And missiles at him cast,
And called him shabby Sin-ah-sin,
As he went dragging past.

Though Ah-sin's blood did often boil
At cruel jest and jeer,
The while he wore that rigid coat
The lads had ne'er a fear.

And so, one pleasant July day,
The gamins round Ah-sin
Said, "Let us have a little fun
With this old mandarin."

And stepping up applied a torch
To Ah-sin's precious queue,
When flashing forth a brilliant light,
They heard a noise, and whew!—

They saw Ah-sin, from out their sight
Go up in flame and smoke,
While o'er their heads, in tiny bits,
Flew pieces of his cloak.

With pent-up wrath he did explode,
That poor old mandarin,
And far from coats, and canes, and boys,
Went grimy Sin-ah-sin.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,
Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

Together they sat down on a mossy log beside the murmuring brook, and, as he turned his face toward her in the moonlight, Daisy was startled to see how white and haggard it was.

"I have so much to say to you, Lily, that I hardly know how to begin," he said at length. "On your yes or no tonight depends my whole future. My life, my well or evil doing, all depend on what you shall say to me tonight."

Daisy looked up anxiously at him.

"I do not understand," she said, simply. "You— you— frighten me, Mr.— Mr.— Harold."

He was silent for a moment, and she guessed rather than knew that some great struggle was going on in his mind.

"Lily!" he cried. "I am obliged to leave here suddenly. I ought to be away from here now, but I could not leave you— I could not!"

"Perhaps you may come back some time— soon," she answered, faintly.

A curious shudder passed over his dark, handsome face.

"I would come back if the prayer of my heart was answered tonight," he said, hoarsely. "You must not be startled when I tell you what it is."

She laughed a gay, rippling laugh, to see how earnest he was; but the smile died from her lips when she saw his face grow even whiter.

He drew nearer to her, pausing as though to collect his strength for a desperate effort.

"Lily," he said, "marry me, and come with me; it is my only salvation —my only hope."

Daisy drew back quite frightened.

"Marry you," she repeated, with colorless cheeks, "oh, I cannot— that would be quite impossible. I am frightened at the very word. Every one has always said: 'Never think of marrying until you are twenty;' and I am not seventeen, you know. I would not marry any one and leave home with him for the world."

"Marry me, and remain here for a year, if you will, and I will return for you," he urged. "Let me feel sure that you are bound to me so firmly that no one could take you from me. Mine is the prayer of a desperate man. Let your own heart plead for me."

"No, no, you must not ask me," cried Daisy, sobbingly.

But love has an eloquence all its own— what maiden can steel her heart in youth's spring-time against an eager lover's wooing. And then there was no argument possible that he did not use.

And while he pleaded, painting in glowing words what their future would be like, a strange idea had occurred to Daisy— what a glorious revenge it would be upon Hetty and Olive for leaving her here in the dreary old farmhouse for two long weeks, to come home and find her married— yes, actually married— she, the little willful romp of the family, married before either one of her elder sisters, and to a handsome young husband who fairly adored her.

Daisy's eyes sparkled with amusement; yes, indeed, it would certainly be a glorious revenge upon arch Olive and impertinent Hetty. The seriousness and solemnity of marriage never once entered her pretty head.

Poor Daisy, she was so young—she did not realize the importance of such a step, and too guileless to know that marriage without the consent of those who were nearest and dearest to her should never have been thought of for a single moment.

"Lily," cried her lover, "you are so silent that I begin to fear that—— Will you marry me, or will you send me away to destruction and death?"

His passionate words alarmed her. Ah, how much he must love her to say that he would surely go to destruction if he lost her. That was indeed love.

An hour later they were standing in the dim old church.

The wind seemed to sob outside, and the leaves of the trees that tossed their branches against the window-pane seemed to quiver like lost spirits in distress.

To Daisy it seemed like a strange, weird dream.

The feeble old minister looked in wonder at the pair before him—the girl so young and exquisitely lovely, the man so handsome but ill at ease. The bridegroom knew that it was the cruelest thing he could do to link this fair young life to his own dark, checkered one; but he did not spare her, and the fatal ceremony which was to bind these two lives together until God set one or the other free went on to the end.

Daisy noticed, too, in wonder that the minister, all through the ceremony, had addressed her as Lillian Ruthven, instead of her own name, Daisy Gordon; but then the minister —an evangelical preacher —was a stranger in the neighborhood—he did not know her.

It was not until she was standing alone with Harold St. John out in the moonlight that she fully realized what she had done, and a strange, deadly chill swept over her.

"Lillian, my darling, my bride," he was murmuring.

Permanent Cures of Cancer

We here give a few cases, where the efficacy of our constitutional treatment in curing Cancer is established beyond all question. We have plenty on fyle.

There is ample proof that where our remedy cures, it cures to stay and saves people from the torture of knife and plaster.

CANCER OF THE BREAST—A lady had Cancer of the Breast, which rendered her right shoulder and arm almost helpless. Our remedy cured her over five years ago, and there is not the slightest return of the trouble.

CANCER OF THE FACE—This case of a gentleman who was so bad that his right cheek was almost eaten off with the disease. Plasters aggravated his trouble. Our treatment cured him five years ago and he has been all right since.

CANCER OF THE STOMACH—Doctors pronounced the trouble cancer of the stomach. There was vomiting of material that looked like coffee grounds. Great weakness and prostration. Cured over four years ago and well to-day.

CANCER OF THE NOSE—A severe case which was cured by our remedy in 1891 and has never returned to this day.

Full accounts of the above cases, together with the names and addresses of the persons, are given in our new book, "Cancer, its cause and Cure," sent to anyone, in plain wrapper, on receipt of two stamps. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

A Coming Musical Treat

The citizens of town who are lovers of high-class music will be delighted to learn that Mrs. W. J. Morrow has decided to give another of her splendid musical entertainments in the Opera House on the evening of Monday, May 5th. Mrs. Morrow will be assisted by talent from Toronto, and her class of upwards of 25 pupils. The details have not been fully arranged but this will undoubtedly be one of the best musical efforts put forth in Peterborough. Further details will be announced later.

Wedded in Hamilton

The following item appeared in a Hamilton paper, and refers to an old Peterborough boy:—"The announcement is made to-day of the marriage at Toronto of Miss Florence Baugh, daughter of Dr. Baugh, to W. A. Tebb, manager of the local branch of the Semi-Ready Clothing company. The news of the wedding will surprise some of the friends of the contracting parties, but on their return from their honeymoon they will receive many congratulations, as the bride and groom are very popular. The wedding was a quiet affair, Cupid having kept it a secret."

FOUND GUILTY

Fred Cousins, Who was Charged with Setting Fire to a House in Ashburnham

In the County Judges Criminal Court yesterday morning, before His Honour, Judge Ketchum, Fred. Cousins was found guilty of setting fire to a house on Robinson Street, Ashburnham, last month. Sentence was not passed on the prisoner as he is to be examined by two physicians as to his sanity as it is alleged by some of his friends that he is not in his right mind. After receiving the report of the physicians Judge Ketchum will pass sentence according to the report. The prisoner was represented by Barrister Morden, of Belleville.

LETTER FROM TOM MILLER

Mrs. F. W. Miller Received Word from Her Son, Tom, in South Africa

The following short letter has been received from Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Miller, from their Son Tom, who is serving in South Africa.

Bloemfontein, Feb. 22, 1902.

Dear mother,—I received your welcome letter to-day, and was very pleased to hear from you.

There is not much chance of us coming back for the coronation. We received a new draught of 300 men a short time back, so that don't look much like going home, does it? There are two of our companies on the march again, but I don't think my company will have any more of it to do. Well, dear mother, I don't know of any more to say this time so hoping to hear from you again, I remain, your loving son, Tom.

In a previous letter Tom states that his company is engaged five days in the week in bringing Boer prisoners from Bloemfontein to Elmfontein, a work he does not care for.

THE NEW SKATING RINK

Messrs. Kelis and Knapman Appointed to Solicit Subscriptions

A very representative meeting of those interested in the new skating and hockey rink was held in the offices of Messrs. Hatton and Bradburn last night. The chairman, Mayor Denne announced that already about $2800.00 had been subscribed. Subscriptions were coming in fast and in a short time the amount will be fully subscribed. It was decided not to start the construction of the building until at least $4,000 was subscribed.

Messrs. Kelis and Knapman were appointed promoters to secure subscriptions for stock.

A prospectus will be drawn up and published in the course of a few days which will give valuable information regarding the organization of the company.

THE NEW WOMAN

Made Over By Quitting Coffee

Coffee probably wrecks a greater percentage of Southerners than Northern people, for Southerners use it more freely.

The work it does is distressing enough in some instances; as an illustration, Miss Sue W. Farrall, 517 N. 4th St., Richmond, Va., writes, "I was a coffee drinker for years and for about six years my health was completely shattered. I suffered fearfully with headaches and nervousness and palpitation of the heart and loss of appetite.

My sight gradually began to fail and finally I lost the sight of one eye altogether. The eye was operated upon and the sight partially restored, then I became totally blind in the other eye.

My doctor used to urge me to give up coffee, but I was wilful and continued to drink it until finally in a last case of severe illness the doctor insisted that I must give up the coffee so I began using the Postum Food Coffee and in a month I felt like a new creature.

I steadily gained in health and strength. About a month ago I began using Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food and the effect has been wonderful. I really feel like a new woman, and have gained about 25 pounds.

I am quite an elderly lady and before using Postum and Grape-Nuts I could not walk a square without exceeding fatigue, now I walk ten or twelve without feeling it. Formerly in reading I could remember but little but now my memory holds fast what I read.

Several friends who have seen the remarkable effects of Postum and Grape-Nuts on me have urged that I give the facts to the public for the sake of suffering humanity, so, although I dislike publicity, you can publish this letter and my name if you like."

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE GOLF CLUB

MR. PETER CAMPBELL ELECTED HONORARY PRESIDENT AND MR. J. CRANE PRESIDENT

The Club is a Prosperous Condition—Will Seek Incorporation — Permanent Ground for Links

In our issue of yesterday, we were unable to give our readers a full report of the Peterborough Golf Club meeting which was held on Monday evening.

The first duty of the evening was to select a chairman, which duty was admirably preformed by Mr. Peter Campbell.

The first report presented was that of the Secretary Treasurer which showed that the work of that department had been carefully done and that the finances were in very good condition.

The report of the House was presented and showed that the expenditure of that branch had amounted to $24.50. As the committee will have 36 lockers to rent, and as there was no expense connected to the same they should have ample funds for their requirements.

With regard to the property on which the links are situated, Mr. Dennistoun stated they they belonged to one of his clients who was willing to give the club a lease of the grounds with an option to purchase the same

Mr. Neil, moved, seconded by Mr. Walker, that the Executive Committee take a lease of the property, and that the club be incorporated, and that the club agrees, in the event of purchasing, they do so for sporting purposes and not for speculation,—Carried.

Considerable discussion ensued as to the choosing of the teams and the matter of drawing up certain by-laws was referred to the executive.

The question of the annual fees was then taken up and it was decided that the annual fee should be $7.00 and that all members who enter after July 1st shall pay an additional $2.00. The annual meeting hereafter will be held on the first Friday in March.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The following officers were elected:

Hon. Pres.,—Mr. Peter Campbell.
President,—Mr. John Crane.
Captain,—Mr. H. D. Burnett.
Sec.-Treas.,—Mr. C. H. Bradburn.
Greens Committee,—Messrs. Neil, Hamilton, McGill, Stratton, Dr. Greer.
House Committee,—Messrs. Dennistoun, Walker and Dr. Eastwood.
Auditors,—Messrs. Campbell and Crane.

The meeting was then adjourned.

The meeting indicated prospects for a most successful season.

Items of Interest

Rome, March 25.—A military expedition is being fitted out at Naples and other ports for the supposed purpose of attacking Tripoli. Two large transports have been chartered, each capable of carrying thousands of soldiers, and the War Department is unusually active. A large amount of ammunition is stored in the arsenals, and no leaves of absence are being granted in the army.

Toronto, March 25.—The importance of good scouting to an army in time of war was admirably set forth by Lt.-Col. Read, commandant of the Royal Military College, in a lecture on "Information and Intelligence in War," delivered in the messroom at the Armories before a good-sized audience on Saturday evening. Incidentally, it was pointed out that the British army had learned something from the present war in South Africa, as the intelligence department was not as efficient at the beginning of the war as it might have been or had since become.

Col. Buchan was chairman, and proved particularly well qualified to introduce the lecturer, having been associated with him in the South African campaign, in field manoeuvres in England, and at the R.M.C. in Kingston, to which Col. Read is attached.

As handled by the speaker the lecture proved highly instructive. The first point to be emphasized was he said, the importance of obtaining as much information in peace times of an enemy's strength and plans as possible, because this was very difficult, almost impossible to obtain during war. The Nile expedition, the Ashanti campaign, and the Soudan expedition of 1896 were cited and excellent examples of how the intelligence department may contribute to the success of an army. It was pointed out that this department had not been as efficient in the early stages of the present South African war as it might have been, but had since been highly developed.

DOGS DOING GOOD WORK.

Some of the best known methods of obtaining information were referred to, such as the work of Scouts and special agents, dogs, the use of balloons, etc. The value of good scouting could not be overestimated, and instances were given of notable work by scouts, including Burnham and others, during the present war. More than one general had lamented the loss of a good scout as equal to the loss of a brigade.

Considerable attention, he said, was paid to the training of scouts in the Russian army. A certain number of men were detailed from each regiment for this purpose, and were specially trained how to observe and take notes unobserved, and how to make a clear and concise report of what they had seen or heard. An instance of how valuable to an army is reliable information was quoted regarding the South African war. In one instance at least, the army had been enabled to administer a severe defeat to the enemy by reason of the information conveyed by a civilian who had displayed no little intelligence and courage in obtaining it.

Dogs were now coming into use more than ever, especially in European armies, and had proved useful as sentries, and in carrying despatches.

Speaking of balloons, the lecturer said the Italians claimed—and he emphasized the "claim"— to have taken a good photograph from a balloon at a distance of 15 miles from the object photographed.

Those having weak or imperfect eyes should not fail to consult him.

PETERBORO SPRING ASSIZES

PRESENTMENT OF THE GRAND JURY HANDED IN YESTERDAY

The Suit Between Card vs. the Dickson Company Settled—Wasson vs. Douglas Heard in the Afternoon.

At the session yesterday of the Spring Assizes, now in progress before the Hon. Mr. Justice Lount, the case of Card vs Dickson Company was resumed. A settlement had been effected between the parties.

The following was the report of the Grand Jury, which was handed in yesterday morning:

The Hon. Mr. Justice Lount,—

May it please your Lordship, the Grand Jurors beg leave to present their report as follows:

In the first place we have to offer congratulations on the absence of crime in this county, as shown by the fact that there was no criminal business to demand our attention at the present assizes, and we are sure you will join in the congratulations upon a fortunate condition, which perhaps indicates a higher tone of popular morality, conjoined doubtless with an abundance of employment, which has a tendency to lessen the temptation to the more petty criminal offences.

Your Grand Jurors have visited and carefully inspected the jail and jail premises, and found everything well kept and in proper order. But your Jurors regret to note among the inmates, some persons for whom a jail is not a proper place of confinement. These include one insane person, an invalid, suffering, it is said, from paralysis, and a young woman recovering, or rather, not satisfactorily recovering, from confinement in child birth. These two latter cases are more fit for hospital treatment than for confinement as criminals in a jail, and your Jurors would recommend that immediate steps be taken to provide care for those unfortunate persons.

In this connection your Jurors desire to heartily agree with your suggestion as to a House of Refuge. Time after time Grand Jurors have urged this matter, but so far the town and county authorities have failed to unite on any basis of agreement, looking to the provision of so necessary an institution as a House of Refuge.

Your Jurors also visited the Nicholls Hospital, the St. Joseph's Hospital, the House of Providence, and the Protestant Home. All these institutions were found in apparently good condition, sanitary and otherwise, and the several staffs seemed to be doing their work faithfully. At the Nicholls Hospital, it was found that several improvements in the internal arrangements of the building have been made. There exists, however, one serious want, which we would recommend should receive attention. There should it seems to us, be provided an isolation ward or wing for the reception and treatment of infectious diseases. Such provision, we believe, does not exist at either hospital, and as a ward or wing of the kind named is necessary for giving the best treatment, we would be glad to have your Lordship's approval of our suggestion that such a necessary adjunct should be provided as soon as practicable.

You Jurors also visited the Children's Shelter, maintained under the auspices of the Children's Aid Society, and found everything in a very satisfactory condition. The children seemed to be well cared for in every way.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

On behalf of the Grand Jurors.

J. J. McBain,
Foreman.

Grand Jury Room, Peterborough, March 25th, 1902.

The case of Wasson vs. Douglas was next called.

This case arises out of the alleged changing the course of a stream of water known as the Indian River, near the village of Warsaw. The case was tried a year ago and was carried to the Division Court, where a new trial was ordered.

The case occupied the attention of the court all afternoon. An adjournment was made at 6.30 for lunch. The court again resumed its sitting at 8 o'clock, and was not concluded last night, there being a large amount of evidence on each side.

A BOY'S LIFE SAVED!

A Gratefully Mother Writes About the Rescue of Her Child

Paine's Celery Compound

Triumphed After a Physicians Failure

Mrs. G. Stone, of Eganville, Ont., grateful for the rescue of her little boy from death, writes as follows:

"I think it my duty to inform you of what Paine's Celery Compound has done for my little boy. He became very ill, and had the attendance of our physician, but no good results were apparent. The dangerous turns to which my boy was subject became more frequent and always worse in winter. He would become pale as death, feet and hands icy cold, and vomiting always followed. He seemed to be powerless, and for days could not lift his head from the pillow. After trying various kinds of medicine we decided to get Paine's Celery Compound for him. One bottle made him well, and since that time he has not been ill. I have every reason to believe he is permanently cured."

In face of such testimony, who can deny the fact that Paine's Celery Compound saves life? Hundreds of such letters as Mrs. Stone's are on fyle for the inspection of doubters.

When your children are nervous, fretful, despondent, sleepless, weak, rundown, have loss of appetite, slow circulation of blood, and decreasing in weight, give them Paine's Celery Compound for a week or two, and note well the cheering results in returning health and vigor. We strongly urge the immediate use of the great medicine for all sickly and weak boys and girls.

ENGLAND IS CENSURED IN THE U. S. CONGRESS

Congressman Foster, Gives a Sensational Address in Congress.

BOTH POWERS ARE SEEKING TO CRUSH SMALLER NATIONS

He Says the United States is as Tyrannical as Great Britain

Washington, March 26 — Representative George P. Foster of Chicago delivered a stirring speech this afternoon upon the attitude of this administration toward the Boers in South Africa. Mr. Foster used as the text of his address a pamphlet which he received from the Transvaal League of Chicago setting forth that numerous treaties, including one which the United States made with France in 1778, declared horses and their furniture to be contraband of war. The treaty of Washington between Great Britain and the United States, which was signed in 1870 was quoted in the pamphlet as prohibiting the augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men by belligerent powers. Mr. Foster said in part:

"Throughout the discussion of Philippine matters in this House at this session on both sides of the question one point has been unmistakably evident and admitted on all sides, and that is that we are in the Philippines and are exercising control of them on the principle that might makes right and are governing them not because the people want us to do so, but because we have the power to do so.

"That may be the reason, Mr. Chairman, why in this congress and in the last congress, the chairman on foreign affairs has never deigned to make a report on any of the various bills or joint resolutions referred to it protesting against the continuance of the Boer war and expressing sympathy with the Boers.

The reason is that since the adoption of our present Philippine policy we are in the same position as Great Britain. Both countries are tarred with the same stick. Both are endeavoring to crush the independence out of smaller and less powerful people.

"But however it may be, with the Government or with the Republican party, the people of the United States have a right to protest and they will protest, and I hope the Democratic party, through its members here assembled, will protest against the great wrong done to humanity and the cause of human freedom and progress by Great Britain and in its treatment of the South African Republic and against the unworthy manner in which this subject has been treated by the political party at present dominant in this country.

"The leaders of the majority party are only too ready to appoint a committee to go over from this country at the national expense in knee breeches and powdered hair to bow the knee of republicanism at the coronation of an English king, but they have not a word to say in behalf of the poor people of South Africa whom that same king is trying to shoot out of their homes and whose territory and property he is trying to rob simply in order that some few English speculators and adventurers may get [illegible] of the gold fields of the Boers and appropriate them to their own [illegible] profit. For this base, self[illegible] Great Britain is making [illegible] cruel and unjust as history [illegible] recorded. [illegible] this country favor [illegible] allow her to [illegible] base of supplies to aid [illegible] unchampioned assault upon the [illegible] liberties of the Boer people [illegible] rights [illegible]

"The inconsistency of our course will be manifest [illegible] when it is remembered how [illegible] caused to be arrested and [illegible] to formal [illegible] man who sought to [illegible] the Cubans [illegible] Cuba during the [illegible] we considered it a violation [illegible] neutrality. And how strictly [illegible] between Great Britain and [illegible] States was enforced and [illegible] by England and this country [illegible] respect to neutrality stipulations [illegible] the Spanish war.

"But at that time, Spain [illegible] of her barbarities and cruelties [illegible] to have had some rights [illegible] nation, but now the poor Boers [illegible] only crime is a love of liberty [illegible] a determination to defend their [illegible] their property and their [illegible] ignored by this great republic [illegible] no rights which a [illegible] men are bound to respect."

Mr. Cochran, of Missouri [illegible] the failure [illegible] the sympathy [illegible] South Africa [illegible] his resolution [illegible] to [illegible] President [illegible] republic [illegible] which, he [illegible] by the [illegible] had [illegible] majority.

While [illegible] was speaking, an elderly lady in the gallery with pro-British tendencies frequently shook her fist at the gentleman from Missouri, and at one time became so violent in her demonstration of disapproval that one of the doorkeepers was obliged to admonish her to keep quiet.

CECIL RHODES DIED IN CAPE TOWN

On Wednesday at the Age of 49 Years

HIS WORK IN SOUTH AFRICA

Keeping of Bechuanaland in the Hands of the British from the Boers Considered His Greatest Achievement

Cape Town, March 26. — Cecil Rhodes died to-day.

Right Honorable Cecil Rhodes was born in 1853. He was the fourth son of the late Rev. Francis W. Rhodes, Vicar of Bishop Stratford. Mr. Rhodes entered Oriel College, Oxford, in 1873.

Mr. Rhodes was the originator of the Cape Town scheme; he considered the keeping of Bechuanaland in British hands to the exclusion of the Boers, his greatest achievement. His idea was "The United States of Africa," although he insisted upon the imperial keystone to the arch. He was an ardent Briton.

DIED PEACEFULLY.

Cape Town, March 26.— Mr. Rhodes died peacefully at 4.57 p.m. He slept during the afternoon, but his breathing became more difficult and his strength perceptibly diminished until he passed away.

COMPLETELY BROKEN DOWN.

London, March 26. — The death of Cecil Rhodes came as no great surprise to those few who saw anything of him during his last visit to London during the winter. Whether it was due to his experiences during the long siege of Kimberley or the accumulated anxieties regarding the war in South Africa, with an accompanying change of public feeling in England towards him, there is no doubt he was almost completely broken down within the last two years. Even his appearance changed. His once finely chiselled face had become bloated, and his always huge frame filled out until the colossus became so stout as to make walking a matter of difficulty. He was frequently attacked with severe heart troubles, during which he exhibited the stoicism which marked his extraordinary career. Nor did he allow bodily ailments to interfere with business. Among his associates in the city he never mentioned them, nor did he permit them to be mentioned to him. Up to the last Mr. Rhodes kept a firm grip on all those vast South African interests created and controlled by him. Except that he was more irritable and more dictatorial, there was no noticeable change in his character. He was never contented to stay long in one place. His closing days devolved into an increasing, purposeless quest of change of [illegible]ne. During his recent trip to Egypt [illegible]is was particularly noticeable. He [illegible]hed from place to place, as if with [illegible] only object of upsetting his own [illegible]s. Then he suddenly returned to England.

Financially, Mr. Rhodes' death is not likely to have any far-reaching results, as all his enterprises were systematized so thoroughly as not to need the master mind which was so necessary to their inception.

Thanks to the very great success of the De Beers mines, the British Chartered South African Company and other great South African ventures, Rhodes' fortune had been steadily accumulating. He lost money over the war, but what inroads that made must have been trifling compared with the many millions he possessed. He never lost his open-handed, somewhat reckless, methods of handling money. Not long ago he walked into the office of one of his confidential subordinates, and throwing down a bundle of notes, bonds, etc., said: "Invest those for me," and went out without waiting to have them looked at. Inspection revealed the fact that they amounted to over a million pounds sterling.

How they were invested Mr. Rhodes never knew, or cared, for months later, as that night he went off on one of his wandering tours and refused to allow himself to be bothered with the details of the investment of his million until he returned to England.

No outward change in the method of handling men, millions and empires. Toward the social side of life, however, he soured visibly. Once his day's work at the offices of the British Chartered South African Company was over, he shut himself up from the curious in an unfrequented London hotel, where he utterly denied himself to all except to half a dozen favorite intimates. Dr. Jameson was his constant companion. Indeed some of Dr. Jameson's indiscretions resulting between the two men. They could be seen in the park in the morning taking solitary rides on horseback, never breaking out from a walk the cynosure of all eyes, yet severely unobservant of the hundreds of London's political and social leaders who had the right to a bowing acquaintanceship. More especially did Mr. Rhodes shun the present Government leaders.

BRITISH ARMY METHODS.

He bitterly expressed his contempt of British army methods in South Africa, and probably never quite forgave Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Milner for not consulting him or endeavoring to utilize the powerful financial-political machine which Mr. Rhodes undoubtedly manipulated over the whole of South Africa. With increasing irascibility, which he did not hesitate to vent on duke or plebian who crossed his path, he grew more and more restless as the end of his life drew near.

THE NEWS IN LONDON;

London, March 26.— The news of Mr Rhodes' death reached London too late to excite comment either on the stock exchange or in the afternoon newspapers. The bulletin announcing his death (which was sent from Cape Town at 4.57 p.m.) reached the newspaper offices just as the final editions were going to press.

Throgmorton street was deserted when the news arrived, so there was not even a flutter in the curb market. The "tickers" soon disseminated the news in the clubs and hotels, where it formed the main topic of conversation.

QUIRK'S MURDER A DEEP MYSTERY

It is Thought a Victim of His Foot Race Methods May be Guilty

HIS LIFE WAS THREATENED.

Detectives are Puzzled Over How He Came to Visit the Stables Alone so Late at Night.

Brantford, March 27. — The remains of James Quirk, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, were interred this afternoon. There was a large crowd at the funeral services, and scores of vehicles followed the hearse.

The report of the doctors who performed the autopsy leaves no room to doubt foul play. They found four separate wounds upon Quirk's head—one the result of the tumble from the ladder, the other three undoubtedly inflicted by an instrument resembling a narrow-bladed hatchet.

The three clean wounds are on the top and back of the head, and are all about two and a half inches in length. One, apparently the first delivered, exposed the brain and fractured the skull in all directions. The others were not delivered with the same force, but both also penetrated the skull. There is no doubt that all three were delivered from the rear of the victim, and the direction they all take inclined the physician to the belief that the murderer stood to the left of his victim.

A POSSIBLE MOTIVE.

An anonymous letter received yesterday by the editor of the Courier may or may not be a silly hoax, but it makes plain a theory of motive which has been much discussed here since the discovery of Quirk's body at the foot of the ladder. Quirk was a foot-runner, and with another sprinter named William Boyd, better known as "Bunt" Boyd, traveled the country. They were matched against local runners all over the continent, and cleaned up large sums of money on the results. The letter, which was posted at Woodstock yesterday, reads:

Dear [illegible],—Chickens will come home to roost is an old saying. Well, I have only returned the blow. Quirk and his pal Boyd done me years ago, and I never got over it. I have waited a long time for my chance. I have got one, and will get the other crook if it would take ten years longer. They will neither of them have a chance to say "God forgive me," if I can help it. Hundreds will say well done over this job.

Revenge.

Boyd is now in Detroit.

Fred Westbrook, Quirk's brother-in-law, is one who supports the theory that Quirk was murdered in revenge by some one whom he worsted in a sporting event of some sort. Quirk's life had many times been threatened, and Westbrook says he had expressed a fear that he would be injured by some of his enemies.

What is puzzling the detectives is how the murderer induced Quirk to go out to the stable, and how he escaped after the deed was accomplished. It is claimed by those who know Quirk best that he would not go into a stable at that time of night unless with some one he knew and did not suspect.

After the murder it is calculated the murderer had ten clear minutes to escape, but how he got away without being seen is a mystery. On Sunday night the moon was shining very brightly from the south, and afforded no shadows in which the assassin could creep away along Dalhousie street. Rellis who walked across from the Kerby House just at the time when Quick was being killed, saw a police constable on Dalhousie street. But neither the constable nor Rellis saw anyone come out of the gateway.

THE WARSAW PASTORATE

Rev. W. L. Atkinson to be Inducted Into the Pastorate on April 8th

A meeting of the Presbytery of Peterborough was held yesterday morning in St. Andrews Church, for the purpose of completing the arrangements for the induction of Rev. W. L. Atkinson into the pastorate of the Warsaw Church. The induction will be held on Tuesday, April 8th, at [illegible]. Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Lakefield, and Rev. J. G. Potter, will preach; Rev. Mr. Kannawin, of Omemee, will address the minister, and Rev. Mr. McIntosh, of Centreville, will address the congregation.

Sure Cure for Sea Sickness, Nausea

Maladies of this type yield instantly to Polson's Nerviline, and if you suffer periodically from these complaints, just keep Nerviline at hand. A few drops in sweetened water gives instant relief, and in the course of half an hour the cure is complete. A large 25 cent bottle of Nerviline in the house will save doctor bills, and a vast amount of suffering every year.

General - Sports.

BASEBALL.

The Auburn ball twirlers met on Tuesday evening for the purpose of discussing the outlook for the coming season and also to organize. The meeting was well attended and very enthusiastic. The team are very hopeful that a city league will be organized this season to promote the game. They ask that members of the other teams in town will consider the matter and present their views at a meeting to be held next week, of which notice will be given in a day or so.

GOLF.

The annual meeting of the Ladies Golf Club, was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall on Tuesday evening, Mrs. Boucher, President of the Club occupied the chair.

The reports from the different committees were presented and were highly satisfactory. The finances are in good shape and a balance remains in the bank after all indebtedness had been paid. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year.

Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Robt. Hamilton.
President,—Mrs. R. M. Dennistoun.
Sec.-Treas.—Mrs. W. A. Sanderson.
Captain,—Mrs. Campbell.
Entertainment Committee—Mrs. Hill, Mrs. McAllister, Mrs. Stanley, Mrs. Richard Hall, Mrs. A. H. Stratton, Mrs. Burnett, Mrs. D. J. Lundy, Mrs. McClellan, Mrs. Eastwood, Miss Laura Davidson, Miss Fair, Miss Tucker.
Match Committee—Miss Archer, Miss Clement, Miss Halliday.

COBOURG'S FINE LINKS

Cobourg, March 27.—The Golf Club house is being fixed up for the opening of the season. The links have been drained finely, owing to the fine tile system of drainage put in last fall.

Mr. C. R. Murray, who acted as professional golf teacher at the links here two years ago, will likely act as professional for the Montreal Golf Club this season.

AWFUL NAME FOR A CLUB.

Smith's Falls, March 27.—The Poonahmalee Golf Club, of Smith's Falls has been organized for the season with the following officers: Honorary Presidents, F. T. Frost and John R. Lavell; Lady Patrons, Mrs. F. T. Frost, Mrs. Lavell, Mrs. F. W Ashe, Mrs. W. H. Frost, and Mrs. S. L. Ferrest; President, S. L. Ferrest; Secretary-Treasurer, A. Dunham; Committee of Management, J. H. Moore, F. A. Bethune, G. H Jarvis, F. W. Ashe, J. H. Ross, and H. J. Gould.

LACROSSE.

Wiarton, Hespeler and Arthur will have teams in the intermediate C. L. A. series. The Seaforth Beavers have again decided to jump into the game after a two years' rest. An intermediate league with Sarnia, Chatham, Windsor, Detroit, Flint and Ann Arbor is a possibility for the coming season.

NO LOVE FOR AMERICANS IN HEARTS OF GERMANS

Bitter and Brutal Outbreaks Against United States in German Press

Berlin, March 26.—The Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald defends himself against the criticism of the New York Staats Zeitung by insisting that he is correct in saying there is no love in Germany for America. "If the editor of the Staats Zeitung had happened to have lived in Berlin during the last few months," says the correspondent, "and read the bitter and brutal outbursts of feeling against the United States in the German press, had listened to debates in the Reichstag, in which Americans were roundly abused, and heard remarks in conversation about the rapacity of American methods in commercial competition, he would scarcely hold the views he does."

UNIFORM SALOON FARES AGREED TO.

London, March 26.—The Atlantic steamship lines, with the exception of the Beaver line, have agreed to a uniform scale of saloon fares, and the season of higher summer rates will be extended.

A PROSPEROUS COMPANY

Fifth Annual Report of the Northern Life Assurance Company — A Progressive Financial Institution

We heartily congratulate the Northern Life Assurance Company on the result of the operations for the past year, as set forth in the financial statement published elsewhere. This young company has shown phenomenal progressiveness, and is now regarded as one of the solid institutions of the country. The amount of insurance written during the past year was $1,267,500, and the amount in force at the end of the year was $2,769,870, the net increase being $794,670. The assets of the company in cash or its equivalent now amounts to $284,271.85, exclusive of subscribed and uncalled for capital.

Peterborough district is under the superintendence of Mr. R. R. Phillips, of Peterborough, who is pushing the business of the company in the most energetic manner. The splendid reputation of the Northern Life for liberal dealing, together with its admirable schemes of insurance, based on modern lines, makes the work of the agents and officers comparatively easy. Peterborough district is sure to furnish an enormous business to the Northern Life in the near future.

To Secure Profit and Pleasure in the Work of Home Dyeing, Use the

Malt Breakfast Food

Beware of crude and worthless imitations of Diamond Dyes. See that your merchant gives you the Diamond Dyes when you ask for them.

Diamond Dyes have a world-wide reputation; they do perfect work at all times on all kinds of materials when the simple directions are followed.

Diamond Dyes color anything any color. They are fast to soap, washing and sun, and surpass all other dyes in durability and brilliancy. Diamond Dyes are the most concentrated and strongest dyes made, therefore the cheapest.

If your merchant asks you to accept another make of dyes, be sure he is after the large profits that common dyes bring him; he does not care for your profit, success or comfort.

The Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns beautifully colored on the strongest and best Scotch Hessian are ready for working up. Sheets of designs with all information relative to sizes and prices will be sent free to any address by The Wells & Richardson Co., Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q.

CHANDOS.

—Sugar making is in full swing now.

—Mr. and Mrs. George Trainer were the guests of Mr. Stephen Scott last week.

—Rev. Father Phelan was in Chandos on Wednesday.

—Mr. J. W. Stuart, of Lakefield, was in the village on Friday last.

—Mr. Wm. Booney and Mr. William Chapman, were in the vicinity last week.

—Mr. John Monogue has returned home from Lawmand.

—Mr. Charley Tanner has returned home from Oak Hill.

—Chandos Council will meet on March 28.

—A very pleasant evening was spent at Mr. Stephen Scott's on the 17th, in dancing and games.

FARMER BOUND HIS WIFE TO A STAKE.

In a Bull's Pen, Where the Frenzied Beast Gored Her to Death

SAD TRAGEDY NEAR TONAWANDA

Husband was Jealous Because Clergyman Paid Attention to the Woman— Had Often Taken Her Out Driving

Tonawanda, N. Y., March 26.—The greatest excitement prevails throughout this district over the horrible murder that was committed a few mornings ago. J. B. Post, a farmer, 35 years old, living on the North road, four miles south of this village, bound his wife, Amanda, to a stake in the bull pen of his stable. She wore a red calico apron, which aroused a confined bull to frenzy, and in its rage the animal attacked the woman and gored her to death.

APSLEY

—Fred and Garry have gone into the maple syrup business on an extensive scale. They had such a good run of sap the other day that their store troughs were all full, so they borrowed an empty coal oil barrel from the Dr. (he was away from home at the time), and filled it with sap. Fortunately they found out the Dr. has been using corrosive sublimate to disinfect the barrel, therefore are afraid to use that particular sap.

—Young Mr. Woodbeck, of Chandos, had an experience on Loon Lake last week he won't forget for some time. While walking across a bay he went through a thin place but caught his arms on good ice, which kept him up until his brother came to his assistance and on helping him out found that his shoulder was dislocated. He was at once taken to Dr. Bell, of Apsley, who succeeded in putting it back in place, but had to first put him under the influence of chloroform. The Dr. said it was a peculiar case and he had never seen one like it before.

—Mrs. Wilson has now got settled in the building lately occupied by Mr. Brown as a store, and has the upper flat comfortably arranged to accommodate the traveling public, where you will always find good meals and comfortable beds. But every one who has travelled the Burleigh always found that to be the case and many have gone a few miles farther to put up there for the night, and for a meal. Tommy has the store pretty well filled with a general stock.

—Prospects are bright for a good business among our merchants this summer as they are getting in large stocks, every available team being engaged to haul goods from Lakefield and Julian's Landing. Some twenty loads came up last week, and there are plenty more to follow.

—The Apsley cheese factory is going to boom this summer. Several new routes are to be added. Rob will have to enlarge his building. A visitor here was surprised when shown the first prize diploma and medal awarded to Mrs. Wm. Wilson at the Chicago fair, 1893, for cheese manufactured at the Apsley factory. He thinks that Apsley must be "somewhere."

—Mr. S. Wind or caught 5 lynx this winter and Jim L. so caught one in a trap last week, despatching it with a club. Pretty good for Jeffy, who is only about 12 years old.

—About 15 of our young people gathered at Rob's the other night to pull taffy and had a good time, though some of the young ladies objected to having it rubbed in their hair or on their faces. No wonder, for a gentleman would not do so. Bertie undertook to wash it off of one, but did not succeed very well.

Privileges of a Councillor

Engineer, Smith's Falls—Can a member of a Council legally sell coal, wood, stone or provisions to the town, or to the Charity Committee of the town? Does it disqualify him from holding office as a councillor? (2) What proceedings can be taken to unseat a member of the Council who is guilty of illegal acts?

Ans.—Section 80 of the Municipal Act says:—"No person having a contract for the supply of goods or materials to a contractor for which the corporation pays or which is subject to the control or supervision of the Council, etc., shall be qualified to be a member of the Council." Coughlin v. City of Victoria, B.C., L. R. 97. (2) Section [illegible], of the Municipal Act, says: "In the event of a member of the Council forfeiting his seat at the Council or his right thereto, or becoming disqualified to hold his seat, or of his seat becoming vacant by disqualification, he shall forthwith resign his seat, and in the event of his omitting to do so within ten days thereafter, proceedings may be taken to unseat such member, as provided in sections [illegible] to 244, both inclusive."

A RAPID CHASE AFTER BOERS UNDER DELAREY

FIVE GUNS AND 135 PRISONERS WERE TAKEN.

British Columns Make a Night March with the Object of Driving the Boers Into the Blockhouse Line

London, March 26.—In a despatch dated from Pretoria at noon yesterday, Lord Kitchener says:

"At dusk on the evening of March 23 the combined movement against Delarey was undertaken by columns of mounted men, without guns or impediments of any sort. The columns started from Commando Drift on the Vaal River, and traveled rapidly all night, and at dawn on March 24 occupied positions along the line from Commando Drift to the Lichtenburg blockhouse line. The troops moved rapidly eastward, keeping a continuous line, with the object of driving the enemy against the blockhouses or forcing an action. The result has not yet been fully reported. Kekewich's column after the commencement of the action captured three fifteen pounders, two pom poms, nine prisoners, and a hundred mules, carts and wagons. General W. Kitchener's column captured 80 prisoners, 45 carts and wagons, and a thousand cattle. The troops covered 80 miles in twenty-four hours. The total number of prisoners is 135."

London, March 26. — Government leader Balfour had no fresh information in regard to the negotiations of the Boer delegations who are supposed to be on a mission to the Free Staters in the field, when questioned in the House yesterday. He admitted that there were many reasons for confidence.

KRUGER KNEW THE GAME.

Amsterdam, March 26. — President Kruger says that Lord Wolseley has gone out to South Africa to treat with the Boer Provisional Government direct. He claims to have known of the plan and was not surprised at the news that Mr. Schalkburger and other Transvaalers were on their way to see the Free Staters afield in regard to a settlement of the war.

Vienna, March 26.—According to the Neue Freie Press, the deliberations which are about to begin in South Africa between Mr. Schalkburger and the others of his committee and Generals DeWet and Louis Botha and Mr. Steyn will be on the basis of independence and the exchange of the Rand for Zululand. The paper claims to have received the information from one of the Boer delegates.

WILL BE CLOSED DOWN

The Delora Mills to Close April 1st—Large Number Out of Employment

The Belleville Intelligencer, says,—We are informed by a gentleman who has just returned from Marmora that it is the intention of the Canadian Gold Fields Company, of Delora, near Marmora, to close down their stamp mills and other works, with the exception of the arsenic mill, on April 1st next. This, we are informed, will throw at least 100 men out of employment. It is the intention of the company to continue the mining operations during the coming summer, which, together with the staff required by the arsenic mill, will necessitate the employment of about 60 men. At present, or at least until quite recently, some 200 men were employed. Though our informant did not like to so state, he says that not unlikely the recent strike had something to do with the mills closing down.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Of The Women's Auxiliary of All Saint's—Officers Elected for the Year

The annual meeting of the Women's Auxiliary of All Saint's Church was held on Tuesday evening. After devotional exercises by the Rector a very interesting address on "Woman's Work in the Church," was delivered by Rev. W. L. Armitage.

The chair was occupied by Miss Chamberlain, President, and the different reports were presented which showed that a very successful year's work had been done. A very interesting paper on "Mission Work of the Church in the large cities in England," was read by Mrs. Edward Harris.

The officers were re-elected for the ensuing year, and are as follows:

Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Beck.
Pres.—Miss Chamberlain.
1st Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Hooper.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. D. J. Lundy.
Sec.—Mrs. Latimer.
Treas.—Mrs. Gilbert.
Cor. of P.M.C.—Mrs. Buller.
Organist.—Miss Mullen.
Superintendents of Jun. W. A.—Mrs. Hickey, Miss Cochrane and Mrs. Smeaton.

Over twenty new members joined and a large number of others are expected at an early date.

A very pleasing and interesting feature of the evening was the presentation to Miss Chamberlain of a Life Membership in the Diocesan Branch. Miss Chamberlain was taken completely by surprise and replied in very feeling terms.

Those present were entertained to refreshments by Mrs. D. L. Lundy. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Lundy and Mr. Brown, who had sung a couple of solos during the evening. The meeting closed with the members' prayer and benediction by the Rector.

GENERAL BULLER GETS INTO TROUBLE AGAIN

A Sentence in a Report by Roberts Omitted to Spare Buller's Feelings

London, March 26.—An acrimonious correspondence between Mr. A. J. Balfour and Gen. Buller has been published. Mr. Balfour contends that Gen. Buller was in chief command at the battle of Spion Kop, while Gen. Buller denies this assertion.

To his contention, Mr. Balfour adds: "There is no reason why all the Spion Kop despatches should not be published."

To this General Buller rejoins that he hopes the despatches will be published without manipulation.

Yesterday, Mr. Balfour, replying to Gen. Buller, protested against the latter's insinuation, and declared that the only manipulation which had been exercised with regard to Gen. Buller's despatches, was the omission of a single sentence criticising Sir Charles Warren, whilst the omissions from Lord Roberts' despatches relating to operations in Natal, were made, said Mr. Balfour, "solely for the purpose, if possible, of sparing your feelings, and maintaining your military reputation."

ENGLAND IS CENSURED IN THE U. S. CONGRESS

Congressman Foster, Gives a Sensational Address in Congress.

BOTH POWERS ARE SEEKING TO CRUSH SMALLER NATIONS

He Says the United States is as Tyrannical as Great Britain

Washington, March 26 — Representative George P. Foster of Chicago delivered a stirring speech this afternoon upon the attitude of this administration toward the Boers in South Africa. Mr. Foster used as the text of his address a pamphlet which he received from the Transvaal League of Chicago setting forth that numerous treaties, including one which the United States made with France in 1778, declared horses and their furniture to be contraband of war. The treaty of Washington between Great Britain and the United States, which was signed in 1870 was quoted in the pamphlet as prohibiting the augmentation of military supplies or arms, or the recruitment of men by belligerent powers. Mr. Foster said in part:

"Throughout the discussion of Philippine matters in this House at this session on both sides of the question one point has been unmistakably evident and admitted on all sides, and that is that we are in the Philippines and are exercising control of them on the principle that might makes right and are governing them not because the people want us to do so, but because we have the power to do so.

"That may be the reason, Mr. Chairman, why in this congress and in the last congress, the chairman on foreign affairs has never deigned to make a report on any of the various bills or joint resolutions referred to it protesting against the continuance of the Boer war and expressing sympathy with the Boers.

The reason is that since the adoption of our present Philippine policy we are in the same position as Great Britain. Both countries are tarred with the same stick. Both are endeavoring to crush the independence out of smaller and less powerful people.

"But however it may be, with the government or with the Republican party, the people of the United States have a right to protest and they will protest, and I hope the Democratic party, through its members here assembled, will protest against the great wrong done to humanity and the cause of human freedom and progress by Great Britain and in its treatment of the South African Republics and against the unworthy manner in which this subject has been treated by the political party at present dominant in this country.

"The leaders of the majority party are only too ready to appoint a committee to go over from this country at the national expense in knee breeches and powdered hair to bow the knee of republicanism at the coronation of an English king, but they have not a word to say in behalf of the poor people of South Africa whom that same king is trying to shoot out [illegible] their homes and whose territory and property he is trying to rob simply in order that some few English speculators and adventurers may get [illegible] of the gold fields of the Boers [illegible] appropriate them to their own [illegible] profit. For this base, self- [illegible] Great Britain is making [illegible] cruel and unjust as history [illegible] recorded. [illegible] this country favor [illegible] allow her to use our [illegible] of supplies to aid [illegible] assault upon the rights and liberties of the Boer people?

"The inconsistency of our course will be manifest to all men when it is remembered how this country caused to be arrested and imprisoned, a man who sought to forward supplies to Cuba during the Cuban war because we considered it a violation of neutrality. And how strictly the treaty between Great Britain and the United States was enforced and applied both by England and this country with respect to neutrality stipulations during the Spanish war.

"But at that time, Spain, in spite of her barbarities and cruelties, appears to have had some rights as a nation, but now the poor Boers, whose only crime is a love of liberty, and a determination to defend their homes their property and their families, are ignored by this great republic as having no rights which a nation of free men are bound to respect."

Mr. Cochran, of Missouri, also denounced the failure of congress to express its sympathy for the Boers in South Africa, and called attention to his resolution to invite Paul Kruger, President of the South African republic, to visit this country, which, he said, had been pigeon-holed by the majority.

While Mr. Cochran was speaking, an elderly lady in the gallery with pro-British tendencies frequently shook her fist at the gentleman from Missouri, and at one time became so violent in her demonstration of disapproval that one of the doorkeepers was obliged to admonish her to keep quiet.

CECIL RHODES DIED IN CAPE TOWN

On Wednesday at the Age of 49 Years

HIS WORK IN SOUTH AFRICA

Keeping of Bechuanaland in the Hands of the British from the Boers Considered His Greatest Achievement

Cape Town, March 26. — Cecil Rhodes died to-day.

Right Honorable Cecil Rhodes was born in 1853. He was the fourth son of the late Rev. Francis W. Rhodes, Vicar of Bishop Stratford. Mr. Rhodes entered Oriel College, Oxford, in 1873.

Mr. Rhodes was the originator of the Cape Town scheme; he considered the keeping of Bechuanaland in British hands to the exclusion of the Boers, his greatest achievement. His idea was "The United States of Africa," although he insisted upon the imperial keystone to the arch. He was an ardent Briton.

DIED PEACEFULLY.

Cape Town, March 26.— Mr. Rhodes died peacefully at 5.57 p.m. He slept during the afternoon, but his breathing became more difficult and his strength perceptibly diminished until he passed away.

COMPLETELY BROKEN DOWN.

London, March 26. — The death of Cecil Rhodes came as no great surprise to those few who saw anything of him during his last visit to London during the winter. Whether it was due to his experiences during the long siege of Kimberley or the accumulated anxieties regarding the war in South Africa, with an accompanying change of public feeling in England towards him, there is no doubt he was almost completely broken down within the last two years. Even his appearance changed. His once finely chiselled face had become bloated, and his always huge frame filled out until the colossus became so stout as to make walking a matter of difficulty. He was frequently attacked with severe heart troubles, during which he exhibited the stoicism which marked his extraordinary career. Nor did he allow bodily ailments to interfere with business. Among his associates in the city he never mentioned them, nor did he permit them to be mentioned to him. Up to the last Mr. Rhodes kept a firm grip on all those vast South African interests created and controlled by him. Except that he was more irritable and more dictatorial, there was no noticeable change in his character. He was never contented to stay long in one place. His closing days devolved into an increasing, purposeless quest of change of scene. During his recent trip to Egypt this was particularly noticeable. He rushed from place to place, as if with the only object of upsetting his own plans. Then he suddenly returned to England.

Financially, Mr. Rhodes' death is not likely to have any far-reaching results, as all his enterprises were systematised so thoroughly as not to need the master mind which was so necessary to their inception.

Thanks to the very great success of the De Beers mines, the British Chartered South African Company and other great South African ventures, Rhodes' fortune had been steadily accumulating. He lost money over the war, but what he made must have been trifling compared with the many millions he possessed. He never lost his open-handed, somewhat reckless, methods of handling money. Not long ago he walked into the office of one of his confidential subordinates, and throwing down a bundle of notes, bonds, etc., said: "Invest those for me," and went out without waiting to have them looked at. Inspection revealed the fact that they amounted to over a million pounds sterling.

How they were invested Mr. Rhodes never knew, or cared, for months later, as that night he went off on one of his wandering tours and refused to allow himself to be bothered with the details of the investment of his million until he returned to England.

No outward change in the method of handling men, millions and empires. Toward the social side of life, however, he soured visibly. Once his day's work at the offices of the British Chartered South African Company was over, he shut himself up from the curious in an unfrequented London hotel, where he utterly denied himself to all except to half a dozen favorite intimates. Dr. Jameson was his constant companion, indeed none of Dr. Jameson's indiscretions lating between the two men. They could be seen in the park in the morning taking solitary rides on horseback, never breaking out from a walk the cynosure of all eyes, yet severely unobservant of the hundreds of London's political and social leaders who had the right to a bowing acquaintanceship. More especially did Mr. Rhodes shun the present Government leaders.

BRITISH ARMY METHODS.

He bitterly expressed his contempt of British army methods in South Africa, and probably never quite forgave Mr. Chamberlain and Lord Milner for not consulting him or endeavoring to utilize the powerful financial-political machine which Mr. Rhodes undoubtedly manipulated over the whole of South Africa. With increasing irascibility, which he did not hesitate to vent on duke or plebian who crossed his path, he grew more and more restless as the end of his life drew near.

THE NEWS IN LONDON.

London, March 26.— The news of Mr Rhodes' death reached London too late to excite comment either on the stock exchange or in the afternoon newspapers. The bulletin announcing his death (which was sent from Cape Town at 6.25 p.m.) reached the newspaper offices just as the final editions were going to press.

Throgmorton street was deserted when the news arrived, so there was not even a flutter in the curb market. The "tickers" soon disseminated the news in the clubs and hotels, where it formed the main topic of conversation.

QUIRK'S MURDER A DEEP MYSTERY

It is Thought a Victim of His Foot Race Methods May be Guilty

HIS LIFE WAS THREATENED.

Detectives are Puzzled Over How He Came to Visit the Stables Alone so Late at Night.

Brantford, March 27. — The remains of James Quirk, proprietor of the Commercial Hotel, were interred this afternoon. There was a large crowd at the funeral services, and scores of vehicles followed the hearse.

The report of the doctors who performed the autopsy leaves no room to doubt foul play. They found four separate wounds upon Quirk's head—one the result of the tumble from the ladder, the other three undoubtedly inflicted by an instrument resembling a narrow-bladed hatchet.

The three clean wounds are on the top and back of the head, and are all about two and a half inches in length. One, apparently the first delivered, exposed the brain and fractured the skull in all directions. The others were not delivered with the same force, but both also penetrated the skull. There is no doubt that all three were delivered from the rear of the victim, and the direction they all take inclined the physician to the belief that the murderer stood to the left of his victim.

A POSSIBLE MOTIVE.

An anonymous letter received yesterday by the editor of the Courier may or may not be a silly hoax, but it makes plain a theory of motive which has been much discussed here since the discovery of Quirk's body at the foot of the ladder. Quirk was a foot-runner, and with another sprinter named William Boyd, better known as "Bunt" Boyd, traveled the country. They were matched against local runners all over the continent, and cleaned up large sums of money on the results. The letter, which was posted at Woodstock yesterday, reads:

Dear Editor,—Chickens will come home to roost is an old saying. Well, I have only returned the blow. Quirk and his pal Boyd done me years ago, and I never got over it. I have waited a long time for my chance. I have got one, and will get the other crook if it would take ten years longer. They will neither of them have a chance to say "God forgive me," if I can help it. Hundreds will say well done over this job.

Revenge.

Boyd is now in Detroit.

Fred Westbrook, Quirk's brother-in-law, is one who supports the theory that Quirk was murdered in revenge by some one whom he worsted in a sporting event of some sort. Quirk's life had many times been threatened, and Westbrook says he had expressed a fear that he would be injured by some of his enemies.

What is puzzling the detectives is how the murderer induced Quirk to go out to the stable, and how he escaped after the deed was accomplished. It is claimed by those who know Quirk best that he would not go into a stable at that time of night unless with some one he knew and did not suspect.

After the murder it is calculated the murderer had ten clear minutes to escape, but how he got away without being seen is a mystery. On Sunday night the moon was shining very brightly from the south, and afforded no shadows in which the assassin could creep away along Dalhousie street. Reilis who walked across from the Kerby House just at the time when Quirk was being killed, saw a police constable on Dalhousie street. But neither the constable nor Reilis saw anyone come out of the gateway.

THE WARSAW PASTORATE

Rev. W. L. Atkinson to be Inducted Into the Pastorate on April 8th

A meeting of the Presbytery of Peterborough was held yesterday morning in St. Andrews Church, for the purpose of completing the arrangements for the induction of Rev. W. L. Atkison into the pastorate of the Warsaw Church. The induction will be held on Tuesday, April 8th, at [illegible]. Rev. Mr. Campbell, of Lakefield, and Rev. J. G. Potter, will preach; Rev. Mr. Kannawin, of Omemee, will address the minister, and Rev. Mr. McIntosh, of Centerville, will address the congregation.

Sure Cure [illegible]

Maladies of this type yield instantly to Polson's Nerviline, and if you suffer periodically from these complaints, just keep Nerviline at hand. A few drops in sweetened water gives instant relief, and in the course of half an hour the cure is complete. A large 25 cent bottle of Nerviline in the house will save doctor bills, and a vast amount of suffering every year.

General - Sports.

BASEBALL.

The Auburn ball twirlers met on Tuesday evening for the purpose of discussing the outlook for the coming season and also to organize. The meeting was well attended and very enthusiastic. The team are very hopeful that a city league will be organized this season to promote the game. They ask that members of the other teams in town will consider the matter and present their views at a meeting to be held next week, of which notice will be given in a day or so.

GOLF.

The annual meeting of the Ladies Golf Club, was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall on Tuesday evening, Mrs. Boucher, President of the Club occupied the chair.

The reports from the different committees were presented and were highly satisfactory. The finances are in good shape and a balance remains in the bank after all indebtedness had been paid. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year.

Hon. Pres.,—Mrs. Robt. Hamilton.
President,—Mrs. R. M. Dennistoun.
Sec.-Treas.,—Mrs. W. A. Sanderson.
Captain,—Mrs. Campbell.
Entertainment Committee—Mrs. Hill, Mrs. McAllister, Mrs. Stanley, Mrs. Richard Hall, Mrs. A. H. Stratton, Mrs. Burnett, Mrs. D. J. Lundy, Mrs. McClellan, Mrs. Eastwood, Miss Laura Davidson, Miss Fair, Miss Tucker.
Match Committee—Miss Archer, Miss Clementi, Miss Halliday.

COBOURG'S FINE LINKS

Cobourg, March 27.—The Golf Club house is being fixed up for the opening of the season. The links have been drained finely, owing to the fine tile system of drainage put in last fall.

Mr. C. R. Murray, who acted as professional golf teacher at the links here two years ago, will likely act as professional for the Montreal Golf Club this season.

AWFUL NAME FOR A CLUB.

Smith's Falls, March 27.—The Poonahmalee Golf Club, of Smith's Falls has been organized for the season with the following officers: Honorary Presidents, F. T. Frost and John R. Lavell; Lady Patrons, Mrs. F. T. Frost, Mrs. Lavell, Mrs. F. W Ashe, Mrs. W. H. Frost, and Mrs. S. L. Forrest; President, S. L. Forrest; Secretary-Treasurer, A. Dunham; Committee of Management, J. H. Moore, F. A. Bethune, G. H Jarvis, F. W. Ashe, J. H. Ross, and H. J. Gould.

LACROSSE.

Wiarton, Hespeler and Arthur will have teams in the intermediate C. L. A series. The Seaforth Beavers have again decided to jump into the game after a two years' rest. An intermediate league with Sarnia, Chatham, Windsor, Detroit, Flint and Ann Arbor is a possibility for the coming season.

NO LOVE FOR AMERICANS IN HEARTS OF GERMANS

Bitter and Brutal Outbreaks Against United States in German Press

Berlin, March 26.—The Berlin correspondent of the New York Herald defends himself against the criticism of the New York Staats Zeitung by insisting that he is correct in saying there is no love in Germany for America. "If the editor of the Staats Zeitung had happened to have lived in Berlin during the last few months," says the correspondent, "and read the bitter and brutal outbursts of feeling against the United States in the German press, had listened to debates in the Reichstag, in which Americans were roundly abused, and heard remarks in conversation abo [illegible] the rapacity of American methods in commercial competition, he w [illegible] scarcely hold the views he does."

UNIFORM SALOON FARES AGREED TO.

London, March 26.—The Atlantic steamship lines, with the exception of the Beaver line, have agreed to a uniform scale of saloon fares, and the season of higher summer rates will be extended.

A PROSPEROUS COMPANY

Fifth Annual Report of the Northern Life Assurance Company — A Progressive Financial Institution

We heartily congratulate the Northern Life Assurance Company on the result of the operations for the past year, as set forth in the financial statement published elsewhere. This young company has shown phenomenal progressiveness, and is now regarded as one of the solid institutions of the country. The amount of insurance written during the past year was $1,287,500, and the amount in force at the end of the year was $2,769,870, the net increase being $704,670. The assets of the company in cash or its equivalent now amounts to $234,271.05, exclusive of subscribed and uncalled for capital.

Peterborough district is under the superintendence of Mr. R. R. Phillips, of Peterborough, who is pushing the business of the company in the most energetic manner. The splendid reputation of the Northern Life for liberal dealing, together with its admirable schemes of insurance, based on modern lines, makes the work of the agents and officers comparatively easy. Peterborough district is sure to furnish an enormous business to the Northern Life in the near future.

To Secure Profit and Pleasure in the Work of Home Dyeing, Use the

Malt Breakfast Food

Beware of crude and worthless imitations of Diamond Dyes. See that your merchant gives you the Diamond Dyes when you ask for them.

Diamond Dyes have a world-wide reputation; they do perfect work at all times on all kinds of materials when the simple directions are followed.

Diamond Dyes color anything any color. They are fast to soap, washing and sun, and surpass all other dyes in durability and brilliancy. Diamond Dyes are the most concentrated and strongest dyes made, therefore the cheapest.

If your merchant asks you to accept another make of dyes, be sure he is after the large profits that common dyes bring him; he does not care for your profit, success or comfort.

The Diamond Dye Mat and Rug Patterns beautifully colored on the strongest and best Scotch Hessian are ready for working up. Sheets of designs with all information relative to sizes and prices will be sent free to any address by The Wells & Richardson Co. Limited, 200 Mountain street, Montreal, P.Q

—Mr. Wm. Booney and Mr. William Cranson, were in the vicinity last week.

—Mr. John Monogue has returned home from Lawmard.

—Mr. Charley Tanner has returned home from Oak Hill.

—Chandos Council will meet on March 30.

—A very pleasant evening was spent at Mr. Stephen Scott's on the 17th, in dancing and games.

FARMER BOUND HIS WIFE TO A STAKE.

In a Bull's Pen, Where the Frenzied Beast Gored Her to Death

SAD TRAGEDY NEAR TONAWANDA

Tonawanda, N. Y., March 26.—The greatest excitement prevails throughout this district over the horrible murder that was committed a few mornings ago. J. B. Post, a farmer, 35 years old, living on the North road, four miles south of this village, bound his wife, Amanda, to a stake in the bull pen of his stable. She wore a red calico apron, which aroused a confined bull to frenzy, and in its rage the animal attacked the woman and gored her to death.

APSLEY

—Fred and Garry have gone into the maple syrup business on an extensive scale. They had such a good run of sap the other day that their store troughs were all full, so they borrowed an empty coal oil barrel from the Dr. (he was away from home at the time), and filled it with sap. Fortunately they found out the Dr. had been using corrosive sublimate to disinfect the barrel, therefore are afraid to use that particular sap.

—Young Mr. Woodbeck, of Chandos, had an experience on Loon Lake last week he won't forget for some time. While walking across a bay he went through a thin place but caught his arms on good ice, which kept him up until his brother came to his assistance and on helping him out found that his shoulder was dislocated. He was at once taken to Dr. Bell, of Apsley, who succeeded in putting it back in place, but had to first put him under the influence of chloroform. The Dr. said it was a peculiar case and he had never seen one like it before.

—Mrs. Wilson has now got settled in the building lately occupied by Mr. Brown as a store, and has the upper flat comfortably arranged to accommodate the traveling public, where you will always find good meals and comfortable beds. But every one who has travelled the Burleigh always found that to be the case and many have gone a few miles farther to put up there for the night, and for a meal. Tommy has the store pretty well filled with a general stock.

—Prospects are bright for a good business among our merchants this summer as they are getting in large stocks, every available team being engaged to haul goods from Lakefield and Julian's Landing. Some twenty loads came up last week, and there are plenty more to follow.

—The Apsley cheese factory is going to boom this summer. Several new routes are to be added. Bob will have to enlarge his building. A visitor here was surprised when shown the first prize diploma and medal awarded to Mrs. Wm. Wilson at the Chicago fair, 1893, for cheese manufactured at the Apsley factory. He thinks that Apsley must be "somewhere."

—Mr. S. [illegible] caught 5 lynx this winter and [illegible] caught one in a trap last week, despatching it with a club. Pretty good for Jolly, who is only about 12 years old.

—About 15 of our young people gathered at Bob's the other night to pull taffy and had a good time, though some of the young ladies objected to having it rubbed in their hair or on their faces. No wonder, for a gentleman would not do so. Bertie undertook to wash it off of one, but did not succeed very well.

Privileges of a Councillor

Engineer, Smith's Falls—Can a member of a Council legally sell coal, wood, stone or provisions to the town, or to the Charity Committee of the town? Does it disqualify him from holding office as a councillor? (2) What proceedings can be taken so to unseat a member of the Council who is guilty of illegal acts?

Ans.—Section 80 of the Municipal Act says:—"No person having a contract for the supply of goods or materials to a contractor for which the corporation pays or which is subject to the control or supervision of the Council, etc., shall be qualified to be a member of the Council." Coughlin v. City of Victoria, B.C., L. R. 97. (2) Section 208, of the Municipal Act, says: "In the event of a member of the Council forfeiting his seat at the Council or his right thereto, or becoming disqualified to hold his seat, or of his seat becoming vacant by disqualification, he shall forthwith resign his seat, and in the event of his omitting to do so within ten days thereafter, proceedings may be taken to unseat such member, as provided by sections 207 to 244, both inclusive."

A RAPID CHASE AFTER BOERS UNDER DELAREY

FIVE GUNS AND 135 PRISONERS WERE TAKEN.

British Columns Make a Night March with the Object of Driving the Boers Into the Blockhouse Line

London, March 26.—In a despatch dated from Pretoria at noon yesterday, Lord Kitchener says:

"At dusk on the evening of March 23 the combined movement against Delarey was undertaken by columns of mounted men, without guns or impediments of any sort. The columns started from Commando Drift on the Vaal River, and traveled rapidly all night, and at dawn on March 24 occupied positions along the line from Commando Drift to the Lichtenburg blockhouse line. The troops moved rapidly eastward, keeping a continuous line, with the object of driving the enemy against the blockhouses or forcing an action. The result has not yet been fully reported. Kekewich's column after the commencement of the action captured three fifteen pounders, two pom poms, nine prisoners, and a hundred mules, carts and wagons. General W. Kitchener's column captured 80 prisoners, 45 carts and wagons, and a thousand cattle. The troops covered 80 miles in twenty-four hours. The total number of prisoners is 135."

London, March 26. — Government leader Balfour had no fresh information in regard to the negotiations of the Boer delegations who are supposed to be on a mission to the Free Staters in the field, when questioned in the House yesterday. He admitted that there were many reasons for confidence.

KRUGER KNEW THE GAME.

Amsterdam, March 26. — President Kruger says that Lord Wolseley has gone out to South Africa to treat with the Boer Provisional Government direct. He claims to have known of the plan and was not surprised at the news that Mr. Schalkburger and other Transvaalers were on their way to see the Free Staters afield in regard to a settlement of the war.

Vienna, March 26.—According to the News Freie Presse, the deliberations which are about to begin in South Africa between Mr. Schalkburger and the others of his committee and Generals DeWet and Louis Botha and Mr. Steyn will be on the basis of independence and the exchange of the Rand for Zululand. The paper claims to have received the information from one of the Boer delegates.

WILL BE CLOSED DOWN

The Deloro Mills to Close April 1st—Large Number Out of Employment

The Belleville Intelligencer, says,—We are informed by a gentleman who has just returned from Marmora that it is the intention of the Canadian Gold Fields Company, of Deloro, near Marmora, to close down their stamp mills and other works, with the exception of the arsenic mill, on April 1st next. This, we are informed, will throw at least 100 men out of employment. It is the intention of the company to continue the mining operations during the coming summer, which, together with the staff required by the arsenic mill, will necessitate the employment of about 50 men. At present, or at least until quite recently, some 200 men were employed. Though our informant did not like to so state, he says that not unlikely the recent strike had something to do with the mills closing down.

Because you haven't used Catarrhozone is the best reason why you should use it right away. It will cure the Catarrh that makes your breath so heavy and your hearing so poor. Catarrhozone is a scientific cure for catarrh, bronchitis and asthma, recommended by doctors and druggists as a certain cure. Mr. Henry A. Taylor, the oldest druggist in Halifax, says, "Catarrhozone gives satisfaction wherever it goes. It is simple and convenient to use, and enjoys fully three times the sale of any other catarrh remedy sold in the city." Catarrhozone is guaranteed to cure, and if it fails you can have your money returned. Price $1.00 for two months' treatment. Small size 25c. Druggists or Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

Of The Women's Auxiliary of All Saint's—[illegible]

The annual meeting of the Women's Auxiliary of All Saint's Church was held on Tuesday evening. After devotional exercises by the Rector a very interesting address on "Woman's Work in the Church," was delivered by Rev. W. L. Armitage.

The chair was occupied by Miss Chamberlain, President, and the different reports were presented which showed that a very successful year's work had been done. A very interesting paper on "Mission Work of the Church in the large cities in England," was read by Mrs. Edward Harris.

The officers were re-elected for the ensuing year, and are as follows:

Hon. Pres.,—Mrs. Beck.
Pres.,—Miss Chamberlain.
1st Vice-Pres.,—Mrs. Hooper.
2nd Vice-Pres.,—Mrs. D. J. Lundy.
Sec.,—Mrs. Latimer.
Treas.,—Mrs. Gilbert.
Con. of P.M.C.—Mrs. Buller.
Organist,—Miss Bullen.
Superintendents of Jun. W. A.—Mrs. Hickey, Miss Cochrane and Mrs. [illegible].

Over twenty new members joined and a large number of others are expected at an early date.

A very pleasing and interesting feature of the evening was the presentation to Miss Chamberlain of a Life Membership in the Diocesan Branch. Miss Chamberlain was taken completely by surprise and replied in very feeling terms.

Those present were entertained to refreshments by Mrs. D. L. Lundy. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Lundy and Mr. Brown, who had sung a couple of solos during the evening. The meeting closed with the members' prayer and benediction by the Rector.

GENERAL BULLER GETS INTO TROUBLE AGAIN

A Sentence in a Report by Roberts Omitted to Spare Buller's Feelings

London, March 26.—An acrimonious correspondence between Mr. A. J. Balfour and Gen. Buller has been published. Mr. Balfour contends that Gen. Buller was in chief command at the battle of Spion Kop, while Gen. Buller denies this assertion.

To his contention, Mr. Balfour adds: "There is no reason why all the Spion Kop despatches should not be published."

To this General Buller rejoins that he hopes the despatches will be published without manipulation.

Yesterday, Mr. Balfour, replying to Gen. Buller, protested against the latter's insinuation, and declared that the only manipulation which had been exercised with regard to Gen. Buller's despatches, was the excision of a single sentence criticising Sir Charles Warren, whilst the omissions from Lord Roberts' despatches relating to operations in Natal, were made, said Mr. Balfour, "solely for the purpose, if possible, of sparing your feelings, and maintaining your military reputation."

THE CZAR'S REPLY TO THE BRITISH-JAPANESE WARNING

We shall recognize the purport of the joint note now addressed by Russia and France to the other great Powers interested in the Far East, if we recall the terms of the British-Japanese treaty to which the note must be regarded as a reply. Substantially, the treaty provided that, in the event of a conflict between Russia and Japan, the latter power should be left to fight single-handed, so long as her opponent should receive no support from a third Power; but that, in case Russia should obtain help from a third power, as, for example, her French ally, then Japan, on her side, might count on the assistance of Great Britain. Under all circumstances, the treaty was construed as an admonition that Russia would do well to withdraw her troops from Manchuria and to cease meddling in Corea.

That, for the present, at all events, Russia will obey the admonition seems probable, but, to save her dignity, she now pretends by the joint note that she has intended all along to follow the course prescribed. The signatories of the joint note begin by asserting that they have repeatedly expressed the purpose of upholding the open door in "China," and that they view with satisfaction the affirmation of the same principle by Great Britain and Japan. We have put the word "China" in quotation marks, because it is ambiguous, very different meanings having been hitherto assigned to it by Russia and her French ally on the one hand, and by Japan, Great Britain and the United States upon the other. Russia has shown by her acts, that is to say, by her military occupation of Mukden, Newchwang and other strategic points, and by her attempt to make the occupation permanent through a formal cession of the territory occupied, that, in her eyes, "China" means the region south of the Great Wall and should not include Manchuria. On the other hand, Japan, Great Britain, and the United States have persistently held Manchuria to be an inseparable part of the Chinese Empire, and, consequently, think that the Russian soldiers should be withdrawn as quickly as possible from the points temporarily occupied. As Russia, since the announcement of the British-Japanese treaty, has ceased trying to secure exclusive mining and industrial privileges in Manchuria, and has consented to fix early dates for the removal of her troops from that province, we assume that she has renounced her former interpretation of the word "China," and in the joint note has given it the more comprehensive meaning to which we have referred.

It is in the last paragraph of the joint note that some British readers profess to detect a suspicious or minatory tenor, but, for our part, we can see in it nothing that was not already known, to wit: the intention of France and Russia to act together in the Far East. The words are: "They themselves (the signatories of the joint note) being also obliged to take into consideration the eventuality of aggressive action on the part of a third power, or of fresh troubles in China jeoparding the integrity and free development of that Power, and becoming a menace to their own interests, and to their governments, reserve it to themselves to consider in such case, means of assuring their protection." It means apparently, that, if Japan, relying on the fact that, as yet, the Trans-Siberian Railway is not adapted for military purposes, should seize the opportunity to attack Russia while the latter power is weak on its eastern frontier, France would lend the aid of her fleet to her ally, in spite of her knowledge that this act would bring Great Britain into the arena on the other side. In other words, the British Foreign Office will be disappointed, if it entered into the treaty with Japan on the assumption that it would thereby avert the interference of any third Power with a duel between the Czar and the Mikado. The joint note means that, if there is any collision at all on the Pacific coast of Asia, it will not be a duel but a quadrangular fight.

The British Government, which must desire to avoid all additional burdens while its resources are severely taxed in South Africa, will, in view of the position now openly taken by France, do its utmost to prevent its Japanese ally from precipitating hostilities in the Far East.

NEW ENGLAND FOR RECIPROCITY

New England is getting its eyes more widely open every day to the obvious advantages of reciprocity with Canada. It has been for reciprocity—at least, of a sort—for a long time; but it is now beginning to realize that it is losing large sums of money every month that reciprocity is delayed. More than that, no small share of its industrial importance in the future depends upon securing for its manufactures access to Canadian markets.

As a consequence, New England politicians at Washington are doing their best fighting for a re-opening of the reciprocity question with Canada. They are apparently ready to sacrifice all the farmers in the West, who oppose reciprocity in natural products under the mistaken delusion that Canadians would waste time fighting for their flooded and secondary market when the world mart of Britain is open to us. The zeal of the New Englanders is spurred on by the fear that Canada is on the brink of making an arrangement with Britain which will shut reciprocity out of the field of practical politics forever.

It looks, indeed, as if Canada were soon to be in the position of a popular maiden with many suitors to choose between. A population is pouring into our West which will want many manufactured articles, and will be able to pay for them in the best grain in the world. Our money will be good, and our tastes "various." So it is no wonder that New England does not desire to see all this go to old England without a chance for itself.

The approved policy of the Canadian people is not difficult to discern, however. The first industries to benefit by this growth must be those planted in Canada, manned by Canadian labour, and consuming Canadian produce. The eyes of our exporters will then turn naturally to Britain, where the best prices prevail, and the largest buyers are to be found; and, as we must sell goods for goods to get the best results, our first inclination will be to buy there what we cannot make ourselves. This natural tendency we hope to see fostered in the near future by a system of preferential tariffs, the practical side of which scheme our representatives to London next June have an opportunity to discuss.

As for our American neighbors, we have always been ready to enter into a fair arrangement with them though we are bound to confess that this attitude has not always—or even usually—met with a similar spirit at the boundary line. Our New England friends must remember—what we cannot forget—that for years they have waged a tariff war against us, that they have tried to drive us into suing for annexation, and that they are still in an attitude of trade hostility. If further advances are to be made, it is only fair that they should make them; but they may as well know that we will abandon neither our home industries nor our inter-imperial trade.

Curious Bits of News.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 266,000. The total vote of the Prohibition party in the election of the same year was 208,000.

In the bottom of a strawberry-box opened at Hutchinson, Kan., the other day, the following note was found written on the smooth wood: "I am Cora Marsh, aged sixteen, of Logan, Mo. Never been kissed."

A man in Ray County, Mo., became convinced recently that he had incipient consumption. Every time he drew a full breath he heard a crackling sound. A doctor discovered that the crackling sound was made by a small buckle on his suspender.

A curious old custom was recently revived at Great Oakley, England, where parish lands were let by "pin in candle." The local clergyman presided. A pin is inserted in a burning candle, and so long as it remains in its tallow resting-place bids are taken. The last bidder before the pin drops is declared the tenant for the year.

A Paris schoolmaster has petitioned the French Chamber against kings still reigning on French playing cards. He suggests kings should be replaced by pictures of Thiers, MacMahon, Grevy, and Carnot; and queens by equally prominent women Republicans. The Parliamentary Commission sitting on the petition has replied that the change is impossible, since it would ruin quite a number of playing-card factories.

What is probably the most extraordinary plant ever discovered has now been found by H. A. Suverkrop, of Philadelphia, who, during trips to South America, has for some years been contributing to the collection of his friend, Professor N. E. Brown, of the Herbarium, Kew Gardens, London. The amazing plant which Mr. Suverkrop has now found is an orchid that takes a drink whenever it feels thirsty by letting down a tube into the water, the tube, when not in use, being coiled up on top of the plant.

Baltimore, Md., had a bulldog until recently, that made a practice of milking cows in the fields. Just how the dog formed the habit is not known, but it is thought he acquired it by following the example of calves. He had often been seen with the many cows in pasture about Mount Washington across a cow's back while she was lying down. His appetite for milk grew so strong that he was not satisfied with part of the supply, but wanted it all, and attacked a dairymaid who went into her barnyard to milk. He was despatched by a policeman with a revolver.

Dooley on Athletics For Women.

Mr. HENNESSY having ventured to say that athletic exercise is a splendid thing for women, "Is it, faith?" said Mr. Dooley. "Well, it may be, but it's no good f'r th' women f'r th' men. Dressing-up For the Coronation.

(Paris Correspondent of London "Truth.")

THE Earl-Marshal's notification to the peers and peeresses of Great Britain is thought vastly amusing. It strikes us here as might an attempt to go back with pride to the ancestral missing link, whose skeleton it appears has been found in the farthest East. There was something grand and handsome in the distinctive costumes that Louis the Fourteenth invented. The tabouret and the pliant, or folding seat, had their manifest raison d'etre in the crowded saloons and galleries at Versailles. But the notification of the Earl-Marshal strikes us as the triumph of smallness, the exaltation of pettiness. Could Swift have been thinking of a similar notification in his time when he wrote about the war between the Big-Endians and the Little-Endians? A consequence of the notification will be to make American heiresses scorn offers of marriage from noblemen less high than dukes. They will know now that dukes only have strawberry leaves on their coronets and four rows of black snips of fur on their miniver capes. Barons who can only wear two rows of the black snips will be held of small account in the heiress preserves of the United States, and so, we may expect, will be earls who have half a row less than the marquis, and a whole row less than a duke. What American lady could bear to appear as a baron's wife in a mantle with a train three feet on the ground when the viscountess immediately preceding her had one a quarter of a yard longer, the countess preceding her half a yard, the marchioness three-quarters of a yard, and the duchess a whole yard? The English easily grasp the inferiority of their "proper stations" in or out of the Peerage. But the Americans do not. Their motto is "tout ou rien." They must have a front seat, or they leave the room. Mr. Jesse Grant, though not of the ornamental sex, declined to dine at Windsor with the lords' gentlemen-in-waiting. "If I do not dine with father (the ex-President of the United States) and mother at the Queen's table I go home." A court official with fear and trembling conveyed this intimation to her late Majesty, who reluctantly yielded, for Big-Endian and Little-Endian questions came within the compass of her brain, and she attached great importance to them. Mr. Jesse Grant did not know that the smallest of the court officials with whom he scorned to dine took precedence of the grand old Gladstone, and that without shocking any Englishman. The aristocratic nobody who waited on the Queen was supposed to absorb some of her sacred virtue. So far as precedence went, the Prime Minister, who was the representative of the nation, was of inferior standing. But I dare say this did not matter to the Grand Old Man.

I had some years ago one of her Majesty's judges (Sir Henry Keating) dining with me. Another guest was an English Honorable, who might have been, in regard to age, his son. It seemed to me absurd that the place of honor should not be given to the judge. To make things pleasant to him, I consulted him before the dinner came off on the subject of precedence. "If," he said, "it is a Franco-English dinner, adopt French rules, since you are in France; if it is an English one, adopt English, in which case I go behind the Honorable. Any earl's son old enough to wear a swallow-tailed coat and a white cravat is entitled to take the pas of me. I know that an American judge, accustomed to be looked up to, would not like to walk behind a young sprig of nobility. I remember Evarts, the great American lawyer who pleaded on the side of the United States at the Geneva Arbitral Court, being visibly annoyed at an earl's son who had just left Eton being placed above him at table."

"Badly Crippled."

Rheumatism at its worst is a sort of living death. It chains a man to a chair or binds him to a bed, and metes out to him a daily martyrdom. At the best rheumatism is a painful malady, interfering alike with pleasure and business.

To cure rheumatism it is necessary to eliminate from the blood the acid poisons which are the cause of the disease. This is effectually done by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It carries out of the blood the corrupt and poisonous accumulations which breed and feed disease. It increases the activity of the blood-making glands and sends an increased supply of rich, pure blood through vein and artery to strengthen every organ of the body.

"I had been troubled with rheumatism for twelve years, so bad at times I could not leave my bed," writes Mr. R. L. McKnight, of Cades, Williamsburg Co., S. C. "I was badly crippled. Tried many doctors and two of them gave me up to die. None of them did me much good. The pains in my back, hips and legs (and at times in my head), would nearly kill me. My appetite was very bad. Everybody who saw me said I must die. I took five bottles of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' and four vials of 'Pellets,' and to-day my health is good after suffering twelve years with rheumatism."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are powerful aids to the cleansing of the clogged system. By all dealers in medicine.

Clean Sleeping Places.

At this season of the year the swine need careful watching that their sleeping quarters are in good condition. It will not do to turn the herd to straw stacks, thinking that by so doing they will be comfortably and properly provided by a bed that will keep them warm and comfortable, with no bad results following.

The main feature in the hog bedding is to have it dry and free from manure or heating filth. The hog nest or sleeping apartment should be free from draughts or currents of air. There should be no air blowing in on the hogs while sleeping. This does not imply that the sleeping apartments should be close, low from roof to roof or poorly ventilated; on the contrary, they should be airy, plenty of space for circulation of fresh air. It is a bad plan to have hogs sleep in low, close quarters, where there is a tendency to create a steam or dampness that will settle over the hogs. A clean hog-house, with tight walls, moderate ventilation above to carry off the damp air is the basis of good sleeping accommodation for the swine.

The kind of bedding is a matter that may admit of some difference of opinion. The swine should not be left to the bare floor, without any warm, soft material for bedding. The hog, while indifferent in many ways about its comfort, enjoys a good, soft bed. The hog is also very sensitive to cold, and will always busy itself in carrying straw, leaves and soft materials to make a big, soft bed to sleep in, if left to its own inclinations. This manifestation of instinct should teach every hog-owner the need of supplying the hog with plenty of good, dry material for its nest.

Corn stalks are considered one of the very best bedding materials. Wheat straw is also good, but requires more frequent changing. Give the hogs good, clean bedding, change the bedding frequently and keep the hogs clean and comfortable through the cold season. It will pay. Hogs are worth too much money to handle carelessly in these times of high prices.—Nebraska Farmer.

The Farmyard in Spring.

How it usually looks after the long winter of the north country! Bits of board, scraps of bone, perhaps brought there by the dog, or, what is worse, thrown out there after dinner; wisps of straw, scraps of paper, and all manner of debris scattered there during the cold days of winter, come to light, now that the snow has vanished.

What about it? It ought to be cleared up. You know it. Then why not do it? We live in this world only once. Life is precious to most of us. Pity the man of whom this is not true. More than we know or realise our health and length of life depend upon our farm surroundings. The air we breathe, the water we drink, the light which comes in through our windows all have much to do with the length of our days and the joy of living. All the waste material left by the winter days will surely decay if left where it is, and decay means malaria, which is simply the latter day big word for bad air. The washing from this decaying matter floats along the surface of the ground until it finds its way into the well, bringing back to us impurities which pass into the food we eat and the water we drink. The house drains get stopped and need opening.

But, putting aside all considerations of health, look at the matter from an aesthetic standpoint. How much better it looks to pass a farmhouse the grounds of which are well kept! You have noticed this. You cannot help it. About houses owned by those who "have no time for such things" you have seen indisputable proofs of the fact that the man who lives there thinks that all there is of farming is the money he can get out of the place. Nine times out of ten, if you really know the family sheltered by that house, you would find them ill-natured, hard worked, and generally unhappy. Life has little meaning to its members. Everything about the farm corresponds to the appearance of the grounds around the house. No doubt the boys and girls are just aching to get away from the home to the city. The rundown and slipshod way of keeping the house yard may be taken as a sure index of all the other methods of the farmer.

NERVOUSNESS.

Melancholy or despondency caused by weak unhealthy nerves, are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease.

If you have a secret drain from early abuse, later excesses or exposure, the results are the same. You cannot expect healthy nerves while your vitality is being wasted. Do not live out a miserable existence on account of your youthful follies, you are not safe until cured—nature never excuses—no matter how young, old or innocent one may have been.

If you are tired in the morning, drowsy and sleepy, feel as if you are overworked, pain in the back, deposits in urine, irritable and easily excited, no ambition, memory poor, haggard expression, or other signs of weakness, call and see me, as I guarantee my Latest Method Treatment a positive cure for these conditions, and you pay when cured. MIDY

Anecdotal.

On one occasion, when Robert Fechter, the tragedian, appeared in "Monte Cristo," the curtain rose at twelve-thirty for the last act discovering Fechter in an attitude of contemplation. For some moments he did not make a movement, and not a sound broke the silence, until a small but clear voice in the gallery queried, in tones of anxiety: "I hope we are not keeping you up, sir?"

An English paper tells a good story of a Droitwich barber. He was just finishing lathering a customer and was talking volubly as usual. "Yes, sir," he said, "there's no carelessness allowed by our employer. Every time we cut a customer's face we are fined sixpence, and if we make an ugly gash it costs us a shilling." Then, picking up and brandishing his razor, he added: "But I don't care a rap to-day. I've just won a sovereign."

Parson Twine, the Chesterfieldian sanitary officer and a dog-catcher of Atchison, recently called at a house, says a Kansas City paper, and asked the woman who appeared if she kept a dog. "No, I don't," responded the woman; "look for yourself." "Madam," said Parson Twine, "what sort of an administration would this be if the dog tax collector doubted the word of a lady?" The woman looked at him helplessly for a moment, and then softly said: "I—I—I have one little dog which I will pay on if you say so."

Gen. Sherman was one of the most approachable men who ever commanded a great army. During his famous march to the sea both North and South were completely mystified as to what point he was striking for, and one day an old Georgia planter, who had called at his headquarters and enjoyed his good cheer, asked him plumply if he had any objections to telling where his army was bound. "Not the least," said Sherman. Then leaning over, he whispered in his guest's ear, but so loudly that everybody else in the tent overheard it. "We are going pretty much where we damn please."

The wife of a well-known New York lawyer, who visited London this summer, was operated on for appendicitis in the British metropolis shortly after her arrival there. The first day the patient was able to accompany her husband for a walk she met Ambassador Joseph Choate, an intimate friend, who had shown much solicitude for her recovery. The delighted Mr. Choate greeted the lawyer warmly, but seemed to ignore his wife, who finally said, with a pout: "Why, Mr. Choate, you don't take any notice of me. You haven't spoken a word to me yet. I really believe you have forgotten me." "My dear madam," said Mr. Choate, smiling, "I must confess that I did not recognize you without your appendix."

The methods employed by ex-Governor Throckmorton of Texas to make clear the claims of his clients were perhaps unlike those of any other lawyer, but they often carried conviction with them. At one time he was defending a man who was on trial for murder in Gainesville, Texas. He desired to make it plain to the jury that the man whom his client killed, although in his shirt-sleeves and without a pistol-pocket, might have been well-armed. "Can you see any signs of arms about me?" demanded the general, taking off his coat, and standing before the jurors. They shook their heads. "Watch me!" he said, dramatically, and with that he proceeded to draw a pistol from under each arm, one from each boot-leg, and from the back of his neck a bowie-knife of most sinister aspect.

The following story goes to show that all men have not their price—a theory held by some. It also emphasizes the fact that a rebuke can be more efficiently given quietly than in anger. Once when Gen. Ludlow, then a colonel of engineers, was in charge of some important Government contracts, a contractor came into his office and slipped into his hand a bill of a large denomination, and at the same time spoke of the size of his bid for certain Government works. Col. Ludlow at once made the contractor feel at home by smiling and inviting him to take a chair. Then he handed the contractor a cigar. The visitor by this time was in high feather over the apparent success of his attempt at bribery, but his idea of Ludlow was suddenly changed. "Won't you have a light, too?" asked the colonel, and stepping to the fireplace with the bill he lighted it and politely applied it in a flame to the contractor's cigar, where he held it until it was entirely consumed. It is related that there was a deep silence; then the contractor went away gloomily and never returned.

Progressive Turkish Women.

The first Turkish woman, it is said, who has visited Europe with the object of exposing the unhappy condition of her countrywomen is the Princess Hairie Ben-Ayad, who is now in London with her husband, Ali Nouri Bey, lately consul-general of Turkey in Rotterdam. The princess is declared to be well educated and accomplished, and expects to give a course of lectures on social conditions in Turkey, in which she hopes to arouse sentiment against the existing state of affairs. Her husband is well known as a leader of the Turkish Legitimist party, which is working for the release of Murad V. from prison, where his brother, the reigning Sultan, placed him on the plea of insanity. It is said in political circles that the accession of Murad to the throne would introduce a progressive policy into Turkish governmental affairs. The princess, who is deeply interested in these plans, is the daughter of the late Mahmoud Pacha Ben-Ayad of Tunis, a friend of Napoleon III. and prominent during his reign in Paris society.

Labor-Saving but Oath-Producing.

SPEAKING of the introduction in Eastern telephone exchanges of the "line-busy" phonograph attachments, the "Argonaut" remarks that in the effete East these innovations may possibly be tamely received, but they had a short life in San Francisco. When some bright telephone clerk conceived the plan of saving another clerk's wages by putting on a phonograph to say, "Line is busy," it was received with rejoicing by the telephone stockholders in San Francisco. But the telephone subscribers did not like it at all, and did not hesitate to say so. On the first day of the innovation the startled telephone subscribers listened in wonder to the mechanical moaning, squeaking and buzzing of the phonograph droning out: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy—line—is—busy—we—will—call—you." The machine, naturally, was deaf to expostulation or enquiry. To polite dissent and to fiery oaths it returned the same monotonous groan: "We—will—call—you—line—is—busy." Goaded by this automatic barking, the most mild-mannered men became temporarily maddened. On that famous first day the telephone scenes in the various clubs were peculiar. From the telephone closets there would come at intervals wild bursts of oaths and sometimes maniac laughter. The attendants would hasten to the telephone temple, and assist forth congested millionaires, purple-faced, pop-eyed, apoplectic. They were speechless—all they could do was to shake their fists at the telephone. When a mining millionaire from Mexico, newly arrived that day, suddenly burst out of the telephone closet clamoring for an axe with which to attack the instrument, the club manager grew apprehensive. When, later in the day, an alcoholic millionaire could not wait for an axe, but demolished the telephone with a heavy, silver-headed cane, the manager concluded to take prudential measures and ask the telephone company to switch off the phonograph. Which was done. This was the end of the telephone-phonograph in the San Francisco clubs, and not long after it was disused throughout the city generally. This experience is respectfully submitted by the "Argonaut" for the consideration of Eastern cities.

Suicide Contagious.

Mayor Morse, of Emporia, Kan., asked the editors of Emporia papers recently to refrain from publishing details of suicides. He said that the publication of such details had caused an epidemic of suicides in that community in the last two years. He had consulted with the Board of Health, and thought that if the papers would not comply with his request he had a right to stop summarily the publication of suicide details under a law providing for the suppression of epidemics.

"If the paper," he said, "on which these local papers are printed had been kept in a place infected with smallpox I could demand that the papers quit using that paper or stop publication. If they spread another contagion, the contagious suggestion of suicide, I believe the liberty of the press is not to be considered before the public welfare, and that the courts would sustain me in using force to prevent the publication of papers containing matter clearly deleterious to the public health.

"However, no such steps need be taken. Mr. White, of the 'Gazette;' Mr. Strong, of the 'Republican,' and Mr. Yearout, of the 'Times,' are in sympathy with me in this movement and will suppress the details of suicides until the epidemic subsides."

Sunshine.

After a morn of dreary rain
The sullen clouds withdrew,
The summer sun shone forth again
From skies of dazzling blue:

Sorrow and suffering was my dole,
But you have banished pain—
Your love shone through my lonely soul
Like sunshine after rain!

—Eileen Benson.

Where There Is No Degeneracy.

A delightful article by Mr. Frank Beddard, of the London Zoological Gardens, in the "Pall Mall Magazine," makes one suspect that the only spot in civilization where degeneracy has not begun is the "Zoo." Mr. Beddard takes us through the great menagerie which is under his supervision, and shows us many distinguished inmates at dinner. The hippopotamus is an enviable gourmet. He has been thirty-seven years at the "Zoo," and has had only one attack of indigestion. On that grave occasion he was cured with forty (or eighty) drops of croton oil, administered in a bun. Happy beast! No visits to specialists at a guinea a visit! No anxious trials of patent medicines, advertised in the evening papers with portraits of the cures! Down went the bun, and Hippo was himself again! The Australian cassowary consumes everything (except the missionary and his hymn-book), and never knows what indigestion means. Excellent living (Mr. Beddard's statistics of the food are staggering) and leisured ease make astonishing longevity at the "Zoo." There was a Madagascar parrot who flourished in captivity for fifty-four years, and goodness knows how old he was when he retired to Regent's Park. Possibly he became a centenarian. The official records apparently neglect to state his views of life.

Incident at Pekin.

Probably the most amusing incident of the siege of Pekin, says Henry Savage Landor, occurred on July 22, 1900, when the Dowager-Empress sent a hundred melons, some cucumbers and egg-plant as a present to the Chinese soldiers at the barricades. The servants who brought them misunderstood the order, and handed over the whole lot to the foreign soldiers, also at their barricade. The vegetables were hauled in with due haste, as soon as the guards got over their first astonishment at the handsome gift; but no doubt the person most astonished of all was the messenger on his return to the Dowager-Empress. It is not improbable that the misplaced melons cost him his life.

Dooley on the Medical Profession.

HENNESSY having expressed the opinion that Christian Science is all foolishness, "Well, sir, who can tell?" said Mr. Dooley. "If it wasn't f'r progress, I'd be sure the Christyan Scientists was wrong. But th' doctor who attinded me whin I was young 'd be thought as loonatical if he was alive to-day as th' mos' Christyan Scientist that iver rayjooced a swellin' over a long-distance tillyphone. He inthrajooced near th' whole parish into this life iv sin an' sorrow, he give us calomel with a shovel, bled us like a polis captain, an' niver thought anny medicine was good if it didn't choke ye goin' down. I can see him now as he come up dhrivin' an ol' gray an' yellow horse in a buggy. He had whiskers that he cud tie in a knot round his waist, an' him an' th' priest was th' on'y two men in th' neighborhood that carried a goold watch. He used to say 'twas th' healthiest parish in th' wurruld, barrin' hangin's an' thransportations, an' thim come in Father Hickey's province. Ivrybody thought he was a gr-reat man, but they wudden't lave him threat a spavin in these days. He was catch-as-catch-can, an' he'd tackle annything fr'm pneumony iv th' lungs to premachure baldness. He'd niver heerd iv microbes, an' nayther did I till a few yeafs ago, whin I was tol' they was a kind iv animals or bugs that crawled around in ye like spiders. I see pitchers iv thim in th' pa-apers with eyes like pooched eggs, till I dhreamed wan night I was a hayloft full iv bats. Thin th' dock down th' sthreet set me r-right. He says th' microbes is a vigitable, an' ivry man is like a conservatory full iv millyons iv these potted plants.

"Well, that sounds all right, an' I sind f'r a doctor. 'Dock,' says I, 'me vilets ar-re thinnin' out, an' I feel as though I was full iv sage brush,' I say. Th' dock puts a glass chube in me mouth an' says, 'Don't bite it.' 'D'ye think I'm a glass eater?' says I, talkin' through me teeth like a Kerry lawyer. 'What's it f'r?' I says. 'To take ye'er timprachoor,' says he. About th' time I'm r-ready to sthrangle he removes th' chube. 'How high does she spout?' says I. 'Ninety-nine,' says he. 'Good hivens,' says I. 'Don't come near me, dock, or you'll be sun sthruck.' I says. 'I've just examined ye'er blood,' he says. 'Ye're full iv weeds,' he says. Be that time I'm scared to death, an' I say a few prayers, whin he fixes a hose to me chest an' begins listenin'. 'Annything goin' on inside?' says I. 'Tis ye'er heart,' says he. 'Glory be,' says I. 'What's th' matther with that ol' ingine?' says I. 'I cud tell ye,' he says, 'but I'll have to call in Dock Viathricle, th' specyalist,' he says. 'I oughtn't be lookin' at ye'er heart at all,' he says. 'I niver larned below th' chin, an' I'd be fired be th' Union if they knew I was wurrukin' on th' heart,' he says. So he sinds f'r Dock Vinthricle, an' th' dock climbs me chest an' listens, an' thin he says, 'They'se something the matter with his lungs, too,' he says. 'At times they're full iv air an' again,' he says, 'they ain't,' he says. 'Sind f'r Bellows,' he says. Bellows comes and pounds me as though I was a roof he was shinglin', an' havin' accidentally hit me below th' belt, he sinds for Dock Laporattony, an' th' Dock sticks his finger into me as far as th' knuckle.

"He shakes his head an' goes out iv th' room with th' others, an' they talk it over at tin dollars a minyit while I'm layin' there at two dollars a day—docked. Whin they come back, wan iv thim says, 'This here is a mos' inthrestin' case an' we must have th' whole class take a look into it,' he says. It means me, Hinnissy. 'Dock,' he says, 'ye will remove its brain. Vinthricle, ye will have its heart; an', Bellows, ye will take its lungs. As f'r me,' he says, 'I will add wan more vermiform appindix to me belt,' he says. 'Tis sthrange how our foolish predecessors,' says he, 'niver got on to th' dangers iv th' vermiform appindix,' he says. 'I have no doubt that that's what kilt Methusalem,' he says. So they mark out their wurruk on me with a piece iv red chalk, an' if I get well, I look like a rag carpet. Sometimes they lave things in ye, Hinnissy. I knowed a man wanst—Moriarty was his name, Tim Moriarty—an' he had to be hemstitched hurridly because they was goin' to be a ball game that day, an' they locked up in him two sponges, a saw, an' ice pick, a goold watch, an' a pair iv curlin'-irons belongin' to wan iv the nurses. He tol' me he didn't feel well, but he didn't think annything iv it till he noticed that he jingled whin he walked.

"That's what they do with ye nowadays, Hinnissy. Ivry time I go into Dock Cassidy's office, he gives me a look that makes me wisht I'd wore a suit iv chain armor. His eyes seem to say, 'Can I come in?' Between th' Christyan Scientists an' him, 'tis a question iv whether ye want to be threated like a loonytic or like a can iv presarved vigitables. Father Kelly says th' styles iv medicine changes like th' styles iv hats. Whin he was a boy, they give ye quinine f'r whativer ailed ye, an' now they give ye sthrychnine, an' nex' year they'll be givin' ye prooshic acid, maybe. He says they're findin' new things th' matther with ye ivry day, an' ol' things that have to be taken out, until th' time is comin' whin not more thin half iv us 'll be rale an' th' rest 'll be rubber. He says they ought to enforce th' law iv assault with a deadly weepin' again th' doctors. He says that if they knew less about pizen an' more about gruel an' opened fewer patients an' more windows, they'd not be so manny Christyan Scientists. He says th' diff'rence between Christyan Scientists an' doctors is that Christyan Scientists thinks they'se no such thing as disease, an' doctors thinks there ain't annything else. An' there ye ar-re."

"What d'ye think about it?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"I think," said Mr. Dooley, "that if th' Christyan Scientists had some science an' th' doctors more Christyanity, it wudden't make anny diff'rence which ye called in—if ye had a good nurse."

"I understand that Freeman has come to the conclusion to contest his wife's will." "Well, what is there dangerous about that? She's dead, isn't she?"—Richmond "Dispatch."

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY

—OR—

THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Willful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

And in that moment, while his kisses were upon her lips, the horrible thought swept over her heart that she did not love him. With the changing of the hour she had repented bitterly that she had been persuaded into marrying him. Young as she was, she realized dimly that it was a strange, foolish, mad marriage; yet it was legal and binding. She was Harold St. John's bride.

She turned to him with wondering eyes.

"Harold," she said quickly, "why did the minister call me Lillian Ruthven?"

He looked down at her smiling, as he answered, gallantly:

"Because you were Lillian Ruthven; but you are Lillian Ruthven no longer. You are Lillian St. John now—my wife."

"I do not understand you, Harold," said Daisy, in growing dismay. "Lillian Ruthven, the heiress at Briar hall, is a far different person from me, only poor little Daisy Gordon, a farmer's daughter."

He sprang from her side as though he had received a terrible blow.

"Tell me!" he cried, grasping her arm so tightly that poor Daisy was startled by his fierceness; "surely there has been no mistake. You are, or were, Lillian Ruthven, the heiress?"

"If you thought that, you were mistaken, Harold," she said. "I wondered why you always called me Lily. Can it be that you thought me the heiress?"

"Yes, I—I thought so," he answered slowly, and his voice was so hoarse and unnatural, it frightened poor Daisy.

"But now you know that I am only Daisy Gordon, a farmer's daughter, does it make any difference, Harold?" she asked, piteously.

He had drawn back from her with a face as white as death.

"And I have risked so much for this!" he cried, with a mirthless laugh terrible to hear.

In a flash poor Daisy understood the bitter, cruel truth.

"If you married me for money, believing you had married Lillian Ruthven, the heiress, you have been strangely misled. Oh, Harold, is it true? tell me that it is not, that you married me because you loved me, or I shall fall dead at your feet," she sobbed wildly.

He shook off the clinging clasp of those white hands impatiently enough.

"Of course I cared for you; but you may as well know the truth," he added, thinking little enough of her woe in the chagrin of his own defeat. "Unless I had believed you to be Lillian Ruthven whom I was wooing, I should have been away from here days ago, and—— No, I should never have married you."

Those were the cruelest words that ever broke a young girl's heart. Without a cry, without a moan, Daisy threw up her hands and fell down in a lifeless heap at his feet.

And in that instant he heard the sound of approaching footsteps. Before Harold St. John could spring forward to raise her, a man's form appeared around the curve of the path. Harold St. John stepped quickly to one side, devoutly hoping the little slim figure would not be observed lying amid the tall grass.

Was it possible the man was searching for some one or something?

In an instant he had espied the little figure in the grass.

He sprung forward with a mighty cry, and flung himself down on his knees in the grass beside her, crying:—

"Great God! it is Daisy. My darling! my little Daisy; she is dead!"

But no, the heart throbbed ever so faintly.

With a fervent "Thank God, she is alive!" Farmer Gordon, for it was he, raised the slight, limp figure in his stalwart arms, and started down the path that led over the hills to the farmhouse.

CHAPTER VI.

What Occurred at the Grand Ball.

When Daisy opened her eyes to consciousness, she found herself lying in her own little room at the farmhouse, with Margy and her father bending anxiously over her.

She starts up with a wild, piteous cry.

"Was it all a dream, papa?" she asks, in an awful whisper, raising a pair of terrified blue eyes to his sunburned face.

"It's not a dream, child; you fainted by the roadside. What was the cause of it?"

Daisy tried to speak; but no word fell from her white lips.

"You'd been gone a long time, lass," he went on, "and I started out in search of you; I thought, mayhap, you'd fallen asleep somewhere, and as I walked along the path that leads over the hill, I saw you lying all in a white heap in the long grass by the roadside, an' I picked you up and brought you home. You gave me a mighty scare, lass — a mighty

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the diseases have been standing for many years, the most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

The Northern Life Assurance Company of Canada.

FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT

The sixth annual meeting of the shareholders of the Northern Life Assurance Company of Canada was held on Monday, March 10, at their offices in the Temple Building, London, Ont.

In the absence of the President, the Hon. Mr. Justice Mills, Mr. T. H. Purdom, K.C., first vice-president, occupied the chair, and Mr. Francis Love, Police Magistrate of London, acted as secretary.

The directors are well satisfied with the results of the past year. The company has made substantial progress in every department, is constantly enlarging the volume of its business, and extending the area over which its operations are carried on.

The company is constantly strengthening its agency department, and has now a splendid staff of agents, who are working loyally for the company, and to whose energy and capacity is due in a large measure the gratifying results of the past year.

The amount of insurance written during the year was $1,267,500, and the amount in force at the end of the year was $2,769,870, and the net increase $704,670.

The total amount of death claims paid up to the 31st day of December last was $20,858.96, and the interest earned up to that time was $35,152.69, the amount of death claims being 65 per cent. of the expectation. The assets of the company have increased by the sum of $79,661.05. These facts show the care with which the business is being conducted, the death claims being more than met by the interest earned. These death claims are less than the amount calculated according to the mortality tables upon which the premiums are based.

The assets of the company in cash or its equivalent now amount to the sum of $284,271.05. This is exclusive of subscribed and uncalled capital.

The steady progress being made by the company is due to a continuance of the policy of caution and progress which has from the commencement been the policy of the directors of the company. Much energy and care has been given to the conduct of the business of the company, and the directors believe a continuance of that policy will maintain the company in its present position among the safest and best life assurance companies of Canada, and produce profits and results satisfactory to the shareholders as soon as such can, consistently with the absolute safety of the policy-holders, be expected.

The results achieved are viewed with satisfaction, and the future is looked forward to with confidence.

To the managing director, officers and staff of agents most is due for the progress made in building up the business of the company.

All the directors retire annually and are eligible for re-election.

Respectfully submitted DAVID MILLS, President.

At a subsequent meeting of the board of Directors, Hon. Mr. Justice Mills was re-elected president, with T. H. Purdom, Esq., K.C., first vice-president, and Thomas Long, Esq., second vice-president.

Permanent Cures of Cancer

We here give a few cases, where the efficacy of our constitutional treatment in curing Cancer is established beyond all question. We have plenty on fyle.

There is ample proof that where our remedy cures, it cures to stay and saves people from the torture of knife and plaster.

CANCER OF THE BREAST—A lady had Cancer of the Breast, which rendered her right shoulder and arm almost helpless. Our remedy cured her over five years ago, and there is not the slightest return of the trouble.

CANCER OF THE FACE—This case of a gentleman who was so bad that his right cheek was almost eaten off with the disease. Plasters aggrevated his trouble. Our treatment cured him five years ago and he has been all right since.

CANCER OF THE STOMACH—Doctors pronounced the trouble cancer of the stomach. There was vomiting of material that looked like coffee grounds. Great weakness and prostration. Cured over four years ago and well to-day.

CANCER OF THE NOSE—A severe case which was cured by our remedy in 1891 and has never returned to this day.

Full accounts of the above cases, together with the names and addresses of the persons, are given in our new book, "Cancer, its cause and Cure," sent to anyone, in plain wrapper, on receipt of two stamps. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

An Observing Barber

A certain local barber has a way of astonishing a customer once in a while. "You're left handed," he remarked to a man he was shampooing, when a Times reporter happened to be "next." "Yes," replied the other. "You probably saw me hang up my hat." "No," said the barber, "I have other ways of finding out such things. In addition to knowing that you are left-handed I know that you are a book-keeper by profession." "Explain," demanded the customer, after admitting that the barber was right. "It's easy," went on the tonsorial artist. "In shampooing your head I noticed ink on your hair at the left temple. This ink, I deduced, must have got there from a pen resting on your left ear, which indicated that you were a person who used a pen a great deal, as only such persons use their ears as penracks. That didn't convince me that you were a book-keeper, however, because a literary man might stick his pen behind his ear for convenience. I learned of your profession when I applied the lather. This made the ink on your hair wash out, and I discovered two shades of ink—red and black. Nobody but book-keepers use red and black ink in their quill-driving, so it was easy to class you as a book-keeper. I know you were left-handed because the ink was on the left side—the side that a left-handed writer would involuntarily use when sticking his pen back of his ear." "Wonderful, wonderful," remarked the customer: "but suppose you shave me instead of talking so much."

SCIENTIFIC PALMISTRY

There are many individuals still who do not believe in the science of Palmistry and who think it is a species of fortune telling. This is an altogether mistaken idea because it is a science that has been brought forth after years of deepest study and thought.

Prof. O'Brien, the expert palmist, who is staying in town for a short time is recognized as the leading palmist in the world to-day. He has given this wonderful subject his deepest and most careful attention for a number of years with the result that his name is known everywhere and he meets thousands of people every year who recognize him to be the leading man in the profession. For some time past the authorities in Toronto have been trying to put a stop to the business. After considerable trouble on the part of the authorities to get information a case was brought up in the court in which two people were charged with fortune-telling by reading a persons hand. The case was argued before Judge McDougall, who after hearing the evidence of the crown witnesses, took the case from the jury, and dismissed the case. The judge held that reading the palm of the hand was not illegal

Another case was brought before the learned judge and it was dismissed on the same grounds. This proves fully that palmistry is a real and genuine science. The courts have said it is so in their action in dismissing the charge referred to.

Professor O'Brien will remain in town for a few days longer and will be pleased to see those who wish to call on him professionally at his private office.

DEMAND INCREASE OF $15,000

The Town Trust Commissioners Will Ask for About $4,000 More Than Last Year

At a meeting of the Town Trust Commissioners on Tuesday afternoon the estimated payments by the town to the commissioners for the current year were made up to be presented to the Council. The amount will be about $16,000 greater than last year, when the demand was $12,000. The increase is made up of an item of about $12,000 for sinking fund and interest on the water works debentures and about $4000 for local improvements, mostly for granolithic sidewalks.

The general rate will not be effected to very great extent by this demand. The water-works are self-sustaining and will yield a revenue. The new side walks are paid for partly by the property benefitted, the proportion being 60 per cent by the property owner and 40 per cent by the town.

A BLIND WANDERER

Didn't Know That Food Could Restore Her

A well-known writer uses Grape-Nuts as a tonic when feeling the effects of extra heavy work. She writes, "Grape-Nuts should be taken regularly as one would a tonic. I eat mine cold in the morning with hot milk or cream poured over it, and it is delicious, nourishing and strengthening.

Some time ago I said to a lady friend who was a great sufferer from dyspepsia and has been an invalid for five years, and who was a mere skeleton. 'If I had only known you sooner you need not have suffered all these years.' She looked at me in surprise and asked me what I would have done. 'I should have put you on Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food,' I replied, quite confidently. 'Did you ever hear of it?' Oh, yes, she had heard of it but never tried it as she had never had her attention called to it especially and had not thought it applied to her needs.

'Now,' I said, 'If you will just set about it and try Grape-Nuts for a week, three times a day, I will guarantee you will rise up and call me blessed.'

She took my advice and followed it faithfully. When I saw her about a week later she looked like a different person although she had only gained two pounds in weight, but said she felt so much better and stronger, and has greatly improved in health and strength since using the food.

She is getting well and you can imagine her delight is unbounded. My own experience and that of others is sufficient evidence of the scientific value of a food that supplies nourishment to the system and builds up the brain and nerve centers." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE HOCKEY CLUB BANQUET LAST NIGHT

Gold Watches Presented to the Players, Trainers, and Manager.

RECEIVE O. H. A. SOUVENIRS.

The complimentary Banquet tendered by the officers of the Hockey Club to the members of the Intermediate Championship team was given in the Oriental hotel last night. About forty-five guests were present, among whom were: President Kenner, Vice Pres; T. F. Matthews, Chaplain; Rev. W. L. Armitage, Secy, Treas; A. W. McPherson, Asst. Secy.-Treas; H. Rush, W. A. Buchanan, O.H.A. representative; Messrs. Kerr, J. McCabe, R. M. Roy, Alex Gibson, M. J. Tooley, A. McIntosh, J. Comstock, R. Watt, J. Gibson, W. Bunton, F. Clarke, W. Breen, A. A. Hollingshead, R. F. McWilliams, H. Edmison, H. Thompson, Dr. Scott, D. Davidson, C. H. Bradburn, W. Stocker, Ed. Dillon and the members of the Championship Team and a number of others.

The first duty was to fully discuss the excellent spread served by Mine Host, Geo. Graham. The menu card was very neatly gotten up in the form of a folder. It contained a list of the games played and victories won by the Peterborough team in the Junior and Intermediate series, the toast list and a list of the officers of the club.

The menu was tastefully gotten up and the names of the following tempting dishes appeared on the list.

After full attention had been paid to the various dishes, Mr. Kenner, chairman read letters of regret from a number of those invited but who found it impossible to attend, as business demanded their attention elsewhere.

The toast list was entered upon the first toast being.

THE KING

which was proposed by Rev. W. L. Armitage, Chaplain of the club. In opening his remarks, Mr. Armitage said it gave him very great pleasure to be present on this occasion and to leave an opportunity of congratulating the members not only on winning the Intermediate Championship but also to congratulate them on the reports he had received of their most gentlemanly conduct on the ice and off. He considered this a matter of great satisfaction to the town that their boys had behaved as perfect gentlemen whenever they went. He was proud to think that two members of the team had been for sometime under his supervision and members of his Sunday School. He took great pleasure in proposing the toast of the King.

The toast of the

ONTARIO HOCKEY ASSOCIATION

was proposed by Mr. A. W. McPherson in a very able speech, in which he outlined the action of the O.H.A. as far as it concerned Peterborough in the different matches for the intermediate cup. The toast was ably responded to by Mr. W. A. Buchanan, who expressed his pleasure at being once more among the boys with whom he had worked for some time. He congratulated the team on their victory, and on the very gentlemanly way they had conducted themselves during the season.

Mr. Kenner spoke a few words in appreciation of the excellent services Mr. Buchanan had rendered to the sporting world. He had always taken and active part in sports and since his removal to Toronto had always assisted Peterborough teams in every way he could. He said he had a very pleasant duty to perform, and that was to present Mr. Buchanan with a box of very fine cigars as a gift from the Hockey Club.

At this juncture, Mr. Walter Stocker rendered a solo in a very pleasing manner.

Mr. Buchanan then proceeded to distribute to the members of the team the souvenir from the O.H.A., which was a gold stick-pin, in the form of a hockey stick, with a pearl setting representing a puck.

The toast to

THE INTERMEDIATE CHAMPIONS

was proposed by Mr. Kerr, and responded to by Mr. R. M. Glover, captain of the team. At the conclusion of his address, he presented the puck that was used in Galt to Mr. Kenner, as a souvenir, and the one used against Port Hope to Mr. McPherson. These pucks were neatly mounted in silver, and bear appropriate inscriptions. The recipeants replied in neatly worded speeches.

Mr. Kenner then, on behalf of the the club, presented to each of the members of the team, the trainers and the manager, a gold watch, suitably inscribed. Captain Glover, on behalf of the team, thanked the club for their kind remembrance, and assured them that the team would always strive to do credit to the town.

KINDRED SPORTS.

was proposed by Mr. T. F. Matthews, and responded to by Messrs. McWilliams, McPherson, Davidson and Tooley.

Mr. W. Breen favored the guests with a short recitation and song which was followed by a selection by the orchestra.

THE LADIES

was proposed by Mr. Kenner, and responded to by Messrs Bradburn and McWilliams.

THE PRESS

was proposed by Mr. W. Bunton, and responded to by Messrs. Clarry, Moore Buchanan and Hall.

The affair was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King." During the evening music was supplied by Prof. Gliddon's orchestra, which was greatly appreciated by all present.

Spring Wretchedness, Misery and Suffering Permanently Banished When You Use Paine's Celery Compound

A Cured and Grateful Lady Says "I Can Honestly Say I Would Not Be Living To-day if it Had Not Been for Your Wonderful Remedy

A few words to weak, brokendown, nervous and sick women at this time, and the perusal of Mrs. Charette's letter, will, we trust, kindle hope and inspire fresh confidence in many a home where some loved mother, wife or daughter is hovering between life and death. At this season, thousands are nearing the grave; they can be saved by the prompt use of Paine's Celery Compound. Mrs. Chas. Charette, Chambly, P.Q. writes as follows for the benefit of sick and ailing women:

"I can honestly say I would not be living to-day if it had not been for your wonderful remedy. For a long time I suffered terribly from nervousness, sleeplessness, head and stomach troubles, and never received much benefit from ordinary medical treatment. I heard of your Paine's Celery Compound and was strongly urged to give it a trial, and I have good reason to thank God that I did so.

"I can now eat and sleep soundly, and my nervousness is a thing of the past. I now feel perfectly rested after a night's sleep, which was never the case before using the compound. My neighbors, who know how I formerly suffered, are surprised at the grand cure made by your medicine, and some of them are using it now. I thank you sincerely for the honest results given by Paine's Celery Compound."

QUIRK HAD A QUARREL WITH SOME STRANGER

Porter of The Commercial Hotel Saw Two Men Engaged in a Quarrel on the Evening of the Murder

(Special Telegram to The Times)

Brantford, March 27. — Interesting developments are taking place in the Quirk murder case. It now transpires that late on the evening of the murder, the porter of the Commercial Hotel, who sleeps in a room which overlooks the stable, heard voices in the stable yard. He looked out of the window, and saw two men there quarreling. He watched them until he saw one of them go in the direction of the stable, and the other return to the hotel. It is now recollected by some employes of the hotel who were in the office earlier in the evening that a stranger called and asked for Quirk. Quirk was out; but the caller left a message to the effect that he would see him later. The stranger was not seen around the premises after that time. The story of the quarreling in the stable yard is satisfactorily corroborated by other persons in the hotel, who also heard the men there. It is, of course, not certain that this talking had any connection with the crime, for it is not an uncommon thing for men to be in the yard during the evenings. The inquest will be continued to-night, when the report of the autopsy will be presented.

NATIONS ARE FED ON GUFF AND LIES COLONIALS SHOT THEIR PRISONERS

Two Suffered the Penalty of Death and Another Sentenced to Twenty-Five Years' Imprisonment--French Papers Printing Twaddle About the Boers.

London, March 21.—Commenting on the absurd speculations and conjectures regarding the Boer leaders' mission that are being published in the French capital, the Paris correspondent of the Times says those who produce them are as ignorant as the public for whom they are written. It, says the correspondent, is difficult to account for such recklessness in dealing with external affairs except in the hypothesis that France is bored and that the press is ignorant of what ish appening in the Transvaal. Knowing the avidity of the public for any relief from monotony, the papers accept the most improbable rumors. The correspondent observes that the French papers have on the whole ceased to provide attractive reading as regards home politics. They indulge in partisan and exaggerated attacks on their opponents, which they repeat every day. Wherever people read the newspaprs in order to pass the time one sees them take up one journal after another, glance at them, then throw them down, proving that the people are tired of the pabulum which used to amuse, and frequently influance, them.

COLONIAL OFFICERS SHOT PRISONERS

London, March 28.—It is reported that four officers of the Bushveldt Carbineers, a South African colonial corps, have been severely punished for shooting a number of Boers who had surrendered as prisoners of war. The accused were convicted, and two of them were shot and one sentenced to twenty-five years' penal servitude. The fourth officer acted as King's evidence, and was sentenced to deportation.

GERMAN PAPERS REFUSE TO DO BRITAIN JUSTICE

Papers of the Empire Refuse to Open Their Columns to Refutations of Slanderous Statements Regarding British Statesmen

London, March 28.—The Berlin correspondent of The Times says that with rare exceptions the German journals refuse to open their columns to authentic impartial refutations of false slanderous statements being circulated in Germany regarding British statesmen and soldiers. The papers continue to print articles reflecting on the humanity and honor of Britain in Africa.

KRUGER ON THE DEATH OF RHODES.

London, March 28.—The Amsterdam correspondent of The Daily Express says that when Kruger was informed of Cecil Rhodes' death he repeated, "The Lord giveth, the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

NO MORE GERMAN VISITS.

Berlin, March 28.—Prince Adelbert will not visit the United States. Before Prince Henry came to America it had been the intention to keep up a series of visits between Germany and the United States, Count von Waldersee being timed to follow Prince Henry. This idea has been abandoned. The leading papers are troubled by a report that Senator Lodge is to be made Secretary of State, as they regard him as the leader of the anti-German element in Congress.

ABSURD SPECULATIONS IN FRANCE

London, March 28.—The Paris correspondent of The Times, commenting on the absurd speculations and conjectures regarding the Boer leaders' mission now being published, says it is difficult to account for such recklessness in dealing with external affairs except on the hypothesis that France is bored and the press ignorant of what is happening in the Transvaal. Knowing the avidity of the public for relief from monotony, the papers accept improbable rumors.

JAMACA'S GOVERNOR IN CUBA

Sir Augustus Hemming Visits the New Republic of Cuba To Morrow

Kingston, Jamaica, March 28 — Sir Augustus Hemming, the governor of Jamaica, accompanied by Lady Hemming, will leave here to-morrow for Santiago de Cuba, to repay, with the consent of Mr. Chamberlain, the British colonial secretary, the visit made to Jamaica last November by General Leonard Wood, the governor general of Cuba. Sir Augustus and Lady Hemming will be conveyed to Santiago by the government yacht Kanawha and will stay several days in Cuba.

NORTHWEST WHEAT FROZEN

Large Grain Area in Western States Destroyed by Frost

Tacoma, Wash., March 28 — Reports received here indicate that 300,000 acres of fall sown wheat have been frozen in the region north of Snake river. The extent of damage done by winter freezes in this region was not known conclusively until the last week or so, when spring thaws demonstrated it. Large areas have been frozen also in south-eastern Washington and north-eastern Oregon and in the Big Bend district, and it is estimated that altogether approximately a million acres of grain have been damaged. Manitoba wheat has not suffered so heavily.

CECIL RHODES GRIEVED AT WORK UNDONE

Recently Mourned That He Had to Leave so Much Unaccomplished

London, March 28.— Many tributes are paid to the life of Mr. Cecil Rhodes in the newspapers to-day, and his death is generally recognized as a dire calamity to the Empire. Although he lost considerable prestige as a result of the Jameson Raid, he was in a fair way to regain power. Mr. Rhodes shared with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Barton the distinction of being a great Imperialist among colonial statesmen.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FUNERAL.

Some of Mr. Rhodes' most intimate friends will proceed at once to the Matoppo Hills, in the neighborhood of Buluwayo, Rhodesia, to determine the practicability of carrying out the deceased financier's wish that he be buried in that vicinity, the possession of which to the British Empire resulted from nothing so much as his enterprise and strenuous diplomatic ability. It was here that Rhodes met the Matabele Chiefs in 1896 and arranged a settlement of the campaign. Buluwayo also marks the southern terminus of the financier's famous project, the Cape to Cairo line.

A DISTINGUISHED CAREER.

Cecil Rhodes' all-round success, as a diamond digger, financier, politician and Empire builder, was phenomenal. He was ranching in Natal when the Kimberly Diamond Fields were discovered, and with an elder brother joined in the rush after the glittering jewels. Returning to Oxford to complete his education, he graduated in 1881 and returned to Africa, the scene of his life's work.

Mr. Rhodes was extremely fortunate in his mining operations. A few years ago his fortune was estimated at $40,000,000. Having acquired great wealth and the confidence of the financial world, Mr. Rhodes was prepared to begin the realization of his dream of Empire, and he entered Cape politics in 1881 as member for Barkly West. The same year he met General Gordon, and the two became fast friends. He entered the Scanlen (Cape Colony) Ministry and became an aggressive expansionist. But President Kruger was also an expansionist, and during the long delay entailed by the negotiations in 1883, regarding boundary disputes, his forces had entered the territory already ceded to Great Britain. Mr. Rhodes called out troops, and succeeded in driving out the Boers.

EXPANSION WITH HOME RULE.

A writer, dealing with Mr. Rhodes' political belief, says:—"The diamond-digger statesman is a democratic imperialist. He believes in England and the English flag, and the English Empire, but he believes in a democracy within the Empire. He wants the Empire, but he wants with equal sincerity the independence of every State within the Imperial Government. Mr. Rhodes contributed £10,000 towards the Irish home rule fund. He took the territory of the natives by strategy and by force and gave them an independent government with home rule."

HIS NOMINAL DISGRACE.

Mr. Rhodes was Premier of Cape Colony till 1896, holding until 1894 the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands, and from 1894 to 1896 was Minister of Native Affairs. After the Jameson raid he was nominally disgraced. He was a prominent figure early in the Boer war, and was in Kimberley during the siege, being active in the defence of the city. President Kruger, it is said, offered $25,000 for him, dead or alive. On the relief of Kimberley Mr. Rhodes went to Cape Town and resumed the care of his financial interests.

Cape Town, March 28.— The preparations for the State funeral of Cecil Rhodes, which will take place here April 3, are already in progress. Flags are half-masted everywhere.

Those who attended the sick bed of Mr. Rhodes say he continually sorrowed over the fact that he left so much unaccomplished. "So little done, so much to do," was an expression which he used more than once.

During Mr. Rhodes' illness all kinds of novel means were utilized to counteract the trying heat. Boxes of ice were let into the roof of the seaside cottage at Muizenburg, where he died. Yesterday punkas were continually kept in motion, and extra windows were cut in the walls.

NO EFFECT ON STOCKS.

London, March 28. — The Rhodesian section of the Colonial Exhibition at the Royal Exchanges has been draped in black. Numerous expressions of regret and condolence have been cabled by members of the Stock Exchange and others interested in South Africa.

After a slight hesitation at the opening of the Stock Exchanges the tone of Kaffirs was distinctly firmer, showing that Mr. Rhodes' death had been discounted.

A GREAT IMPERIALIST

London, March 28.— The death of Mr. Cecil Rhodes is generally recognized as a calamity for the Empire. He had succeeded in living down the prejudice excited by the Jameson raid, and, despite his secret connection with the earlier stages of that intrigue against the Boer Republics, he was not unpopular with the Dutch in the colony. He would inevitably have returned to power if he had lived to witness the close of the war, and his influence would have been strongly exerted in race reconciliation. Mr. Rhodes shared with Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Mr. Barton the distinction of being a great Imperialist among colonial statesmen. He was badly advised by his brother at Johannesburg before the Jameson raid, and was misled by Dr. Jameson himself, who had been infatuated with the story of Clive in India. But the great services rendered by him to the Empire have not been forgotten.

TRIBUTES IN LONDON.

London, March 28. —The newspapers this morning pay tribute to the career of Mr. Rhodes. He is spoken of as one of the greatest of Britain's sons. There will be a public funeral at Cape Town, and the deceased statesman will afterwards be laid to rest in Matoppo Hills, where he held a conference with the Matabele chiefs and practically brought to a conclusion the native war of 1896.

KRUGER ON RHODES.

London, March 28. — On the news of Cecil Rhodes' death being conveyed to him, Paul Kruger said: "The Lord giveth, the Lord taketh away. Blessed be the name of the Lord."

Toronto Players Go to England

Toronto, Ont., March 27 — A team of thirteen men of the Toronto Lacrosse club left to-day for England where games will be played with the leading organizations. The thirteen men selected to represent Toronto are about as strong as the club has ever put in the field. They are: E. Adamson, F. Taylor, H. McLaren, W. J. Hanley, J. Dowling, Geo. Wheeler, Percy McBride, Charles Pringle, Hughie Lambe, Fred Mara, Charlie Querrie, J. Murray and Ernie Maclean. The men are captained by "Adams" Wheeler.

THE IRISH AGITATION GROWS IN NEW YORK

Open Talk of Another Fenian Invasion of Canada

THE WORLD AND BOER WAR

Leading Events Transpiring in the Great American Metropolis

Should the United States Stop Supplying Horses and Mules to the British Army in south Africa, What Would Happen?

(Special Telegram to The Times)

New York, March 27 — The mass meeting held under the auspices of the United Irish League last night was largely attended, and hundreds were denied admission. The speaking was of the usual fiery character. Ex-Congressman Sullivan said that the time had arrived when the Irishmen of the United States should strike a blow at Canada. He believed that Britain was about to collapse, and it was the duty of all Irish patriots to stab her as often and as hard as possible. Other addresses were made, showing that the League was growing rapidly in New York and throughout the Union.

SPRING IMMIGRATION

New York, March 27 — The rush of immigration is fairly on and it is estimated that between 1,500 and 1,700 prospective American citizens are arriving every week. Many of the immigrants are booked for inland towns and though almost every foreign nation is represented, those coming in largest numbers are Frenchmen, Italians, Swedes and Poles.

THE BOER WAR

The World believes that the war in South Africa will continue for years. Should the supply of horses and mules from the United States be stopped, the British army would be powerless to continue the struggle.

HILL FOR GOVERNOR

Despite the denials of his friends there is a growing belief among politicians that if ex-Governor David B. Hill sees a good chance of winning, he will accept the nomination for Governor this year, knowing that victory would put him in the lead for the presidential nomination two years hence. It is a long time ahead to the nomination convention, but the Democrats of the state are getting themselves together in order to take advantage of any opportunity that may develop in the fall. In all these movements the Hon. David B. seems to be conspicuous, and as some have expressed it, "to run and not to run," that is the question with ex-Governor Hill.

THE GREAT BRIDGE

The Brooklyn Bridge management has announced that in order to relieve the congested condition of traffic, especially during business hours, four new loops will be constructed at the Manhattan terminus, and the work will be done as speedily as possible. This will increase the facilities of the bridge greatly, but there are those who say that the bridge is overworked, and no plan to relieve the congestion will be a complete and satisfactory remedy for present conditions. Bridge Commissioner Lindenthal endeavored to obtain a popular expression of opinion regarding the subject, inviting all persons travelling across the bridge to deposit in twelve large boxes placed at the Manhattan end, ballots telling whether or not they would use the ferries in preference to the bridge, if their facilities were increased. Out of 300,000 who cross the structure daily only sixteen found time to drop their ballots.

WATER METER FRAUDS

Commissioner Dougherty is receiving the vigorous support of the Merchants' Association in his efforts to break up the water meter frauds on the city. The association has supplied him with a large quantity of data tending to show a very great shortage in the water revenue, estimated broadly at from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 a year, and has asked him to test, by direct investigation of some of the physical facts, the conclusion reached by its expert.

NOTES

Apropos of things sporty, it is said in pugilistic circles that Bob Fitzsimmons is in a huff concerning the bids for his fight with Jim Jeffries, slated to be decided in May. It seems a good proposition that unless the lanky Antipodean has his way concerning the amount of money a club shall give for the bout, there will be no fight, at least not with Fitz as a principal.

In the future non-members of the New York Produce Exchange will have to pay a higher rate of commission on orders executed in the local grain and breadstuff pits. Action on this question has been taken by the Board of Managers of the Produce Exchange and it has been decided that instead of a commission of 1-16 per cent., the charge on outsiders should be 1-8 per cent. One of the immediate results of the advance in brokers' fees, has been a sharp increase in the value of memberships and seats which sold on the local Produce Exchange a short time ago, and found few purchasers, are now quoted at from $400 to $450.

Items of Interest

Vienna, March 27.—Emperor Francis Joseph this morning (Maundy Thursday) performed at the Hofburg the traditional ceremony of washing the feet of twelve aged men. The nobility and the diplomatic corps witnessed the ceremony, after which His Majesty hung bags of money on the necks of the participants, whose aggregate age was over 1,070 years. The old men wore ancient Dutch costumes. The ages of twelve women recipients of The Imperial Maundy gifts aggregated 1,182 years.

DEEATH SFROM CHOLERA.

Cairo, Egypt, March 27.—It is said here that nearly a thousand deaths from cholera have occurred at Mecca since March 23.

DYNAMITE FOR A CROCODILE

London, March 27.—Two bronzed travellers, Messrs. Harrison and Burchard, have just arrived in London after ten months spent right away from civilization in the shooting of elephants, rhinoceri, giraffes and hippopotami in Africa.

Raging lions prowled around their encampment at night, "rhinos" started up in front of them here and there as they pushed on with their force of black carriers, and alligators gazed at them from rivers and pools. One night a lion was driven off with firebrands hastily snatched up, but only after he had fastened his teeth into the flesh of a calf belonging to the party.

"We started from the coast at the end of April," said Mr. Harrison, "and pushed out into the interior of Angola, southwest Africa.

"One evening near dusk I was hunting for small buck, and was not thinking of anything else, when I suddenly heard a great scuffling just in front of me. I looked up, expecting to see zebras, or something of the kind, but to my astonishment there stood two enormous hippopotami.

"I had only a gun of small calibre, with soft-nosed bullets inside for shooting small buck. I was afraid that to their tough hides this would only be an irritant. However, I took the chance and fired—it was too good an opportunity to be thrown away. They both fled, but the one I hit only went about half a mile before he died.

"In shooting elephants, I had but little trouble. I put the bullet right through the lung and it was done. One I chased from 11 o'clock in the forenoon and shot him at dusk.

"As evidence that there are lots of game in the Angola interior, I may say that one black hunter shot forty-one elephants while we were out there.

"Perhaps the most curious experience I had was the dynamiting of a crocodile. We put one charge of dynamite into the pool and it surprised him. He dashed round and round on hearing the explosion going up and down in curves like a porpoise. Then he retired to a muddy depth and cogitated. We could see the bubbles from his nostrils coming up all in one place, so knew he was staying still. Then we put in another charge and that killed him."

BRICKLAYING IN ENGLAND.

London, March 27.—Mr. J. C. Stewart, the building manager of the new structure of the British Westinghouse Electric Company at Trafford Park, Manchester, has now given in a letter to The Times, full particulars of an achievement which was outlined on Jan. 4 last, and at that time barely credited by London officials of the Bricklayers' Union.

While 450 bricks per nine hour day is about the average work of the British bricklayer—the London County Council work has been well under this—Mr. Stewart says:

"In the construction of the pattern shop, where there are fewer openings in the walls than in any of the other buildings, our regular average was 1,800 bricks per man per day. The averages per man include face brick work. On common work we reached an average of 2,250 bricks per man per day.

Upon the brick chimney stack for the Mersey Tunnel power station at Birkenhead, Mr. Stewart reports an average per man per nine hour day of 1,976 bricks.

"Assistance by up-to-date methods of handling bricks and mortar," is Mr. Stewart's explanation of the fast work, and he adds: "Our mortar is made much softer than that commonly used in England, and the bricks are laid by a light pressure of the hand and a light tap of the trowel, instead of by repeated hammering of the trowel to force the brick into place in stiff mortar. By the use of soft mortar we can lay enough mortar with one stretch of the trowel for half a dozen to a dozen bricks. With stiff mortar, such as masons use in this country, it is possible only to spread enough at one time for a much smaller number of bricks."

MARCONIGRAMS OFF THE COAST.

London, March 27.—At the annual meeting of the Royal National Lifeboat Institution, presided over by Lord Selborne, the committee expressed a hope that wireless telegraphy will before long be provided for the lighthouses and lightships round our coast. This has been the idea of the Trinity House authorities for some time past, and they have been conducting a series of experiments between the Goodwin Sands and the South Foreland and have obtained satisfactory results. For the present, however, there is a deadlock and nothing can be done until the negotiations now proceeding between the Government and Mr. Marconi are concluded. Last year was remarkable for the scarcity of heavy storms and a consequent decrease in the number of wrecks. To this was due the fact that only 480 lives were rescued by lifeboats and shore boats, against an average of 750 in each of the preceding ten years. During its existence the National Lifeboat Institution has been responsible for the saving of 43,000 lives.

KINGDOM OFFERED CARNEGIE

Steel King Pondered Over Purchase of Achilles's Throne, but Abandoned the Project

Pittsburg, Pa., March 27 — An Austrian, who was a lieutenant of engineers in the Austrian army and was attached to the court of Achilles I. King of Araucania, as chief topographer, in Paris, says that Achilles, who died recently, once tendered to Andrew Carnegie the sale of his kingdom and titles. Achilles sent Count Belligarde to Pittsburg to lay the scheme before Mr. Carnegie. He laid great stress on the fact that the country abounded in minerals, especially in iron ores. Mr. Carnegie gave the subject some consideration, and Count Belligarde spent six weeks in Pittsburg going over the details with him. The latter looked upon it as a commercial investment to increase his power as a steel king, rather as a means of obtaining the title of potentate, but finally gave up the project.

The Austrian lieutenant made a map of Araucania for Achilles, who wanted it flashy and alive with colors. The Austrian said the map had more colors than Joseph's coat and the rainbow combined, and that he made enough out of it to come to Pittsburg.

Kaiser's Yacht Ready

New York, March 28 — The Kaiser's yacht, Meteor, will leave the Townsend-Downey shipyards to-day for her trial trip. If the spin is successful the yacht will be rigged with her cruising canvas and will start under convoy for the other side early in the coming week.

Acute and Chronic Rheumatism are equally influenced by the almost magical pain-subduing power of Polson's Nerviline, equal in medicinal value to five times the quantity of any other rheumatic remedy. Nerviline cures because it reaches the source of the disease and drives it out of the system. Nerviline is an unusually good rheumatic cure, and makes many unusual cures. Just rub it in the next time you have an attack. The immediate result will surprise you. 25c.

BIG PAPER MILL

Nearly a Million Acres of Spruce Secured in British Columbia

Tacoma, Wash, March 27 — Wisconsin capitalists are to combine with local business men in the building of a large paper and pulp mill in this vicinity. An option has been secured on 700,000 acres of British Columbia spruce lands lying near the water, the timber being of a quality and quantity to supply an amount of pulp needed for any reasonable length of time. In order to obtain the clear, fresh water requisite in the manufacture of paper, a site about two miles up the Puyallup river has been selected for the erection of the plant. Printing paper and manila will be the products of the mill and it is expected to find a market both at home and in Australia and the Oriental countries.

PETERBORO SPRING ASSIZES

Judgment Reserved in the Case of Wasson vs. Douglas—Elliott vs. Huntsville Lumber Company, Non-Suited — Case of Derocher vs. Cox Before the Court.

At the session of the spring assizes on Wednesday the case of Wasson vs. Douglas was completed. A large number of witnesses were examined, which made the hearing very long and almost tedious. Judgment was reserved.

The next case taken up was that of Elliott vs. Huntsville Lumber Company. The plaintiff, George Elliott, a journeyman printer, had been working in the sawmill of this company and met with an accident whereby he lost one of his hands. An agreement had been drawn up between the parties and Elliott accepted $150 and was promised steady employment. When he recovered from his accident he asked the company to fulfil their agreement and give him the position promised. At that time they had no opening for him and Elliott then entered proceedings against the company and asked that the court annul his agreement with the company. In the agreement drawn up between the parties, Elliott acknowledged that the accident was due largely to his own carelessness. The case occupied the attention of the court until nearly midnight. The case was non-suited.

LATER SESSION

When court resumed its sitting yesterday morning the case of Derocher vs. Cox was heard. The plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Derocher, the parents of little Johnny Derocher, who was killed near the Dickson Company's mill last November, are suing Mr. Cox, a well-known farmer in Smith for alleged carelessness in asking a number of children to assist him in unloading a heavy timber from a wagon. The defendant denies the charge and had witnesses to prove that he told the children to keep away from the wagon when the timber was being unloaded.

Canada Whist Congress

Toronto, Ont., March 28 — Expert whist players from many parts of the Dominion will take part in the seventh annual congress of the Canadian Whist League which will open at McConkey's to-day. The prominence and large number of the contestants promise the most successful tournament in the history of the league.

Washes Feet of Twelve Men

Vienna, March 27 — Emperor Francis Joseph to-day performed the annual Holy Thursday foot-washing ceremonial in the presence of the courtiers and the diplomatic corps. After washing the feet of twelve aged men in commemoration of Christ's washing of the feet of His disciples, His majesty served them with dinner and sent them away, each with a bag of silver pieces. The Imperial archdukes assisted in the ceremony.

INDIAN RIVER

—Mr. John Foley has been visiting at Indian River for a few days.

—Mr. Laurence Doherty was the guest of Miss Emma Leary on Sunday last. Mr. Joe Clancy also gave Louisa a call. The young ladies have remarked already that those gentlemen are very hard on coal oil. I think it better for those lovers to bring the oil with them next visit.

—Dr. Smith is very busy at present. Calls attended day or night, phone 196.

—The patrons of the Indian River cheese factory held their annual meeting on Monday last. The president and secretary were re-elected. The committee consists of Messrs. James Devlin, P. O'Brien and Maurice O'Leary. After the meeting Mr. Maurice O'Leary gave a short speech on green feed for the dairy cow during the winter season. Mr. O'Brien suggested the patrons to deal more in barley and oats, or else organize a [illegible]

HOW EASY WE ARE

What the Bell Telephone Company Agreed to do in Orangeville

The following despatch from Orangeville will make interesting reading for Peterborough:

Orangeville, March 27 — The organization of a local telephone company has had its effect on the Bell Telephone Co. already. At a meeting of the town council, Councillor McKeown handed in a proposition on behalf of the Bell Telephone Co. In return for a five years' renewal of the existing agreement with the town, the company offered: 1. To give residence telephone service, grounded circuit for $15 a year. 2. To give residence service, metallic circuit, for $15 a year, where subscribers already have business telephones. 3. To put in a metallic circuit for all business telephones at the present rate, $20 a year.

BASKETBALL.

In speaking of the game at the west end Y.M.C.A. between the West End team and the Ottawas, the Toronto Globe says:

"The Ottawa boys will have a hard row to hoe as they have arranged games with all the crack western teams, including Peterborough, Hamilton, Brantford, Toronto Central, and Toronto West End. The West End have been honoured with the first game, after which basketball enthusiasts will be able to get a line on the style of game played down east."

This is the team that plays the Y.M.C.A. team here on April 1st. A very fast and interesting game is expected.

The Brownies, the junior basketball team of the Y.M.C.A., left by C.P.R. last evening for Hamilton, where they played a game with the juniors of the energetic city. It was a splendid exhibition of the game, each side showing a fine knowledge of combination play. The result was a victory for the Brownies, by a score of 17—13. The Peterborough aggregation are: Defence, A. Boucher, R. Hall; centre, H. Daly; Forwards, G. Miller, N. Miller; team managers, Will Campbell, Sandford Hall. This evening the boys play at Brantford, and on Monday evening at Toronto. On Tuesday evening, the team from Ottawa Association play the senior team here.

TENNIS.

A very enthusiastic meeting of the Tennis Club in connection with the Y.M.C.A. was held in the Y.M.C.A. hall on Wednesday evening. It was decided to amalgamate the Park Tennis Club and the Y.M.C.A. Club, which move will be very beneficial to the players as it will enable them to play on the cinder and grass. There will be at least three good courts at the Nicholls Oval. The admission fee will be 50 cents. The following officers were elected.

Hon. Pres.—Mr. Richard Hall.
Pres.—Dr. [illegible]
Vice.-Pres.—Harold Brown.
Sec.-Treas.—Lawrence McLennan.
Assistant Sec.-Treas—Archie Laing.

The Club promises to be in a flourishing condition with a much increased membership.

Paine's Celery Compound

MAKES WONDROUS CURES

It Is The Great Spring Season Life Giver

Men and women, young and old, enter into the spring season with a variety of diseases that arise from a faulty or impaired nervous system.

Of all known remedies, Paine's Celery Compound stands first as a rapid and sure cure for all nervous diseases, neuralgia, rheumatism, dyspepsia and blood troubles. At this time when the blood is thin, impoverished and impure, Paine's Celery Compound is the agent that purifies and enriches the life stream, bringing strength, vigor and sound health.

The use of one bottle of Paine's Celery Compound will quickly convince suffering men or women that they have truly laid hold of the spring medicine that accomplishes all it promises. Thousands in the past have been saved and blessed by Paine's Celery Compound; you can share the same blessings and have years of happiness added to your life.

When you go to your dealer, see that you get the genuine Paine's Celery Compound; refuse all substitutes and imitations. See that the name PAINE'S is on wrapper and bottle.

PETERBOROUGH, MARCH 28, 1902

MUNICIPALITIES MOVE

Ask For Exclusive Control of Their Streets

The following petition was presented to parliament by Mr. Thomas Birkett, M.P., in behalf of the Union of Canadian municipalities for legislation giving the municipalities the right to control the streets:

To His Excellency, the Governor-General in council, and to the Honourable the Senate and House of Commons of Canada.

The petition of the Union of Canadian Municipalities respectfully represents:

1. Your petitioners are an association of cities, towns, and other municipalities to the number of about seventy, including most of the principal cities of Canada, and representation in all the provinces;

2. At the convention of municipalities at which this union was formed, held at Toronto, in August, 1901, it was found by comparison of experiences between the authorities of towns all over Canada that grave infringements of the corporate rights of citizens, especially as to streets, have, at times, been introduced through private bills in parliament and the legislatures, and have become undesirable precedents whereby such abuses are liable to still further extension;

3. Said convention, in consequence, after due discussion, and with full consciousness of their responsibility in the matter, unanimously passed the following resolution, to which they respectfully call the attention of parliament;

"That municipalities should have full and exclusive control of their streets, and that no legislation should be passed infringing on such control, unless the same be subject to the consent of the municipality concerned; that the members of this union will resolutely resist each and every invasion of their rights; and that the executive committee be charged with the duty of assisting to prevent such invasions of the rights of any municipality.

This resolution, with others, has since received the special endorsation of numerous municipal councils throughout the Dominion.

4. The union has no desire to injure corporations or to impair any fair and proper powers, but it prays that the desire of the vast number of citizens whose municipal rights it is called upon to protect, be duly held in view by your honorable houses in connection with the numerous private bills affecting municipalities which are to come before you during the present session.

5. It also prays that retroactive legislation in the same spirit be duly brought in and passed, by a general statute, submitting to municipal consent and control all future works and constructions to be made by corporations in, upon and under the streets and highways of municipalities, admitting only right of passage across one municipality to another, subject to compensation by arbitration.

And your petitioners will ever pray. Oliver A. Howland (mayor of Toronto) president of the Union of Canadian Municipalities; W. D. Lighthall (mayor of Westmount), hon. secretary and 1st vice-president for Quebec; J. T. Hamilton (mayor of Halifax), 1st vice-president for Nova Scotia; Alex. W. McRae (alderman of St. John, N.B.), 1st vice-president for New Brunswick; John Arbuthnot (mayor of Winnipeg), 1st vice-president for Manitoba; W. D. Morris (ex-mayor of Ottawa), 1st vice-president for Ontario; Aaron D. Reed, (mayor of Owen Sound) 2nd vice-president for Ontario.

Municipal Auditing

The report of the Provincial Municipal Auditor for 1901 is more voluminous than usual, containing a mass of general information, which must be invaluable to municipal treasurers, as indicating the improved methods of keeping accounts and the duties of all concerned in regard to auditing such accounts. The Provincial Municipal Auditor, Mr. J. B. Laing, finds a great improvement in the bookkeeping of local officials. He has no losses of importance in the form of municipal deficits to report from 1901, but says:—

"My attention has been called to the fact that sufficient importance is not attached by the local auditors to the securities given for the responsibilities of county, township and other municipal treasurers. There is reason to believe in many cases these securities are worthless, either being improperly drawn, outlawed or expired by effluxion of time. This is a most important matter, and should not be overlooked by municipalities.

"It would be well for the municipalities if they would make more frequent use of this department than they do by asking more frequently for audits. It is a mistaken, but popular, idea that a Government audit is very expensive. In some cases it certainly is, in the cases of cities with water works, electric light, frontage taxes, etc., and a long term of years to go over, but in the case of the average township audit, the expense need not exceed $150, or thereabouts. In the case of towns, no doubt the expense would be doubled, or even trebled, but my experience is that an audit of any municipality is a good thing, and if it does not remunerate the municipality in one way it does in another."

Mr. Laing commends the following directions regarding the duties of municipal auditors, which councils should see carried out:—

1. Compare assessment roll with collectors' roll to see that the assessed values on which the rate are levied are correctly entered.

2. Compare school section entries with school section map and check valuations on which school rates have been levied.

3. Check all entries and additions on the roll.

4. Verify the correctness of all rates and taxes levied by by-laws, proceedings of council, engineers' drainage, wards and certificates, statute labor lists, fence viewers' awards, county treasurers' accounts, school trustees' requisitions or other authority.

5. The collectors' account with the treasurer should be examined, and also settlement of roll, which should be verified under oath and in accordance with sections 147 and 148 of the Assessment Act.

6. Every stub of the treasurers' receipt book, and every document or roll audited should be properly stamped as required by the act of 1896.

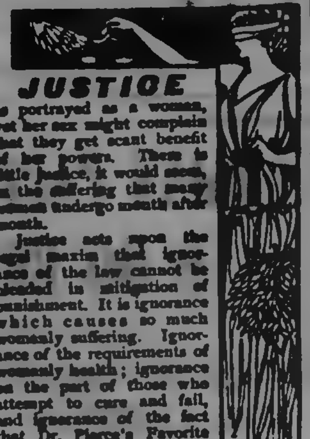
7. The treasurers' vouchers should be carefully examined to see that each payment was authorized by proper authority, and that a proper receipt is attached.

8. The auditor's report should refer t the condition of the treasurers' security, and also to the insurance on corporatio property.

9. The auditors should show what cash balance, if any is due from treasurer to municipality—and where such balance is deposited.

10. If any source of revenue has ceased to exist, or if the last payment has been made on any special assessment the auditors should make a report to that effect in their report.

11. It is very important that the auditors should make themselves familiar with the by-laws of the municipality, and it is incumbent on them to make a special report of any payment made contrary to law.



JUSTICE is portrayed as a woman, yet her sex might complain that they get scant benefit of her powers. There is little justice, it would seem, in the suffering that many women undergo month after month.

Justice acts upon the legal maxim that ignorance of the law cannot be pleaded in mitigation of punishment. It is ignorance which causes so much womanly suffering. Ignorance of the requirements of womanly health; ignorance on the part of those who attempt to cure and fail, and ignorance of the fact that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures womanly diseases. It establishes regularity, dries weakening drains, heals inflammation and ulceration and cures female weakness.

"When I first wrote to Doctor Pierce concerning my health," says Mrs. Mollie E. Carpenter, of Linaria, Cumberland Co., Tenn., "I was so weak I could only write a few words until I would have to rest; was so weak I could hardly walk. Words cannot express my sufferings; dimness of sight, palpitation, shortness of breath, black spots or else shining lights before my eyes, terrible headache, numbness in my arms and hands and tongue, also my jaws would get numb; constipation, falling of the uterus, disagreeable drains, soreness through my bowels; in fact I was diseased from head to foot. Now I can do my own washing and cooking. I can take a ten quart pail in one hand and a six quart pail in the other (full of water), and carry both one-fourth of a mile and never stop to rest. I am as heavy as I was at 19 years (125 pounds). I used thirty bottles of 'Favorite Prescription' and 'Golden Medical Discovery' and twenty-five vials of 'Pleasant Pellets.'"

The Late Queen's Autographs.

According to the London "World," great annoyance has been caused at court by recent sales of Queen Victoria's private letters and autographs, of which an immense number have been produced in the open market during the last few months. It is impossible to understand how such strictly confidential communications as the Queen's private letters to foreign sovereigns and to the Duchess of Gloucester and other members of the royal family can have come to be publicly offered for sale, unless they have somehow passed into the possession of the servants of the recipients.

Anecdotal.

George Ade, the Chicago man who writes the "Fables in Slang," hails from Indiana, which he has said is a State which a man "should never go back on—or to." The other night he met an Indiana woman who asked him if he had ever noticed how many bright people come from Indiana. "Yes," he replied, "and the brighter they are the quicker they come."

To the Late G. W. Steevens

It is difficult to realize that already two years have passed since the sad news came out of beleaguered Ladysmith that the brilliant journalist and author, G. W. Steevens, had been carried off by fever, carried off in early manhood, long before he had reached the natural zenith of his fame. Figures move quickly across the stage of life and are soon forgotten. For a moment, however, Steevens is recalled by an affectionate tribute, printed on the second anniversary of his death, Jan. 15 last, in The Daily Mail, on the staff of which journal he was engaged as war correspondent. The lines are as follows, and written, doubtless, by a former colleague:—

In Memoriam.

George Warrington Steevens.
Died January 15, 1900.

Too soon, alas! life's little day was done.
Swift as a meteor flashing on the night,
He soared to fame, and, flaming in his flight,
Vanished a-sudden ere his course was run.
And we—we wonder if the Southern sun
Has gathered in the glory of his light;
But only know the havoc of the blight
Which slew him in the shadow of the gun.

So brave and strong! his every glowing word
Wearing an athlete's sinew. Dearest, best
To Mother England, as he tracked her sword,
With patriot-pride to bind him to her breast.
Thus do we love the records of the strong,
And miss them most, and mourn them doubly long.
—Bernard Malcolm Ramsay.

The American Press.

We hear so much of the pro-Boerism and anti-Britishism of the American press that it is worth while occasionally drawing attention to the fact that this element of the press across the border does not have all its own way. Some extremists in Chicago have suggested a burlesque of the coronation of the British Sovereign on the date on which the event takes place in London, and simultaneously a demonstration in favor of the Boers. It is not likely that such an ill-natured proposal would meet with much backing from the common sense of the people of Chicago, and it would doubtless in any event be confined to the lower classes. It may have been condemned by other newspapers, but one of the foremost in opposing such an unneighborly demonstration is The Chicago Israelite, which deals with the subject in the following trenchant fashion:—"The pro-Boers of Chicago, who invited ex-President Kruger to be in the city on the day that King Edward is to be crowned in England, have taken an unwarrantable liberty with their fellow-citizens. They have a perfect right to indulge in any amount of horseplay in attempting to burlesque the coronation, and if they like that sort of thing, then it is the sort of thing they like. But as they happen to be in a very small minority, and as there are a great many reputable persons in Chicago who have no desire to insult a friendly nation by making a display of hatred which is as puerile as it is coarse, and as impotent as it is vulgar, they have no right to refer to themselves, as they do in their resolutions, as, 'We, the citizens of Chicago . . . .' Now, I have no doubt that many of them are citizens of Chicago, most of them probably having taken out their naturalization papers—but they are not 'the' citizens of Chicago, not by a million and several hundred thousand. In consideration of this, and with the 'three tailors of Tooley street' in view, they might have spared the remaining million and several hundreds of thousands of Chicagoans the humiliation of being included among the promoters of their proposed spectacle, and as endorsers of their malignant utterances."

Almost simultaneously, The New York Independent, perhaps the most important religious journal on the American continent, shows that it also can view a great international question calmly and dispassionately, and that in the unfortunate South African war it has grasped the vital facts of the case. In the course of a reply to a correspondent The Independent says:—

"If we have seemed to any reader to convey the impression that we believe that the power to rule better gives the right of invasion and conquest, we have been greatly misunderstood. We believe that so long as they do not traverse the rights of foreigners the citizens of any nation should be allowed all the political education they can get by the self-rule of no matter how much bad government or how many revolutions. We have said that accordingly we ought to withdraw from Cuba and allow its people to rule or ruin themselves. We heartily accept the principles laid down by our correspondent.

"As to the Transvaal, Britain made no war on that republic; she was guilty of no invasion. It was the Transvaal that declared war on Britain, and invaded British Natal as soon as Britain began to gather troops to defend the border against what was the proclaimed plan, for which munitions of war had long been gathered, to expel the British from South Africa.

"We knew perfectly well that the Dutch and French Boers constitute the majority of the population of Cape Colony, as well of the Orange Free State, and that those two districts have been much better governed than the Transvaal. But certainly it is British rather than Boer influence that is to be credited with the superior legislation as to the rights of the native races which prevails in Cape Colony, and only Boer perversity is chargeable with the blunders of government which oppressed the great majority of the population of the Transvaal, whether Uitlanders or blacks."

Herr Meyer Lutz tells the following little story in "Mainly About People": "Conducting once in Bradford, I noticed that the clarionet player, a young but clever and steady lad, jumped up a good deal during the progress of the opera. I found that his father, who played the trombone, sat just behind him, and every now and then he gave his son a kick, with the remark, 'Look out, Sammy! there be a flat a-comin'.'"

Mrs. Query—Isn't she a member of your club?

Mrs. Gadabout—Not any more. We had to get rid of her or she would have disorganized us.

Mrs. Query—You don't say!

Mrs. Gadabout—Yes; at one of our sessions we were discussing the servant girl question, and she said the best way to solve the problem was for all of us to stay at home and do our own work.—Philadelphia Press.

The Soda Fountain Clerk.

CONSIDER now the meek and humble soda fountain clerk.

Who draweth off the moistened air with nimble turn and jerk.

For then he hath vanilla on the bosom of his vest, and streaks of red raspberry make his trousers seem a jest.

While chocolate and ginger give a tiger-like effect to the balance of the garments in which he's proudly decked.

His hair is limp and languid, and is parted square and true

Because he hath to linger in the acid and the ice, to fix up funny mixtures for the one that hath the price.

He maketh strange concoctions in the line of fancy drinks, and all the while he watcheth for persuasive sorts of winks.

He diggeth in the ice cream and he rusheth with the glass, while his deadly hated rival buys the soda for the lass.

Yea, verily, the soda clerk, he hath a sorry time, for he must know the way to get nine cents out of each dime.

And he must be a hustler, that there will not be a loss of ice or gas or water, or he'll tremble at the boss.

How often, oh, how often, doth a calm and peaceful smile go flitting o'er his visage when a drink goes out of style.

But ah, alas, my son, sometimes he feeleth very bad, and then is when the ladies come with garments rich and glad.

The ladies fill the rockers and the doorways and the stools, and insist upon a liquid that both elevates and cools.

And one declareth that she'd like some chocolate with cream, and when he draweth it, straightway "Oh no!" the maid doth scream.

And then she voweth that she hath already changed her mind, and wanteth just a phosphate with a piece of lemon rind.

And yet, again the other maids declare they do not know just what they wish—and on and on their mild objections flow.

The weary soda fountain clerk suggesteth this and that, from plain old lemon phosphate to a dose of anti-fat.

Now, when he draweth all the drinks, his troubles are not done—

Nay, verily, my trusting child, they are but half begun;

For each and every maiden there doth straightway rise and say:

"Now, girls, I'll think it's awful if you do not let me pay!"

And all protest, and all object, and all their plans defend,

And not a one takes out her purse her lovely cash to spend.

Now, finally, the soda clerk suggesteth that each maid shall pay for what she drank—and then beginneth the tirade.

For all the ladies vow in wrath—yea, yea, they almost sob—that they will his employer see, and take from him his job.

And then they take their parasols, and sternly go away, and not a cent of all that bill do they take steps to pay.

The gentle soda fountain clerk, he falleth in a daze, and leaneth on the vichy tube, and wicked things he says.

Is this not true, just as we have composed it, with much work?

It surely is—and if you doubt, go ask the soda clerk.—Baltimore "American."

The Restlessness of Women.

IN the July "Cosmopolitan" Ella Wheeler Wilcox, with characteristic force and directness, deals with what she regards as a very serious and growing evil now prevalent among her sex in this country, at least among those who belong to the well-to-do and upper classes of society. She says:

"One who studies American womanhood with any care must be alarmed at the growing restlessness of the sex.

"My mountain of mail is often a volcano of seething unrest. It seems a relief to many women—women, doubtless, whom the world supposes to be happy wives and mothers—to write to one they believe to be sympathetic, of the discontent that surges in their hearts.

"To turn from these letters to a social function is to encounter the same elements in another form. Beneath jeweled corsages beat restless hearts; from under the flower-laden brims of the modish hats look unhappy eyes, gazing out into the world with longing for an indefinable something—a happiness imagined but unattained.

"While I believe the tendency of humanity is constantly upward toward a higher plane, it is an indisputable fact that this restlessness of woman is a giant evil, and one of serious growth."

Mrs. Wilcox says it is puzzling to trace this great wave of feminine restlessness to its source. She speaks of the present false standards of wealth, the desire for splendid social station, and for villas at the seaside and castles in Europe, but closes by saying that "after all, a lack of good, everyday common sense is at the bottom of it all. While this restlessness is a baleful sign of the times, rendered all the more mischievous by the almost equal restlessness of men, it is comforting to reflect that there is a large—a very large—class of women who have and who use constantly good, everyday common sense. But of course they do not belong to that growing class of women who desire to lead in society, and who dream of villas, castles and foreign titles.

A Scene in Nassau.

The following delightful sketch of the outlook from a window in Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands, is a portion of a letter which a correspondent sends me:—

I am now going to try and make you envy me. I wonder if I can succeed. I am sitting at brother Percy's bedroom window, which commands a magnificent view of the harbor and of several small islands and a sweep of the blue, blue sea. In the foreground, between our house and the beach, which is about a quarter of a mile away, I get a view of hundreds of palm trees, banana trees and other foliage peculiar only to the tropics. I might go on for an hour describing the other objects that are included in this picture, but should still leave the picture in such a state that it could not be said to give the faintest idea of what box of paints, containing all the colors of the rainbow, and still I should fail. Why? Simply because the colors defy the artist in all his attempts at reproduction. Likewise the poet finds himself beggared for words in which to express the beauty of the scene. The foliage is of such rich and varied colors that we northerners cannot form the slightest conception of it; only they who have visited the tropics can realize what it is like. But now I have come to the climax of coloring, the harbor. Take in your hand a lovely piece of mother-of-pearl and trace in it the rich, fiery flashes of green and blue, yes, a lovely opal ring like mine would be better, and it is not the slightest exaggeration to say that they would faintly give you an idea of the colors of that harbor. It is simply magnificent—rich blues of all shades, light and dark greens, heliotrope shading to deep purples, strange to say all blending together, blaze out brilliantly. Tourists who have visited nearly every corner of the entire globe agree in saying they never saw anything to compare with it. The bottom of the water is of pure white coral, white as snow, and in 75 to 100 feet you can see the bottom quite clearly through the most beautiful crystal-like water. I think probably the snow-white bottom has a prismatic effect on the light passing through it, thus showing all these brilliant colors. However, I am going too much into detail, though if you could see it yourself you would scarcely blame me. Dotted here and there are sailing vessels, their sails reflecting the bright sunshine, scarcely moving on the quiet waters of the ocean. The sky is of a rich, deep blue, with a few fleecy clouds floating idly about. The sun is shining brightly, although not at all oppressive, as the temperature is only 74 degrees. The surface of the ocean is as quiet and smooth as glass, scarcely a ruffle disturbing its surface. I think, in a disjointed way, I have gone over most of the scene. Don't you envy me now? And now, dear, the dinner bell is ringing, and I will tell you all about the delicious oranges from 24 cents to 48 cents per hundred in my next letter.

Wireless Signalling.

While Marconi, with his wireless telegraphy, holds the field as the last nine days' wonder of science, Waldon Fawcett, in the current Harper's Magazine, shows that telephony is keeping almost equal pace with her sister invention in perfecting ways and methods. He writes:—

The very acme of achievement in the transmission of messages would seem to have been reached in the wireless telephone system, which has recently been developed by Professor A. Frederick Collins, an electrical engineer residing in Philadelphia. Spoken words are transmitted great distances through the ground without the use of a connecting wire, and in accordance with a plan totally different from that of the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy.

The Collins system simply takes advantage of the fact that there are natural electrical currents in evidence slightly below the surface of the earth at any point that may be selected, and by this invention currents of this character are utilized to cause a flow of electricity between two instruments stationed above the surface of the earth. The only underground mechanism employed consists of small zinc-wire screens, which are buried in shallow holes, one at the sending station and the other at the receiving station. Above these are tripods supporting transmitting and receiving apparatus, such as is employed in ordinary telephony, a wire affording connection in each case with the buried screen. When the electricity from a storage battery is turned on, sounds of all kinds may be sent through the transmitter, and heard, in many instances, even more distinctly than were a regular overhead telephone employed.

The Collins invention in its simplest form is adapted to sending a message but one way—that is, it is not possible to utilize a receiver as a transmitter and reply to a message received, but the transmitter and receiver are each equipped with an annex for performing the opposite function, so that to all intents and purposes this new telephone is not different from the instrument already in use.

Of the improvements of the telephone in its uses at sea, Mr. Fawcett also adds:—

Unique methods of telephony are working wonders in the field of marine signalling, and when this phase of the new achievements has been fully developed it is believed that the danger of collisions and other disasters at sea will be very materially lessened. One of the most important of these systems of telephone signals for ships was invented by the late Dr. Gray. By this plan the water of a lake, ocean, or river is made to act as the medium for conveying sounds, as, for instance, the strokes of a bell tolled below the surface of the water. The sounds thus transmitted are heard distinctly at great distances by means of exceptionally sensitive telephonic receivers designed especially for such service. Inasmuch as any number of different signals may be arranged by the introduction of various combinations of strokes given in quick succession or at long intervals, it will be seen that the possibilities of the system for signalling purposes are virtually limitless. The practical application of this invention has already been carried so far that ships have been fitted with apparatus which causes gongs to ring automatically when the vessel comes "within hail" of one of these submerged bells.

Jack Frost, Artist.

One of the small wonders of the winter season is the abundant and beautiful tracery which Jack Frost has a habit of writing on the pane, usually overnight, in the hours of sleeping, when the fires burn low and the house has lost something of the cheery warmth of day. Everyone has seen and admired the mysterious fungus-like growth which is often the thing which greets him in his first look at the world of a biting winter morning perhaps without knowing that its formation, in all its multiform and delicate variations, is one of the most incomprehensible of phenomena. In Cosmos recently a writer gave some of the theories that have been advanced from time to time to explain it. The Literary Digest translates from the article as follows:—

"The least arrangements of these tiny interlacing ice-crystals furnish decorative designs of incontestable originality and of unequalled delicacy. The observer asks, not without surprise, how in these marvellous formations of ice one and the same design is often rigorously and mathematically reproduced in a certain space, while its character differs totally only a few inches away. There is in this fact alone a real mystery that no one can explain plausibly, at least at present.

"In one place appear very distinctly almost recognizable plants with long, thick leaves. Palms and ferns abound, forming mimic forests. By their side stretch out fine fringes bordering the angles of fantastic sheets. Further away seem to rise the serried trunks of a lofty grove in the midst of a carpet of verdure.

"Then the scene changes completely. On all sides appear the light feathers and plumes of birds. . . .

"What are the physical phenomena that control the formation of these tree-like frost pictures, so remarkable and so varied? Most of our scientists answer these questions by hypotheses, more or less valuable. Almost all give abundant explanations of the deposition of frost along the branches of trees. As to the causes that determine the appearance of such delicate and beautiful ornaments of this same frost on the panes of our windows, most of them remain silent.

"They tell us that the most probable method of frost-formation is as follows: Every tiny droplet of water, if it is produced by condensation of vapor below the freezing-point, is necessarily in a state of 'superfusion.' In this condition when it meets a rough surface it is deposited thereon as a microscopic crystal of ice impregnated or covered with a thin layer of liquid water at the freezing-point.

"This latter, being in continual contact with air that is colder than itself, must finally freeze. As the motion of the air brings up new masses, the thickness of the frost increases.

"Other physicists, we are told, give a somewhat different explanation. According to them, when the vapor of water in the air is deposited as ice, without passing through the liquid state at all, it constitutes frost. That the vapor does not really pass through the liquid state is abundantly shown by the fact that frost has not the structure of frozen dew. It presents, on the contrary, a layer of spongy, opaque ice in which we can detect the prismatic crystals lying side by side. There are still other scientific men who explain the feathery frost formations on the branches of trees by the congelation of a thick mist that comes in contact with a body of lower temperature than the freezing-point or by the solidification of a fog in superfusion, determined by contact with a solid body. The French writer says further:

"We will leave the reader to take his choice of these opinions. So far as the deposit of frost on our window-panes is concerned, we must suppose that the infinite variety of design presented by the crystals is due to the nature of the glass. This substance is, in fact, a very bad and very irregular conductor of heat; it also offers a certain resistance to the physical action of crystallization. These causes are sufficient, when vapor is congealed on the surface, to bring about the formation of these designs, which are as varied as they are remarkable."

Not so Sick as Supposed.

Judging from an opinion expressed recently in The London Spectator, Turkey's sobriquet of the "Sick Man" is being maintained under false pretences. "A strong Sultan," says the writer, "could still place in the field an army of 600,000 of the bravest soldiers in the world, defend his coasts and ports with torpedo boats, and even in defeat inflict terrible blows upon his conqueror. It is true that the advent of a strong Sultan is most improbable, the race of Othman appearing at last to be worn out, but a Sultan weak as a Merovingian is quite probable, and a strong Mayor of the Palace or Grand Vizier would be even more dangerous, because replaceable. A ruler of Turkey who threw all caution to the winds, summoned every Osmanli to his standard, stopped all payments except for munitions of war, and fought as the Mahdi fought at Omdurman, would, to begin with, shatter all European alliances, might hold in check for three years any single European power, and might while being defeated cause an explosion such as Europe has not had to face since the Spahis threatened Vienna. The Sick Man will bequeath nothing, and the whole western world desires his heritage. The catastrophe may not come just yet, for the strange being who now occupies the throne of Turkey, and who will neither yield nor fight, seems irremovable; but it cannot be put off forever, and every blow such as the one M. Delcasse has just delivered brings us nearer to its occurrence. If history affords us any guidance, the Turk will die biting hard."

"I once won a case with one of James Whitcomb Riley's poems," says Congressman Brick of Indiana, who is a lawyer, "and so I stand for him. I was defending a man charged with stealing silk, and it looked so bad for him that I decided on an appeal to the jury. I did the best I could to win with the evidence; but I banked most on the fact that the defendant was a young man with a wife and child, and that it would go hard for all of them to have him go to the penitentiary for a term of years. My whole argument led up to the point where I closed with Riley's little poem, 'Back From a Two Years' Sentence.' When I finished, the jury was in tears, and even the Judge and the Attorney for the prosecution were affected. The jury took just one ballot, and returned a verdict of not guilty."—New York Tribune.

DAISY GORDON'S FOLLY
—OR—
THE WORLD LOST FOR LOVE'S SAKE

BY LAURA JEAN LIBBEY,

Author of "The Crime of Hallow-E'en," "The Flirtations of a Beauty," "Wilful Gaynell," "Little Leafy," "Only a Mechanic's Daughter," etc.

He wondered why Daisy drew her white arms round his neck, begging, with tears in her lovely eyes, that he would pardon her for what she had done.

"I reckon I'll have to, providin' you don't stay out so late again, lass," he answered.

He little knew what those words meant, then; but there came a dark day when they came back to him all too plainly.

Daisy longed to ask her father if she was quite alone when he found her, but she knew it must be so, else he would have spoken of it had it been otherwise.

Where then was her young husband? The thought bewildered her.

Should she tell her father what had happened? Would he be very angry with her, she wondered? Young as she was, she realized dimly that it was a strange, foolish, mad marriage; yet it was legal and binding. She was Harold St. John's bride.

"Ah, no, she could not tell him what she had done; at least, not just yet," she decided, and beautiful, guilty Daisy hid her face in the pillow, with the story of her romantic, secret marriage a heavy weight on her heart.

"Harold will come tomorrow and tell papa all, and claim me," she murmured. "He can tell him all so much better than I could," and with that thought in her heart, Daisy brushed the tears from her golden lashes and tried to sleep; but sleep would not come to her eyes.

A dark, handsome face seem to float before her mental vision, and a voice rang in her ears uttering those cruel words:

"I may as well admit the truth. I believed you to be the heiress, or I should never have married you."

Those were the heartless words that had nipped poor little Daisy's romantic love-dream in the bud, and caused her to look at the picture of the future, which must be spent with this handsome, unloving young husband, with horror too great for words.

Both the farmer and Margy were startled at the white, wan, piteous face with which Daisy greeted them the next morning.

"You are ill, lass!" he exclaimed. "Come and tell father what is the matter with his pet."

Poor Daisy! she felt an irresistible impulse to fling herself into his strong arms and tell him what she had done, and beg him to tell Harold St. John when he came to claim her, that she would not go with him, now that all the glamor and excitement and novelty of that hasty marriage was over, and she had discovered that Harold St. John had married her through a fatal error, not through love.

A great abhorrence filled her soul toward him, and she owned to herself she would rather die than go away with him.

"I am not ill, papa," she answered, "it is only the heat."

"Hetty and Olive will be back today," remarked the farmer. "You won't be lonesome much longer, pet."

"Here they are now," cried Margy, from the window, and the next moment the two girls came dancing over the wide porch into the summer kitchen.

Daisy did not spring to meet them, as was her wont, but hung back timidly aloof, fearful lest the sharp eyes of either Hetty or Olive should discern that she was laboring under intense suppressed excitement.

"Why don't you ask us if we had a good time?" laughed Olive, turning to her younger sister. "I suppose you're over the sulks by this time about going, aren't you?"

"Oh, Olive, if you had but taken me with you," sobbed Daisy, flinging herself at her sister's feet with hysterical sobs.

"Well, now, who ever heard the beat of that?" cried Hetty, looking on in amazement. "Daisy is getting to be more of a baby every day. The idea of crying about going to anything after it's all over."

It struck Olive's keen perceptions that it was not altogether that which caused Daisy to weep so hysterically.

Now that she looked keenly into the lovely young face, she saw that there was a wonderful change in it. She was rather puzzled.

"Did you take being left here so very much to heart?" she asked, slowly.

"Yes," answered Daisy, piteously. "But tell me about it," she went on, nervously anxious to change the subject.

"We had a delightful time," declared Hetty. "The two weeks slipped by far too quickly for me. You ought to have seen Lillian Ruthven, the heiress; she takes the hearts of all the gentlemen by storm, and she's as proud as she is pretty, and that's saying a great deal.

"By the way, the funniest mistake happened on the night she came away that ever was heard of," Hetty went on, thoughtlessly. "The grand ball was at its height, when suddenly two officers made their appearance guarding a manacled stranger between them, and called for Lillian Ruthven.

"Bought my Life for 35 cents."—This was one man's way of putting it when he had been pronounced incurable from chronic dyspepsia. "It was a living death to me until I tried Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets. Thanks to them to-day I am well, and I tell my friends I bought my life for 35 cents." 60 in a box—35

The Undeserved Evil Repute of Paris.

AN interesting discussion as to the public morals of Frenchmen and "Americans" has recently been started by Jules Cambon, the French ambassador to the United States, who made a trip home not long ago, and was so much impressed by what he saw in the Paris streets, during the summer season, that he felt constrained to make an earnest protest against what seemed to him bad tendencies. He complained of the marked increase in the absinthe habit, and of the growing quantity of indecent pictures and cartoons to be seen in the public streets. Senator Berenger, another prominent Frenchman, who is at the head of the Society for the Prevention of License in the Streets, promptly admitted the justice of M. Cambon's censure, and said that the police have of late put hardly any restrictions upon the exposure, in the central parts of Paris, of engravings and cards which offend decency. He declared that this evil is always at its worst during the summer months, and that its unusual prevalence at this season is because it "springs up especially to meet the average foreigner's conception of the gay capital." Thousands of foreigners go to Paris every year for a short vacation, he adds naively, "intent on having a good time, and declaring their intention so loudly that the city takes on a particular hue for their benefit." This view has been emphatically sustained by the pastor of a French Protestant church in Paris, who asserts that Anglo-Saxon visitors are the foreigners most to blame in this matter, and Americans the worst offenders of all. He contends that the keepers of kiosks where quantities of "lurid photographs" are sold told him that "Americans" are their best customers, purchasing handfuls of vicious papers and cards, which they distribute widely in their own country.

According to the New York "Evening Post," striking testimony to the truth of all this has just been furnished by a member of the United States Congress. Representative Gillett of the Springfield (Mass.) district, a man of high standing and proved independence, has been traveling for some weeks, with Speaker Henderson of Iowa, in England and on the Continent. In a recent letter he remarked that the shops, the hotels, and, above all, the class of amusements which we call "Frenchy," and which "Americans" flock to Paris to see, seemed to him "artificial and made to order to meet the taste of American visitors." He frankly admitted that "it's no credit to us what they think our taste is," and bluntly declared that he had been "thoroughly disgusted to see not only American men, but ladies, too, trying to be amused by sights which they would think both stupid and low at home." He added that it seemed to him as though "quite a proportion of the Parisians were engaged in exhibiting as their natural life and recreations a pretence of high spirits and risky abandon which was all affected, a constant bore to the participants, and only interesting and endurable to strangers so long as they are deceived into believing it is the custom of the country." There is thus virtual agreement on the part of the French legislator, the United States congressman and the French clergyman that foreign visitors, and particularly "Americans" tourists, are giving Paris a worse reputation than it deserves—in fact, making the city worse in the summer months of their presence than it is during the rest of the year. The clergyman quoted clears the resident American colony of blame, pronouncing it exemplary, but he thinks it "impossible to deny that visiting Yankees do Paris far more harm than Paris does them."

Discretion Better Than Valor.

A New Yorker, the owner of a magnificent yacht, had for his guests on a recent trip three very clever young men, all of them suitors for the hand of his beautiful daughter. The young woman could not determine which she liked the best, they were equally good looking and equally eligible as to wealth and position.

"I tell you what I'd do, Miss, if I were you," he said. "The next time we are in a safe place you fall overboard. I will stand by to see that no harm comes to you, and then you can see which is the best man of the lot."

The plan was agreed to, and a day or two later the young woman slid off the plank into the water. In a second two of the young men were in after her and she was heroically rescued. As soon as possible the heroine sought the captain.

"What am I to do now?" she asked. "I have two of them still left."

"Well, I would say this," replied the captain. "If you want a good, sensible husband, you take the one that did not jump after you."

Mrs. Scrappington (in the midst of her reading)—Here is an item which says that in Patagonia a wife can be purchased for a dollar. Mr. Scrappington—Well, there may be wives in Patagonia that are worth that much.—"Harper's Bazar."

Belle—You look worried, dear. Do something to occupy your mind. Why not read a little fiction?

Violet—I do, dear; I get a letter from my husband every day.—Moonshine.

"We shall have to try again," said the photographer, inspecting the result of the first sitting. "You seem to have had one eye shut."

"You told me to wink naturally," said the sitter, "and that's what I was trying to do."—Chicago Tribune.

A MARVELLOUS MEDICINE

"No Cure, No Pay," is the Newest Proposal of the Proprietors of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills

Editor Morning Times

Sir,—We make the following proposal to the readers of the Times: To any one who is a subject of rheumatism (no matter how long standing), or any blood disease, as enumerated below, and will give Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills a fair trial, and do not find a perfect cure, we will refund the money paid for the pills. If no substantial improvement is observed, we will in addition, pay $10 in cash on satisfactory evidence being supplied us to this effect.

We have yet to know of a single case where these wonderful pills have not been almost entirely successful in effecting a cure. CANADA CHEMICAL CO.

Ex-Ald. Bailey, St. John's, writes: I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Clarke's Wonderful Little Red Pills. They worked a miracle in my case, and cured me after many years of suffering. I do not think their equal is to be obtained.

Dr. Clarke's Little Red Pills are a positive and certain cure for la grippe, rheumatism, asthma, paralysis, catarrh, eczema, coughs, backache, indigestion, all stomach and liver troubles, female complaints, even when the disease have been standing for many years. The most stubborn cases will yield. Price 50 cents per box. For sale by Ormond & Walsh. The Canada Chemical Company will forfeit $10 for any case that these pills do not help.

Dr. Clarke's Sure Cure for Catarrh, and Dr Clarke's Sure Cure for Eczema, same price. $10 will be paid for any case they will not permanently cure.

Permanent Cures of Cancer

We here give a few cases, where the efficacy of our constitutional treatment in curing Cancer is established beyond all question. We have plenty on fyle.

There is ample proof that where our remedy cures, it cures to stay and saves people from the torture of knife and plaster.

CANCER OF THE BREAST—A lady had Cancer of the Breast, which rendered her right shoulder and arm almost helpless. Our remedy cured her over five years ago, and there is not the slightest return of the trouble.

CANCER OF THE FACE—This case of a gentleman who was so bad that his right cheek was almost eaten off with the disease. Plasters aggravated his trouble. Our treatment cured him five years ago and he has been all right since.

CANCER OF THE STOMACH—Doctors pronounced the trouble cancer of the stomach. There was vomiting of material that looked like coffee grounds. Great weakness and prostration. Cured over four years ago and well to-day.

CANCER OF THE NOSE—A severe case which was cured by our remedy in 1891 and has never returned to this day.

Full accounts of the above cases, together with the names and addresses of the persons, are given in our new book, "Cancer, its cause and Cure," sent to anyone, in plain wrapper, on receipt of two stamps. Stott & Jury, Bowmanville, Ont.

Light Sentence

At a special session of the County Court yesterday, before Judge Ketchum, of Cobourg, the hearing of the charge of arson against Fred Cousins was concluded. The prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to four months in gaol. The sentence is not a heavy one, as it was considered that the prisoner's mind was rather weak. R. E. Wood appeared for the Crown and Mr. Morden, of Belleville, for the prisoner.

Good Friday Band Concert

The band of the 57th Regiment will give two concerts in the opera house to-day, the first in the afternoon at 2.30 and in the evening at 8 o'clock. CHURCH NOTES

At St. Luke's church, divine services will be held to-day at 10.30 a. m., and at 7.30 p.m. Rev. E. A. Langfeldt will preach. The subject of the sermon for the morning service will be "Learning to Die," and in the evening, "Not this man, but Barabbas. Now Barabbas was a robber." The story of the cross will be sung after the service.

At St. John's church, there will be three services to-day, one at 11 a.m., children's service at 3 p.m., and evening service at 7.30 p.m.

At All Saints' church, there will be a service at 8 p.m. The collection will be for work among the Jews.

Two Fires Last Night

About 11.20 last night, the fire alarm sounded for a blaze in a vacant house on Perry street, owned by the Bradburn estate. The hose-reel was quickly upon the spot, and had a stream playing on the burning building. Only one stream was found necessary to subdue the flames. The house was a small frame one, occupied until Wednesday last by a family named Loudeau, and is practically a total loss. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it apparently started in the rear.

The fire brigade were again called out at about 12.45 this morning to extinguish a blaze in a small hot-house on the corner of King and Lewis streets, owned by Mr. John Adamson, and used for the propagation of celery and other plants. The structure was completely demolished, but no further damage resulted.

COFFEE PHILOSOPHY

Don't Blame the Doctor

The most dangerous false friend is the one that under the guise of friendship, day by day insinuates himself into your good graces and takes advantage of the association to do you harm; that is exactly the position of coffee. It enters your sanctum under the guise of a warm, close friend and slowly, day by day, works away at your destruction.

Why this should be no one can say, but it is a fact nevertheless. Hundreds of thousands are testifying of the terrible straits that coffee drinking has led them into.

In our clearer moments we know that health, bounding, perfect health brings with it the poise of nerve and clearness of mind that makes us kings instead of slaves, and brings a heaven on earth to us.

Through the very perversity of mankind, showing the elements of a tangible demon, we persist in taking into mouth and stomach the false friend even after we know it is working to throw us out of the peaceful heaven of health, and set up within us that condition of disease that the nerves show variously in dyspepsia, heart trouble, kidney trouble, etc., etc.

The patient physician who has, for years, been explaining to different people under his care the powerful effects of coffee on highly organized persons, finally becomes a bit careless and feels that he can only point out the facts and then let patients go their own path. Their very perversity will make of them slaves, and they follow the habit with the blind, dogged fatalism that cannot be understood.

Coffee "soaks" them certain and sure, and when they are hit hard enough they finally come round to the point where they are forced to give it up, then Postum Food Coffee comes as a relief in the time of desperate trouble. It requires no effort to slip off coffee drinking for well made Postum, and the change in health is something miraculous in many cases.

MR. SCOTT LEAVING TOWN

The Well Known Superintendent of the Cereal Company Leaving Town

Mr. Wm. Scott, the well-known superintendent of the American Cereal Works here, has severed his connections with that company and will leave town to go into business for himself in Ottawa. Mr Scott has been with the Cereal Co. for upwards of twenty-five years and has that business tact and ability which predicted him a most successful business career here as the superintendent of the Cereal Works which are in course of construction in town.

In his new field he will undoubtedly have that success which he so well deserves. During his brief sojourn in town Mr. Scott has won the esteem of a large number of citizens, who will deeply regret his departure from town.

Mr. Scott will be succeeded here by Mr. A. Macdonald, of the head office of the company in Chicago, and who is at present in town. Mr. Scott will probably remain in town for about two months longer.

LEGISLATIVE CANDIDATES

A Few Lines of Prose-Poetry by Our Junior Reporter

Oh, see the country candidate, he wears a winning smile, he looks as harmless as a lamb, but still he's full of guile. He seems to be so amiable, so kindly and so mellow, but yet he's scheming all the time to down the other feller.

Just watch the country candidate! How buoyant he appears! When first he starts to make the race he may have doubts and fears, but when he's out about a week and is filled with hot air talk, he banishes all fears and knows he'll get there in a walk!

Here's to the blithesome candidate who thinks he's got a cinch! Here's to him twice, if beaten sure he does not fail or flinch! Here's to him thrice, if when he finds another is preferred, he keeps right on sawing wood and never says a word.

The Anaemic Young Girl

AN EASTER PRESENTATION

Mr. J. C. Smith, Who is Leaving Town, Remembered by His Pupils in the Central School

At the closing hour of the winter term in the Central School yesterday, the pupils in Mr. J. C. Smith's Entrance Class took advantage of the occasion to present him with a set of military brushes and a walking stick, accompanied by an address, as a mark of the esteem in which he is held by his pupils.

The following is the address as read—

Mr. J. C. Smith,

Peterborough,

Dear Sir,

It is with feelings of regret we learn that, for a time at least our relations with you will be severed and we cannot allow you to go without some expression of our heart-felt appreciation of the sympathy you have shown us, the labor you have bestowed upon us, and the keen interest you have always manifested in our success and welfare.

We have found you ever a faithful and painstaking instructor a kind and courteous gentleman, a ready and willing counselor and assistant.

It will be gratifying for you to know that in the expression of these sentiments your pupils are joined by your fellow teachers and colleagues and that you will be followed by the best wishes and good-will of those with whom as teachers, you have for these many years been so intimately associated.

We would ask your acceptance of these slight tokens of our esteem and respect trusting that they may in some small measure, prove silent reminders of the pleasant and profitable hours we have spent together.

It is our sincere hope that you may have a speedy restoration to good health and that He to whom alone are all things known may be constantly your Guide and Protector.

Signed on behalf of the teachers of the Central School and of the pupils in the Entrance Class.

PHEMIE SMITH.

Mr. Smith was taken completely by surprise and with difficulty overcame his feelings to permit him to express his warmest thanks to his class for the kind wishes expressed in their address and for the beautiful presents. He assured the pupils that the memory of this occasion would long remain fresh in his mind.

The pupils had prepared an abundance of good things to eat which was served out and a very sociable and enjoyable hour spent.

Mr. Smith leaves on Tuesday for Pittsburg, Pa., where he has accepted a very responsible position. Mr. Smith will be followed by the best wishes of a host of friends.

ADVICE TO TEACHERS

Editor Morning Times.

Sir,—I see the Times invites contributions to its columns, and I therefore ask you to publish the following, which I trust our school teachers will read and put into practice:

Teach the children not to spit. It is rarely necessary. To spit on a slate, floor or sidewalk is an abomination.

Not to put the fingers in the mouth.

Not to pick the nose.

Not to wet the fingers with saliva in turning the leaves of books.

Not to put pencils into the mouth or moisten them with the lips.

Not to put money into the mouth.

Teach the children to wash hands and face often. See that they keep them clean.

Teach the children to turn the face aside when coughing and sneezing if they are facing another person.

In well regulated communities this sort of instruction is generally given at the home but the teachers can undoubtedly help.

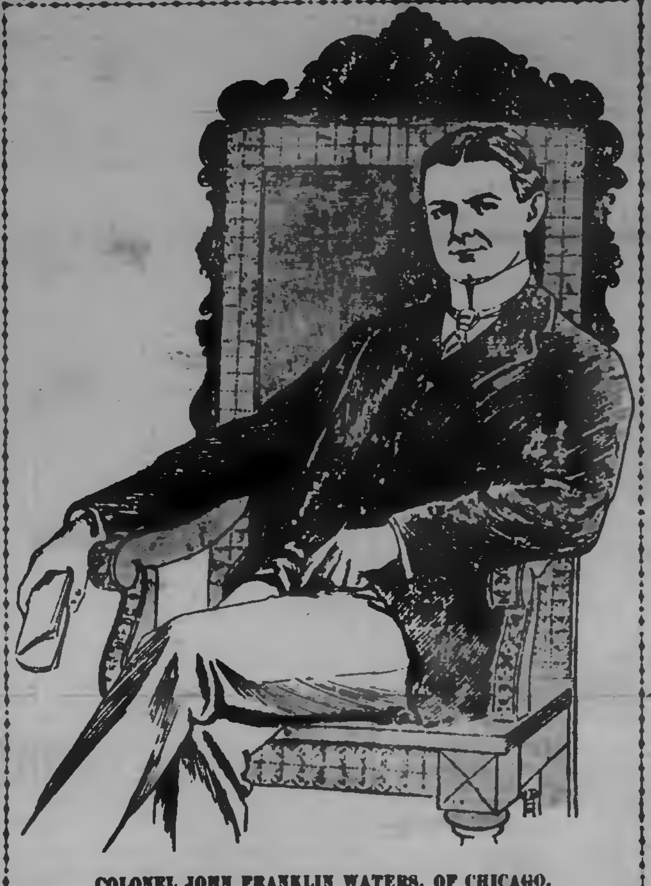
MANY RELIABLE WITNESSES

Prove That Old Cases of Chronic Catarrh can be Cured.

A Medicine That Will Cure Cases of Catarrh of Long Standing Deserves a Very High Place in the Annals of Medical Discovery.

Such a Medicine is Peruna.



COLONEL JOHN FRANKLIN WATERS, OF CHICAGO.

THOUSANDS of testimonials are pouring in every day of old cases of chronic catarrh that have resisted all treatment for years, being promptly and permanently cured by Peruna.

These reports do not all come from obscure places, signed by obscure people. A large proportion of these letters are written by men and women prominent in business and professional circles and many of them well known from ocean to ocean.

Colonel John Franklin Waters occupies a prominent position among the leading trial lawyers of Chicago. He has probably obtained more verdicts against corporations in suits for personal injuries than any man of his age in the United States, and during his practice of over fifteen years he has not lost a single case in the Supreme Courts of Illinois and Missouri. He is a hard worker and has the energy of four men.

For a number of years he had been afflicted with chronic catarrh and having recently been thoroughly cured of his old affection, an interview was obtained with him by one of our reporters in which he gave the following statement to the public:

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 6, 1900.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Gentlemen—"It gives me great pleasure to testify to the merits of such a worthy remedy for catarrh as your Peruna. I had suffered for a number of years from this very disagreeable disease and had tried many so-called remedies, but until I used Peruna none had the desired effect. I feel that I am perfectly cured and can cheerfully recommend Peruna to any one suffering from catarrh."

JOHN F. WATERS,
120 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

Another case equally well-known in Chicago, is reported through a letter from a veteran Railroad man.

J. H. Lyons.

Captain John H. Lyons, of Chicago, passenger agent for various railroad companies for the past twenty-four years, connected with the Postoffice Department for six years, the Police Department for six years, and at present connected with the Grand Trunk railroad, had a similar case. He is a veteran soldier and a prominent member of G. A. R. Camp No. 102.

Captain John H. Lyons, 1612 Prairie Ave., Chicago, Ill., writes:

"For twenty years I suffered with chronic catarrh but thanks to Peruna I am now entirely cured.

"It affords me much pleasure to make a statement in behalf of your meritorious remedy, Peruna. I have used same for catarrh and have found it to be all you claim for it. I had suffered for twenty years. I cheerfully recommend Peruna to anyone suffering from catarrh, as I believe that, as in my case, it will prove a sure cure."—Captain John H. Lyons.

Address The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, for instructive free literature on catarrh.

Peruna can be obtained for $1.00 a bottle at all first-class drug stores in Canada. "The Ills of Life," which can be secured at all up-to-date drug stores and upon request is sent free to all, gives a short description of all catarrhal diseases. Address Dr. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A.

SEVEN MAIN QUESTIONS

THAT ARE USUALLY ASKED BY MEN WHO ARE TEMPTED TO LOOK INTO A MINING PROPOSITION

1st. What is the characteristic ore showing of the property being presented?

2nd. Where is it located and is it in the vicinity of other mines that are being worked?

3rd. Is there a good title to the mines or are they merely held on bond and lease, or on an option?

4th. What sort of a corporation has been formed to take title to the property and under what state laws; also the charter life of the company?

5th. Is it safe to trust the men who are at the helm?

6th. Will money put in be used to open up the mines or will it be pocketed by the managers?

7th. Will one stand a good chance to get a fair slice of profits against what is put in?

In answer to the above questions, a prospectus, or statement will be sent upon postal card request addressed to

SAMPSON & WEMOTT, Fiscal Agents.

THE ASIATIC DUEL JAPAN AND RUSSIA

The Only Countries Directly Interested in China and Corea

BRITAIN'S NEW ENTANGLEMENT

Strong Opinion Expressed by the London Daily Mail Regarding the Eastern Trouble

London, March 31 — After all the only powers that have a direct political interest in China are Russia and Japan. England's interest is purely commercial and she desires above all to avoid territorial responsibility or political entanglement. The United States is still more determined to suffer neither. Germany's real interest in China is only commercial and would suffer, as it suffered by her prominent part in the intervention, by German entry into a scheme of partition or military compulsion in China. The territories of France are in the south of China, and she has nothing to gain for herself by mixing in the affairs of Pekin, Corea, or Manchuria. All these nations have much to lose and little to gain by war in China.

It is different with Russia and Japan. Both are Asiatic powers. Both have the vital instinct of expansion, which they must follow or die. They have met on ground necessary to both, which neither can yield without abdicating as a great Asiatic power. They have come to grips where they must fight it out. The island empire must overflow on the mainland or stifle by overpopulation in confined space. The continental power must reach the sea or wither for want of free commerce with the world. That makes the coast of Corea and Manchuria between them a stricken field, the narrow seas a duelling ground, which neither can avoid without thwarting the most vital national aspirations of their people.

Both want allies and that is what is troubling the peace of Europe. Each tries to strengthen itself for the coming struggle by drawing into it powers that have no political or military interest. Japan has manoeuvred England into an alliance which threatens a costly and barren war. Russia has forced France to pay for protection against Germany by carrying their pact into Asia, where France has no interest, and exposing her fleet to be swept from the seas by England. The search for allies will not stop here, but it is probable that no more will be found. They will have too much sense to ask the United States, and Germany will have sense enough to refuse. It would be the best thing all around if fear of England should keep France out, and leave the issue to be settled between the two powers interested, in a fight to a finish. There will be no peace in Asia till this duel has been decided.

House Committee on Foreign Affairs Orders Chinese Exclusion Bill Favorably Reported to the House

Washington, March 31 — The house committee on foreign affairs yesterday completed consideration of the Chinese exclusion bill and by a practically unanimous vote ordered it favorably reported to the house.

The exclusion of Chinese laborers is made complete, both as to mainland territory of the United States and all insular possessions, including the Philippines and Hawaii.

The committee finally restored the prohibitory clause recommended by the Pacific coast senators and members, so that as reported it reads:

> And the prohibition shall apply to all Chinese laborers as well as those in such insular possessions at the time of acquisition by the United States, as to those who have come here since, and those who may be born there hereafter."

In addition the committee framed the following new section, specifically directing the Philippine commission to put the exclusion law into force:

> That the Philippine commission are hereby authorized and required to make all regulations necessary for the enforcement of this action in the Philippines.

San Juan, Porto Rico, was struck out from the list of ports where Chinese may enter, as it is feared there would be a Chinese influx at that point, owing to the lack of sufficient official force to make careful inspection.

In many respects the measure is practically the same as that agreed on by the Pacific coast interests, with certain amendments made from time to time.

After reporting the bill on Thursday, Chairman Hitt is hopeful of bringing it to early consideration before the house.

A VAST FORTUNE FOR NATION'S GOOD

The Bulk of Cecil Rhodes' Vast Wealth for Imperial Purposes

GIVEN TO "YOUNGER BRITAIN."

To Promote the Cause of Education in the Interest of the Empire

London, March 31. — Amid the maze of biographies, character sketches, criticisms, and eulogies of the late Cecil Rhodes which continue to appear here is a letter published to-day which throws new light on the historic Lobengula treaty, by which Mr. Rhodes made Rhodesia. It is signed "One Who Knows," and points out that neither Mr. Rhodes, Mr. Maguire, nor Mr. Rudd deserve credit for the famous concession, but that it belongs to F. R. Thompson, member of Parliament for Wynberg, Cape Colony, known as "Matabele" Thompson. As proof of the writer's assertion, this characteristic letter of Mr. Rhodes to Mr. Thompson, dated London, July, 1889, is adduced:

"Dear Thompson,—Stick to it. I trust to you alone. Upon you depends the whole thing. The concession I consider to be your work. The charter is mine. Without the latter the former would be unworkable. Nature abhors a vacuum. I ask you is there a better chance in the world for you? Besides being one of the richest men in the Colony, you will have the kudos (glory). Napoleon was prepared to share the world so long as he got Europe to work on these lines. Can't you give the whites who are in the country something? After all they deserve something. If any doubt your power show them this. G—— will pay all checks you draw. I feel you won't fail me. Stick to the post."

"One who Knows" adds: "Without Mr. Thompson's nineteen months of daily palaver and peril at the King's kraal at Buluwayo, there would have been no Rhodesia to-day."

A financial authority of the Daily Telegraph estimates Mr. Rhodes' fortune at over £15,000,000, and, in a forecast of the future of Rhodesia, draws a curious comparison between the agricultural possibilities of that country and those of Iowa. The selection of Iowa is due to the fact that Robert Benson, a director and leading spirit of a land company of Iowa, is now a director of the Chartered Trust Company, and is otherwise largely interested in Mr. Rhodes' territories. It is said that a network of farms will be started in Rhodesia on the American plan.

VAST FORTUNE FOR NATION'S GOOD.

London, March 31. All reports respecting the terms of Mr. Rhodes' will, public benefactions, and the disposition of his property are premature. The provisions of the will may not be disclosed for a week or ten days. Those intimate with Mr. Hawksley are confident that Mr. Rhodes' mining and other investments have been pooled and left in block as a trust for the benefit of South Africa. Mr. Alfred Beit and Mr. Hawksley are probably associated in this trust. Those closely associated with Mr. Rhodes do not expect special financial bequests. They assert that it was one of Mr. Rhodes' cardinal principles that personal service should be well recompensed during life, and that the bulk of his fortune should be reserved for public services in South Africa.

One paper says that Mr. Rhodes left the bulk of his fortune, outside of some personal and family bequests, to the promotion of the vast Imperial plans of education. This project embraces every land where the Union Jack flies. His purpose is the intellectual betterment of the British race throughout the world and the fostering of the Imperial sentiment. The Daily Mail adds that this idea of better fitting "younger Britain" to cope successfully with rival nationalities was long a dominant scheme with Cecil Rhodes, but that even his closest friends little imagined the absorbing hold it obtained upon him until this was disclosed by the terms of his will.

IDENTIFIED AS FENIAN

Welland Canal Dynamitard, Now in Kingston Penitentiary, said to be Luke Dillon

The Buffalo Express claims to have discovered that the dynamiter, Karl Dallman, who, with his confederates, John Nolin, and John Walsh, was sentenced on May 24th, 1901, to imprisonment for life in Kingston Penitentiary, for attempting to blow up the Welland Canal locks, near Thorold, is none other than Luke Dillon of Philadelphia, who was prominent in the affairs of the Clan-na-Gael thirteen or fourteen years ago, when the Cronin murder was attracting so much attention to that society, and who went on the witness stand at the trial, and disclosed the secret of "The Triangle," the council of three that under the title of executive ruled the society. It will be remembered that Dallman admitted at the time of his arrest that his name was assumed, but refused to tell who he really was. The Express identifies Dallman as Dillon by means of his photograph, and through some of the people who knew him when he lived in Philadelphia. The picture of the Welland dynamiter, the Express says is identical in every particular with that which was printed of Dillon during the Cronin trial, if a little allowance is made for increased weight and a somewhat more genteel appearance, which the Buffalo paper ascribes to the change in occupation. Dallman's photograph moreover, was shown to John Dillon, who keeps a liquor store in Philadelphia, in the building adjoining the premises where Luke Dillon used to do business, and he not only declared that it was Dillon's picture, but he knew that Dillon had got into trouble in Canada, and had been imprisoned. He had gone to school with Luke Dillon's children, and was well acquainted with all the family.

The Express professes even to know the motive for the attempt on the canal. The two wings of the Clan-na-Gael, it says, were drawing together, and the Cronin party wanted to have some feat to their credit which would give them sufficient prestige to gain the leadership of the reunited order. Dr. Cronin, too, had been a member of the 19th Regiment at St. Catharines, and had been called a Canadian constable, and the party wished to wipe out this reproach. They believed that they could at one stroke prevent Canada from sending aid to South Africa, and at the same time force Great Britain to follow a line of conduct that would reassure her colonies.

Items of Interest

London, March 31.—The new staff officer, who is to be added to the Commander-in-Chief's staff, is officially designated as "Inspector-General of Royal Garrison Artillery and Coast Defence." The object of the appointment is officially stated to be the advancement of the science of coast defence, and to ensure that a high standard of excellence and uniformity is attained by the artillery personnel in the handling of guns and material. His inspections are to be technical only, he will be responsible that the officers and men engaged in the defence of our coasts, and those of the colonies are thoroughly efficient in every branch of their work, and he will co-operate with the authorities in arranging manoeuvres in conjunction with the navy.

He is also to make an annual inspection of the Royal Garrison Artillery in the United Kingdom, Gibraltar, and Malta, and a biennial inspection of the further defences in Halifax and the West Indies.

A NOVELTY IN MEDALS.

London, March 31.—King Edward has given a series of private sittings to Mr. Frank Bowcher for a new medal which is in the future to be presented to school children who attain a certain standard of attendance. The medal is similar to that which has hitherto been given to the children, with the exception, of course, that the King's head takes the place of that of Queen Victoria. The head is in profile on the obverse side of the medal, and his Majesty is shown wearing a crown. The likeness is recognised as an excellent one, and is somewhat similar to an admirable profile of King Edward which Mr. Bowcher designed for a private accession medal, one of which in gold was purchased by Mr. Pierpont Morgan for £150. The new attendance medals, which have been struck by Messrs. Spink of Piccadilly, are of four kinds —white metal, bronze, gilded bronze, and silver.

Ottawa, March 31. — The Dominion Government is said to have sent a favorable reply to the War Office in answer to the request for another Canadian contingent of 2,000 mounted men, and now awaits the details as to how the force is to be raised. When that is received arrangements will be made for raising, clothing and equipping the force and appointing the necessary officers. Within a month after the word is given to raise the force it can be fully outfitted and ready to embark. The point of mobilization it is expected will be Quebec, and the War Office presumable will furnish the necessary transports. Two thousand horses will be required, and they can be obtained if the necessary price is paid. It is thought that the force will be divided into two regiments, to be known as the 3rd and 4th Canadian Rifles respectively. In such a case two commanding officers will be needed. Possibly Col. Lessard, who commanded the Royal Canadian Dragoons in South Africa, may be asked to undertake the command of one. There will also be an opportunity for several smart, capable non-commissioned officers to secure commissions. It is not improbable that recommendations for men of this class may be invited from the heads of the mounted police, the permanent cavalry and some of the regiments of active militia.

Ottawa, March 31.—The Dominion Government is waiting word from the Imperial War Office to commence the mobilization of the contingent of mounted troops for duty in South Africa. This statement was given out to-day.

It is the intention to send two regiments of 1,000 each — all mounted infantry. Col. Lessard at present commanding the Royal Canadian Dragoons at Toronto, will, it is stated, have command of one regiment, and Major Turner, V.C., of Quebec, now commanding the Queen's Own Canadian Hussars, will likely command the second thousand.

Major Turner has already been to Africa and has distinguished himself by obtaining the highest honour in the British army. He is mentioned at the department as one of the best men for the command. The force will consist entirely of mounted infantry and will be mobilized with the utmost despatch.

London, March 31. — Mr. Wyndham's new Irish land bill introduced yesterday, in addition to the clauses already mentioned, provides that a landlord may himself repurchase part of his estate, not exceeding one-fifth of the total area, from the commission, thus becoming a tenant purchaser, in case he desires to continue to reside on the estate. All the transfer arrangements are in the hands of the commission.

The bill provides that cash, not exceeding £12,000,000, to be outstanding at any one time, may be advanced to the commission by the Exchequer, thus enabling purchases to be made on a vastly larger scale than ever before.

Weary Brain Workers

Fagged out, ideas come slowly as molasses. You think of things just a minute or two too late. Snap's gone! The buoyancy that made work a pleasure — that's gone too. The doctor would tell you that you are run down, not eating enough, nor digesting enough. Your stomach needs aid, your digestion needs a bracer too. Your blood requires phosphorus and iron that it may be formed readily. Now Ferrozone is a wonderful nerve bracer and blood maker. It's food for the blood and nerves. It will make you strong quickly and permanently. Sold by Ormond & Walsh.

RHODES' GREAT POLICY

Boers Do Not Grieve Over His Death - Wanted Africa Red

New York, March 30—We should be guilty of transparent hypocrisy if we should pretend to share England's grief over the death of Cecil Rhodes," said an ex-official of the Transvaal this morning. "We sympathise with those to whom the passing of this great schemer comes as a personal bereavement, and from every other point of view we regard the event with satisfaction.

"Rhodes has ever been the deadly enemy of Boer nationality. Wherever our interests were involved he was destitute alike of justice and mercy. The absorbing vision of his career was the map of Africa painted red."

GOING TO BERLIN

Big Michigan Bee Sugar Plant to be Moved There

The following will interest promoters of a sugar beet factory for Peterborough:

On March 25th a deal was closed selling the Wolverine sugar factory, one of the finest beet sugar plants in Michigan, at Benton Harbor, to E. H. Dyer & Co., of Cleveland. The factory will be torn down at once by 150 experienced wreckers and shipped to Berlin, Ont. The consideration is $350,000. The plant cost $325,000, and was built three years ago, when material was cheaper. It was sold because the farmers in Benton Harbor section would not raise sugar beets and on account of the probable reduction of the beet-sugar bounty. The factory employed 150 men, and last fall spent $85,000 for labor and beets.

ON TRIAL FOR MURDER

A Sensational Murder Trial to Begin To-day

Hudson, N.Y., March 31 — An extraordinary trial term of the supreme court convenes here to-day with Justice Chester, of Albany on the bench. The purpose of the special session is to try the Van Wormer brothers and their cousin for the alleged murder of Farmer Peter Hallenbeck.

MONOPOLIZING ATTENTION

The American Invasion of Englandis Causing Considerable Interest

London, March 31 — Britishers are beginning to wonder where the American invasion will end. With players from across the water filling the leading theatres, with the transportation systems of the metropolis in the hands of Americans, and of more recent date, the tobacco trade of all England passing into the control of American companies, it is not surprising that American enterprise is an all-absorbing topic of discussion. In no field of human activity, however, is the prominence of Americans more pronounced just now than in the world of sport. American pugilists of no great prominence at home have come to England and vanquished the top-notchers with little difficulty. In the recent boat race between Oxford and Cambridge two of the oarsmen were from across the water. And now the latest American product to challenge attention is Jack Carkeek, the wrestler, who for several weeks has been defeating all comers at the Alhambra.

DAIRY INTERESTS

An Effort Being Made to Secure Better Organization

With the object of securing better organization of the dairy interests, the Eastern Ontario Dairymen's Association is endeavoring to secure a complete list of all the competent cheese and butter makers in the eastern half of the province. When complete the list will be published and circulated among all cheese and butter factories. In this way the factories desiring the services of competent cheese makers will know where to secure them. By having such a list the Dairymen's Association will also be able to send any important announcements or dairy bulletins direct to the makers whenever necessary. Circulars have been sent to cheese and butter makers to be filled in and returned to the Association. Makers who have not received one of these circulars yet should write to Mr. H. B. Cowan, Corresponding Secretary Dairymen's Association, Ottawa, who will see one is forwarded.

GALLANT FIGHT PUT UP BY THE CANADIANS

Pretoria, Transvaal Colony, March 31. —About 1,500 Boers under Delarey, Liebenberg, Kemp and Wolmarans, were within the area of Lord Kitchener's latest move, but although surprised by the rapidity displayed by the British troops, gaps in the latter's lines enabled most of the burgers to escape. The Boer prisoners totalled 179 men, including Commandant H. Kruger and ex-Landrost Neethling, of Klerksdorp.

From the first prisoners captured it was learned that General Delarey himself was outside the actual cordon, having slept some distance westward, but Liebenberg, Kemp and other Boer commanders were inside the column of troops. The first body, consisting of about 500 Boers, sighted at ten o'clock in the morning, March 24, retreated at full speed, making for a gap between the British columns. A race for the opening ensued. British mounted infantry, which had already ridden upwards of fifty miles, pressed their tired horses until they gave out, when the men jumped off and raced forward on foot. Some of the mounted men, however, were able to gallop right into the gap just ahead of the burghers, whom they met with a warm fire. These troops also succeeded in driving back another body of 300 Boers, who were forced to desert the guns they had captured from the Von Donop convoy in February. The Boers tried to get through several openings, but on each occasion were forced to double back until they, ultimately found a gap and passed out of the British lines, within sight of Klerksdorp. Night fell before the pursuing columns could overtake the Boers.

Five Canadians who fell out of their column and tried to work their way back were surrounded by a Boer force, and made a splendid defence. But finally seeing their case was hopeless, four of the Canadians surrendered. The fifth, however, indignantly refused to throw down his arms and continued a single-handed fight until he was killed. This was regarded as one of the most interesting incidents of the day.

An instance of the resourcefulness of the Boers was given by Liebenberg and several hundred men. Taking advantage of the confusion of the drive, he and his followers assumed a formation similar to that of a British column, and moving close to one of the numerous gaps in the British lines, succeeded in reaching this opening before their ruse was detected, and got safely away.

The guns captured from Von Donop's convoy were brilliantly recaptured by the Scottish Horse, who charged up to the muzzles of the artillery, and rode the Boer gunners off their feet before the latter had a chance to fire.

Pretoria, March 31. — Acting President Schalkburger and the other members of the Transvaal mission are still at Kroonstadt. They have not yet succeeded in getting in touch with Mr. Steyn, President of the Orange Free State. The situation is unchanged. Despatch riders are seeking him in several directions. Possibly it will be some days before they can locate him. Prisoners who were taken in the recent drive westward from Klerksdorp says that Mr. Steyn and General De Wet were recently at Klerksdorp conferring with General Delarey.

15,000,000 GRANT FOR THE IRISH FARMERS

Government's New Land Bill Introduced in the House of Commons

London, March 31.—The Chief Secretary for Ireland, George Wyndham, introduced the Irish Land bill in the House of Commons to-day.

Mr. Wyndham said the object of the bill was to amend the Land Purchase law. The Government could not ignore the problem owing to the acute crisis in agriculture, which was now at a standstill, and in view of the fact that there was an alarming decrease in the advance for the purchase of land owing to the unwillingness of the landowners to sell.

The main provision of the bill authorizes the Land Commission to take over the whole or any part of an estate whose owner is willing to sell. The commission will then resell it to the tenants. But the assent of three-quarters of the number of tenants to purchase the land is necessary before the commission will undertake to transfer any part of an estate.

The landlord may himself repurchase part of his estate, not exceeding one-fifth of the total area, from the commission, thus becoming a tenant-purchaser in case he desires to continue to reside on the estate.

The bill does not provide for compulsory purchase. All the transfer arrangements are in the hands of the commission and are simplified as much as possible.

The bill provides that cash, not exceeding $15,000,000 to be outstanding at any one time, may be advanced to the commission by the Exchequer, thus enabling purchases to be made on a vastly larger scale than ever before.

The Irish members evinced little enthusiasm over the bill. John Redmond, the Nationalist leader in the House, said he proposed to reserve his judgement until he had studied the provisions of the bill carefully. He warned the Government that universal compulsory purchase must be the ultimate solution of the problem, as nothing else would be acceptable.

Timothy M. Healy, Nationalist, said he believed the bill would do something toward settling the question, but that much depended upon the constitution of new estates and the commission.

REDMOND PROPOSES TO CENSURE THE SPEAKER.

London, March 31.—John Redmond, the leader of the Irish Nationalists, gave notice in the House of Commons to-day of a motion, equivalent to a vote of censure on the Speaker, William Court Gully, for not having made the Colonial Secretary, Joseph Chamberlain, withdraw his remark, "the honorable gentleman is a good judge of traitors," addressed to John Dillon in the House March 20, which led to Mr. Dillon retoring that Mr. Chamberlain was a "damned liar."

THE QUIRK MURDER STILL REMAINS UNSOLVED

The Widow and Toole Tell Their Stories Under Oath at Brantford—A Threat from Detroit—Inquest Adjourned for Three Weeks

Brantford, March 29.—On Thursday night the unfinished Quirk inquest was adjourned at the request of Crown Attorney Wilkes until April 21. The evidence taken Thursday does not serve to dispel the mystery in any manner. The only thing new at all disclosed was the fact that a letter threatening Quirk had been received from Detroit a short time previous to the murder. This letter had been handed to the police.

Edward Kennedy, the bell-boy, swore that he had gone to bed at 11.20, and that shortly afterwards he heard groans from the barn. He dressed and ran to the hallway. Fifteen yards from Toole's room he cried out that some one was hurt in the barn. Mrs. Quirk, whose room was close by, heard him, and came to her door. He told her that some one was hurt in the barn, went on down stairs, and found that Ryan, the cook, had gone out to the barn. Ryan was coming from the barn when he got out in the yard. Together they returned to the barn and looked at the body. He returned to the house. Toole was then in the office, putting on his coat preparatory to going out to the barn. When Kennedy went to the barn a second time he met Toole returning. Toole made no remark as he passed him. Kennedy said that he had never heard Quirk and Toole quarrel.

Mrs. Quirk's Evidence.

Mrs. Quirk, the widow, in her evidence said that Toole had been her foster-brother. They had been together for twenty years. Toole was twice a widower, his second wife having died four years ago. The partners had purchased the hotel three years ago on her husband's suggestion, Toole putting up the money. The arrangement was that Mrs. Quirk should be housekeeper, Toole to have the office, and books, and Quirk himself to take charge of the bar. The money, however, was banked in Mrs. Quirk's name, she having charge of the bank account. The household bills were paid weekly, but Quirk banked the bar receipts in his wife's name, and gave notes for the bar bills which were taken up by check, signed by his wife.

The bar receipts, though it was the custom to deposit them every day, had not been banked during the three days prior to the murder. The receipts of the three days would total about $220. When she heard the bell-boy speak of trouble in the barn, she went through her daughter's room to that of Toole. She found him sitting on the bed with his coat and boots off, reading a paper. She told him there was something wrong at the barn; perhaps the hostler was drunk again. Then she returned to her room, where she partly dressed, and went out into the hall, where Ryan, the cook, exclaimed to her "Jim is killed!" She r[illegible] to Toole's room and told him what Ryan had said. Then she [illegible] Toole running past her in the hallway, and then she fainted.

Mrs. Quirk said that her husband was insured for $12,500, of which $5000 was payable to herself. The beneficiaries of the other policies she did not know.

Toole's Story.

Toole, in his evidence, said that he was an American, a native of Pottsville, Pa., and told the jury that he had been in sporting transactions with Quirk, was in politics for a time, engaged in the bottling business, was clerk of the court, warden of the prison, went into the hotel business, and finally, before his latest venture, was for a year a detective. Toole purchased the hotel in the name of Quirk's wife, paying $4,700, of which amount Quirk contributed only $220. Mrs. Quirk gave him a chattel mortgage.

He related the same story of his movements the night of the murder as he did the day after the crime. He did not hear the bell-boy's shout, and denied that Ryan, the cook, had called him, as he had sworn. His first intimation of trouble was when Mrs. Quirk had opened his door. Before he could drag on his shoes and coat she had returned, crying that her husband was being killed in the barn. He ran down to the barn and found Quirk lying on the floor, dead. He returned from the barn, but, after spending a few moments in the house, quieting Quirk's daughter, Myrtle, he again went to the scene of the murder. This time he moved the body, and then shifted the cutter, which was close to the remains. He grasped the cutter by the top, and was sure that the bloodstains upon it had not been from his hands. He removed the money in Quirk's pockets, and handed it to a man named Taylor. He then told of the Detroit letter. Toole said he had arrived at the conclusion that Quirk had been murdered upon his second visit to the barn, when he had examined the cuts on his partner's head. Toole also said that during the Sunday afternoon a stranger had called to see Quirk, but he was out, and the witness forgot to tell him of the visit when they met.

HOUSES IN DEMAND

Supply of Houses Now Exhausted and Rents Advancing

The rental market in Peterborough is more brisk than the expectations of the real estate men. The demand for houses renting from $8 to $12 per month is so great that the supply is exhausted.

Several owners of unimproved property propose to build houses with modern improvements and are expecting either to rent them or to sell them for cash or on installments.

A number of tenants who have paid rent for a number of years are now paying from $200 to $500 as the first payment and will then each month make a payment which amounts to about as much as the monthly rental would be.

Mr. Hurley, the leading real estate man, says:

"There is a good, brisk demand for houses renting from $8 to $15 per month."

The scarcity of brick and the advance in wages will prevent many from from building this season.

An Excellent Appointment

Lakefield News: Mr. M. H. McWilliams, of town, has received the appointment of Secretary of the Northern Life Insurance Company, of London, Ont. He will leave to assume his new duties on April 1st. Mr. McWilliams was a resident of Peterborough some years ago, and up until eight months ago he was engaged in the insurance business in Ottawa. He has many friends here who will be pleased to learn of his success in the insurance world. His appointment over 100 other applicants speaks volumes and shows that Mr. McWilliams must possess excellent qualifications for the position he is called upon to fill." The above is clipped from the Examiner. Mr. McWilliams is a son of our esteemed fellow-villager, Mr. J. H. McWilliams, and was born and brought up in this village.

THE DEBENTURES SOLD

Tender of Hanson Bros. Accepted at $97.03 for Each $100

A special meeting of the town council was held on Saturday morning for the purpose of considering the tenders received for the purchase of the waterworks debentures. Those present were Mayor Deane, Aldermen Rush, Roger, Morrison, McGregor, Cininscale, Shortly, Batten and Best.

THE TENDERS RECEIVED.

Aldermen Roger, Chairman of the Finance Committee, presented the following report:

To the Council of the Town of Peterborough:

Gentlemen,—Your Finance Committee beg leave to report as follows:

1. In accordance with the instructions given, we advertised for offers for $230,000 of waterworks debentures, and received the following offers:

Hanson Bros., Montreal, $97.03 for each $100, ($223,169.)

G. A. Stimson & Co., Toronto, $222,-500.

W. C. Brent, Toronto, $220,106.

A. E. Ames & Co., Toronto, $219,781.

Dominion Securities Corporation, Toronto. $217,416.

Jno Parker & Co., Boston, $95.65, ($219,995.)

These offers all accrued interest up to the time of delivery.

We recommend that the offer of Hanson Bros., which is the best offer received, be accepted, and that this Committee be authorised to carry on the sale.

2. We recommend the payment of $35 a hydrant per year to the Peterborough water commissioners, to be paid quarterly in the same manner as payment for hydrants was made to the Peterborough Water Co.

3. We recommend that the expenses of the Mayor and Chairman of the Manufactures Committee to Toronto, respecting manufacturing interests, be confirmed.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

G. M. ROGER,
Chairman.

Ald. Best thought it would be better to leave the matter in abeyance for another month, as a better figure might be offered. He said he had authority to state, that if the Town wished to sell the waterworks, they could obtain $45,000 more than they paid for the system or $275,000 in all, provided a 15-year franchise was granted to the company. A local company had been authorised to make the statement.

The other aldermen favored the acceptance of the highest bid, and the report was adopted.

Ald. Roger moved, seconded by Ald. Shortly, that the treasurer be instructed to pay through the Town Solicitor, the costs in the case, Peterborough, vs. Grand Trunk.—Carried.

This was a case dismissed at the trial, but afterwards taken to the Court of Appeal, where the town lost the case. The question disputed was in connection with the erection of the Smith street bridge.

The Council then adjourned.

Drugging Will Not Cure Catarrh

This loathsome disease is caused by germs that invade the air passages of the head, throat and lungs, and can be cured only by inhalation of medicated air. Stomach medicines, atomizers, and snuffs are ineffectual because they fail to reach the cause of the trouble. Catarrhozone is successful because it is inhaled to every part of the breathing organs, and has power to kill the germ, heals the inflamed tissues and prevents droppings in the throat. Catarrhozone treats more than one thousand square feet of the mucous surface with every breath taken through the inhaler, and affords instant relief. It perfectly cures catarrh, asthma and bronchitis. Sold by druggists. Two months' treatment, price $1.00. Small size 25c. or by mail from Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont.

Fifty Years a Sister

South Orange, N. J., March 30—At St. Elizabeth's convent, Madison, was observed to-day the fiftieth anniversary of Sister Mary Catherine's profession as a Sister of Charity. A feature of the observance was the celebration of a solemn pontifical mass by Bishop O'Connor of Newark.

THE POLICY OF SUICIDE

It is related of a certain amiable human that he took to end his troubles "a cup of cold pizen." This is about what Ontario is doing at the present time regarding the white elephant known as New Ontario. Here we are in old Ontario giving away our property to people who build railways and develop a country that takes our settlers and leaves us with a decreasing population and depreciated farms. If ever there was a policy of madness this is one. No sooner do we begin to recover from the effects of bringing Manitoba into rivalry with ourselves than we proceed to introduce another rival into the field. The time will come soon enough for development without paying too dear for our whistle. The new policy will add to the revenues and financial position of whatever government is in power, no doubt, but it is absolute ruin to our farmers. The decay of old Ontario is founded on the usual sufficient reasons. We must not forget when we look open-mouthed with admiration at the circus in the distance that we are paying for it, and not the circus men. It is too serious to be funny, after all.

TO DAM NIAGARA

St. Clair Lake and River are clear of ice, and the steamboats were running on Lake Huron on Saturday, March 22nd, the earliest opening of navigation ever known. The caretaker of Rondeau Park reports that the water in Lake Erie is 18 inches lower than at this time last year. Whether this is the result of natural causes, or has been brought about by the diversion of a large quantity of water from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi by the Chicago Drainage Canal, is a problem demanding investigation. If the latter, the result is apt to become more serious as the years roll on. Then it is possible that the greater draught from Lake Erie through the Welland Canal for the supply of the DeCew's Falls electric works, and the taking of water from the Niagara River above the Falls for the electric power house on the United States side, have assisted to lower the Lake Erie level. The damage to United States interests will be greater than to those of Canada, for we have on our shore no ports corresponding in importance to Buffalo, Erie, Cleveland and Toledo.

The menace to the shipping interests of Lake Erie is receiving attention in Washington, and a provision has been made in the River and Harbor Bill for the survey of a channel for deep-draft vessels around the shoals and rapids at the head of the Niagara River, it being agreed that should a dam be built it will be quite necessary to open such a channel, regardless of cost. That the subject is destined to have serious consideration is also apparent from the fact that a further provision has been agreed upon, authorizing the President of the United States to invite the Government of Great Britain to join in the formation of an International Commission, to be composed of three members from the United States and three who shall represent the interests of the Dominion of Canada, whose duty it shall be to report upon the advisability of locating a dam in Niagara River at the outlet of Lake Erie, with a view to determining whether such dam will benefit navigation. If the commission finds that the construction of such a dam is advisable, the members are to make recommendations to their respective Governments looking to an agreement or treaty which shall provide for the construction of the same, at the same time estimating the probable cost thereof. In selecting the members of the commission the President is authorized to appoint an officer of the Corps of Engineers of the United States army, a civil engineer well versed in the hydraulics of the Great Lakes—and one lawyer of experience in international and riparian law.

It is reported that the members of the River and Harbor Committee are unanimously of the opinion that, in view of the rapid fall of the lake level, the dam across the Niagara should be constructed at the earliest possible date. It is said that such a dam will in no way interfere with the flow of water down the Niagara River, as all water now passing into that channel would reach the same source over the dam or through sluiceways, as determined by the engineers. By some it is believed that a rise of two feet in the level of Lake Erie will be sufficient, while others feel that three feet is none too much. It is said that a rise of three feet would be felt as far west as the Detroit River. Thus many parts would be benefited, but at the same time there would likely be a great overflow of lowlands both in the United States and Canada.

A Flag for the Empire.

"An empire flag! At last an ensign which shall adequately represent Great Britain both at home and beyond seas seems assured. The Express is able to announce that the King has received with favor the suggestion that a new flag was needed to keep pace with the growing empire, and that a finished design for the same will be submitted to his Majesty next week. Mr. C. D. Bennett, the cousin of a distinguished colonial Governor, and himself well known in several of the colonies, has been entrusted with the responsibility of preparing this design. Mr. Bennett has had many difficulties to contend with, in evolving an harmonious and artistic design which should fittingly express British sovereignty. He has succeeded, however, in giving our colonial possessions full representation, without sacrificing the chief feature of the old flag—the Cross of St. George—which is in itself a familiar emblem of England's power in every quarter of the globe.

"On an absolutely white ground is embroidered a golden sun—typical of a race on whose dominions the sun never sets—shining on a large red Cross of St. George, representing, of course, the empire at home. In the left-hand corner is an Imperial Crown, the sign of one great empire, embracing all creeds, tolerating all beliefs, but under one great Imperial idea.

"Underneath the crown, on a blue scroll is inscribed the Latin rendering of the motto—'the empire on which the sun never sets'—which is the proudest boast of every Englishman:

"'Imperium cui nullus
Solis occasus.'

"In the righthand top corner of the flag will be placed the particular device representative of the empire beyond the sea. For instance, the flag to be used in India will contain the star of India in the righthand top corner.

"The flag as used in Australia will contain instead the device of the new Commonwealth, while the Canadian and other colonial Governments will add to the design their own badge, for use on all 'empire flags' in that particular part of the world.

"This design has been warmly commended by several persons high in authority to whom it has been exhibited. It now remains for his Majesty to place the final seal of approval. Mr. Bennett has notified the King that the design awaits his Majesty's pleasure, and it will probably be exhibited to him next week. Should it be approved by his Majesty, the new design will become 'official' without delay.

"To the King himself is due this idea. His Majesty has realized that the present national emblem does not fully express the dignity and importance of the empire. When the Prince and Princess of Wales started on their tour nearly a year ago they were especially instructed to carefully note every shade of colonial opinion on the subject—whether a new flag was desired and what each colony expected. Everywhere the answer was the same: 'Give us a new flag.' When the popular verdict was reported to the King, his Majesty at once signified a desire to have a proper design prepared. After weeks of toil the design is ready, which many people believe will eventually be flying at the mastheads of our warships and over British possessions at home and abroad."

The King's Champion.

The King's Champion, Mr. Frank Seaman Dymoke, is a man of the moment. In a timely description of his office and claims written for Pearson's Magazine the following interesting passage occurs:—

"The Champions of Britain were originally paid for their services by being allowed to hold Scrivelsby Manor by what is technically called Knight Sergeantry, a term applied to lands held in exchange for a yearly service rendered to the reigning Sovereign. The holding of estates by Knight Sergeantry, a remnant of the old feudal system, was done away with during the Restoration of 1660, so that the present Champion holds his estates exactly as other estates are held by the nobility or county gentlemen of England.

"His sole recompense now consists in claiming a gold cup, together with the horse used at the coronation, with the saddle, armor and furniture. The horse, by the way, is always supposed to be the second best in the Sovereign's stable—the best being used by the Sovereign himself. At the coronation of George III. the Champion, Mr. John Dymoke, is said to have ridden the horse which carried George II. during the battle of Dettingen."

Emperor Francis Joseph.

"The Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria is very plain in his tastes and habits. At 6 o'clock in the morning he takes his breakfast, consisting of some cold meat, coffee and fresh-made bread and cake. Between 12 and 1 o'clock he takes his dejeuner, two dishes of meat and some ordinary pastry. Dinner is served at 6 o'clock sharp. All his meals are served in his library at his writing desk. Not even a tablecloth is spread. His personal valet on duty receives the dishes in an antechamber on a large tray, and puts the tray before the Emperor on his desk. Very often the Emperor takes a spoonful of soup between two signatures. He is a very busy man. With the meal, the menu for next day's dinner is sent up and laid before the Emperor. It contains two soups, patties, fish, two entrees, two roasts, two desserts, pastry, cheese, fruit, etc., and the Emperor with a blue pencil crosses out whatever he does not want. The Emperor does not care much for wine. He prefers a glass of beer. Nor does he indulge in expensive Havana cigars. A plain home-made cigar, the so-called Virginia cigar, long and thin, with a straw running through it, is his favorite smoke. These cigars cost only five [illegible]—that is, about twopence apiece."

Some Hints For the Bride to Be.

Now that the season of summer weddings is over, brides all over the country have leisure in which to contemplate. Among their many contemplations are those which pertain to the acknowledgment of wedding gifts. To acknowledge the receipt of one hundred and fifty presents, to thank the donor of each in a way that carries proof of life-long gratitude with it, and to find one hundred and fifty different styles of expressing the same sentiment can not be classed with the easy tasks of earth. Unless she was party to an elopement, no bride ever lived in modern times who did not experience during the last quarter of her honeymoon the difficulties of polite correspondence. Those who were married last June have passed through the trying ordeal, but by those of next June, or next October, a few suggestions of timely character will doubtless be appreciated.

Although at the outset it appears difficult, the job of acknowledging wedding gifts is really one of the simplest known. It does not require even ingenuity or originality, all that is indispensable being a box of note-paper, a pen and a bottle of ink. When the young bride sits down to contemplate her array of presents, her first perplexing thought is what she shall say to the donor of each. Nothing easier! Uncle Peter, for instance, has sent a heavily upholstered chair with a spring rocker. What could be more fitting than this as a reply to Uncle Peter?

My Darling Uncle:—

I can not thank you half enough for your beautiful chair. It was awfully like you, so soft and easy. Every time we sit in it—Charley and I—we think of you. You must come around soon and sit in it yourself.

Your loving niece, Clara.

P.S.—Charley and I had a perfectly lovely trip. It didn't rain a day while we were away.

That, dear girls, is the idea in crude shape. Your feminine tact can doubtless improve the quality of expression. The principle, however, will soon become apparent to you. No matter what the gift is, always effusively invite the giver to come around and try it. "Dear Kate, drop in any time and have a sip from your darling tea-cups." "Dear Aunt Carrie, be sure and stop whenever you are out this way and let us pour you a drink from your charming decanter." "Dear Cousin Tom, your cuckoo clock is a dream; don't forget to set your watch by it whenever you're in our neighborhood." And so forth. No trouble. Sips from tea-cups and vinegar cruets; seats in chairs and divans; catnaps on lounges at all hours and food from forks. If a rich uncle gives you a house tell him to come down and live in it whenever he feels like it. Follow this plan and rest easily. Your temper will keep sweet and no one outside will be offended.

Carrying the idea a step further, it will remain for some enterprising bride-to-be to send out supplementary notes with all her wedding invitations. Well known is it that the gift feature of a modern ceremony is far from being perfect. Duplicates continue to come in, despite the most judicious hints thrown out beforehand by the bride-to-be and her near relatives. Finally, when seven water-bottles and six ice-cream sets arrive in one day, the limit is reached and the pretty-soon-bride realizes it. Still, what can she do? It is too late to remedy the matter, so the duplicates hold the fort.

With what ease, however, could such annoyances be averted by the adoption of the Surprise Party system; the method which incloses with each invitation a request to please furnish cake or to please bring lemonade. Applied to a wedding, this method would work like a charm. Duplicates among the presents would be impossible, and a bride would find her new home well-nigh furnished with gifts, if proper discrimination was observed and enough cards sent out. Uncle Paul, who cornered the market once, should be asked to please furnish a set of bronzes. He can afford them, and the note relieves him of the necessity of thinking. Consideration, of course, should always be observed, and the value of the present asked for should be measured by the pocket-book of the relative to whom the invitation is sent.

If next June's crop of brides, whether they belong to the blushing class or not, will adopt these well-meant suggestions, they will stave off many an attack of Americanitis.

Baseball In France.

Now that baseball has been introduced officially in France the scenes we may expect to mark every game have been described as follows:

The Umpire—I say ze man is out-out-out! Now do you onnerstan?

Alphonse—Sare, you are no zhentleman

Henri—Par-r-don me, but you are of ze canaille!

Alphonse—Oh, did you hear zat, my poor fr-r-riend?

Henri—Alphonse, my brozzaire, he has insulted you

Alphonse—You will hear fr-r-rom me!

Henri—You will hear fr-r-rom us!

The Umpire—Certainly, sares. I will geeve you satisfactione whenever you weesh. Only you must put eet off for a least tree weeks—I haf so many ozzaire duels of ze same sort zat all my time is taken up day an' night. Is it agreed? Tray bong, messieurs.

They all bow extravagantly, and Alphonse and Henri kiss each other on the cheek as they retire to the bench. The game then proceeds.

Katie and Willie are twins, aged five. During a recent visit to their grandparents, who live in the country and keep chickens, the twins were cautioned in their strife to see which could find the most eggs, never to take away the nest eggs. One morning Katie reached a nest first, and, seizing the forbidden egg, started for the house. Willie hurried after her, shouting: "Grandma! Grandma! Katie's got the egg the old hen measures by."

Lincoln knew of an educational advertisement which read: "Smith and Muggs, Classical School for boys and girls. Smith teaches the boys and Muggs the girls."—"Schoolmaster."

Mrs. Query—Isn't she a member of your club?

Mrs. Gadabout—Not any more. We had to get rid of her or she would have disorganized us.

Mrs. Query—You don't say?

Mrs. Gadabout—Yes; at one of our sessions we were discussing the servant girl question, and she said the best way to solve the problem was for all of us to stay at home and do our own work.—Philadelphia Press.

ECZEMA.

That torturing and disfiguring disease has its cause in an impure condition of the blood. The impure condition of the blood often arises from a diseased condition of the stomach and allied organs of digestion and nutrition. When digestion is imperfect, the nutrition of the body is inadequate to its needs. The blood becomes thin, poisons accumulate in it, and these poisons often manifest themselves in some eruptive disease.

Doctor Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures diseases of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. It eliminates poisonous substances from the blood, purifying it and increasing its quantity and richness. The "Discovery" cures perfectly diseases of the blood and other diseases which originate in a diseased condition of the stomach.

The "Discovery" is absolutely a non-alcoholic and non-narcotic medicine. There is nothing "just as good."

"For three years I have suffered with that dreaded disease, eczema," writes Mrs. J. Koepp, of Herman, Oregon. "I was told to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which I did, and after I had taken fourteen bottles I was permanently cured. It has been a year since I stopped taking your medicine and it has never appeared since. I think your medicine a wonderful cure and hope others suffering as I did will take it and be relieved of their suffering."

Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are powerful aids to the cleansing of the clogged system. By all dealers in medicine.

TOBACCO, LIQUOR AND DRUGS

Dr. McTaggart's tobacco remedy removes all desire for the weed in a few weeks. A vegetable medicine, and only requires touching the tongue with it occasionally. Price $2.

Simply marvelous are the results from taking his remedy for the liquor, morphine and other drug habits. Is a safe and inexpensive home treatment; no hypodermic injections; no publicity; no loss of time from business, and a certainty of cure.

Address or consult Dr. McTaggart, 75 Yonge street, Toronto.

Anecdotal.

In an after-dinner speech at the London Savage Club recently on the purity of the English tongue, Winston Churchill remarked: "I have written five books, the same number as Moses—but I will not press the comparison."

Charles II. once granted an audience to the courtly Quaker, William Penn, who, as was his custom, entered the royal presence with his hat on. The humorous sovereign quietly laid aside his own, which occasioned Penn's enquiry: "Friend Charles, why dost thou remove thy hat?" "It is the custom," he replied, "in this place for one person only to remain covered."

Eben Jones, the crabbed millionaire lumberman of Minnesota, hired all his mill-hands himself. One day a Swede applied to the irritable old man, and secured a place on the saws. As he was leaving he said: "Mester Yones, in dees yob you geef me dollar and hallef a day. Besides dat, do you eat me or do I eat myself?" "Oh, eat yourself!" replied the old man. "I have dyspepsia."

Phil May, the noted English cartoonist, went into an oyster saloon in the East End of London one day and ordered a dozen natives, when another man entered and gave a similar order, enquiring anxiously of the proprietor if the oysters were fresh. "Fresh!" echoed the bivalve merchant. "Fresh! Why"—indicating Mr. May with a wave of his hand—"the first oyster that gentleman took up bit his lip!"

An Irishman who was charged with stealing a watch from a fellow-citizen, stoutly denied the impeachment in court, and brought a counter accusation against his accuser for assault and battery committed with a frying-pan. "Why did you allow the prosecutor, who is a smaller man than yourself, to assault you without resistance?" asked the judge; "had you nothing in your hand to defend yourself with?" "Bedad, your honor," said Pat, "I had his watch, but what was that against a frying-pan?"

The "Scotsman" tells of a Dublin man who insisted that a Scotch friend should stay at his house instead of a hotel, and kept him there for a month, playing the host in detail, even to treating him to all places of amusement, paying all the cab fares and the rest. When the visitor was returning to Dunedin, the Irishman saw him down to the steamer, and they went together to have a last cigar. "Now, look here," said the man from Dunedin, "I'll hae nae mair o' this. Here ye've been keepin' me at your house for a month, an' payin' for a' the amusements and cabs and so on—I tell you I'll stan' nae mair o' it! We'll just hae a toss for this one!"

One of the eccentricities of that most penurious of pedagogues, Dr. Barrett, was that he hardly ever appeared outside the walls of Trinity College, conducting his modest menage there with the help of a decrepit old housekeeper, who attended to all his wants, even to daily fetching from a nearby dairy the half-pennyworth of milk needed in the establishment. When one frosty morning, Mary, going on this errand, slipped and broke her leg, the worthy doctor for the first time in years left the college to pay her a visit in the hospital. On reaching her cot, it is related that his sympathetic greeting was: "Hello, Mary; so you broke your leg; I suppose you broke the jug, too, but where is the half-penny?"

Mr. Justice Mathew of England is a man of such mild and kindly exterior, with such gentle voice and manner, that almost invariably he gives the impression of being a simple country gentleman rather than a profound lawyer. This was evidently the idea of a professional seller of painted birds, who some years ago met him in the neighborhood of the law courts, and, exhibiting one of his birds, asked him if he could tell to what species it belonged. The judge stopped, examined the bird with great care, pretended to admire the gaudy plumage, examined it again, and then remarked: "I do not think I have ever seen a bird exactly like this, but, judging from the old proverb that 'Birds of a feather flock together,' I should say it was a jailbird."

Bought Yesterday—Cured Today.—Mrs. O. C. Burt, of 26 Broadway, New York, says: "I am surprised and delighted at the change for the better in my case in one day from the use of Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder. It worked like magic—there's no excuse for a person suffering pain with this remedy within reach. 50 cents.
